Amendments 12 and 13 are also to make the wording more specific.

Amendment 14 details more precisely the matters which may be referred to further arbitration. In this regard we believe that some things cannot be turned back, such as a right of entry—although that is dealt with in the next amendment—but other things that are under construction really cannot be further arbitrated, except, perhaps, as to the amount of the compensation.

● (2150)

Amendment 15, as it states, grants discretion to the arbitration committee as to whether or not to hold a hearing regarding an objection to an immediate right of entry. The committee feels it is necessary to leave this discretion in the arbitration committee because it is possible to visualize a situation where a major construction effort could be held up if the committee did not have this discretionary power.

Amendment 16 directs the arbitration committee to specify to whom the compensation is payable. We feel that if the arbitration committee is going to come down with an order specifying an amount of money to be paid by the company, it should also specify to whom the money should be paid.

I have already dealt with amendment 17.

Amendment 18 specifies the rate at which interest is payable. The amendment really boils down to a definition of the word "prime"—that is, what is defined in the publications of the Bank of Canada from time to time and referred to as the lowest rate of interest quoted by chartered banks to their most creditworthy borrowers for prime business. I am advised that that is a well-understood term by people involved in these matters.

Amendment 19 provides for an appeal from an arbitration committee decision other than an order granting right of entry.

This appeal is to the Trial Division of the Federal Court rather than to the superior court in a province which, in fact, was provided for previously. I do not believe, and the committee agrees, that the granting of a right of entry, and after the right of entry has been exercised by the company, should not be appealable. Of course, the amount of compensation set by an arbitration committee can be appealed.

The other matter of substance contained in this amendment is that the appeal is to the Trial Division of the Federal Court. I am told that means the Federal Court can either take it as an appeal from an arbitration committee or, if it goes to the Trial Division, they can also hear evidence and witnesses and start over again with a new hearing. The committee was advised also, inasmuch as these appeal committees will be federal tribunals, or at least tribunals set up under federal legislation, that it is right that the appeal should be only to the Federal Court. Decisions from the Tax Review Board are exclusively appealable to the Federal Court and, as a matter of fact, under section 18 of the National Energy Board Act, decisions from that body are appealable only to the Federal Court. There are a number of other examples that I could give such as the Immigration Appeal Board, the federal Expropriation Act, and so on. That is why we have changed this from the superior court in the province to the Federal Court.

Amendment 20 stipulates that an order granting a right of entry vests in the company whatever interest is provided for in the order. You have to look pretty closely at this to understand that it means that an order given by an arbitration committee is limited only to the interest that the pipeline company has in the land. The way it was worded before—and a number of senators objected to it—it could have meant that the right could vest as far as fee simple, including the surface, and that was never intended. Now it is limited only to what the order says. If the order says “only for an easement”, then that is the only interest that can be vested in the company.

Amendment 21 adds a provision to require registration of amended or corrected arbitration committee decisions. It also adds a provision to direct the provincial registrars to register documents filed with them. That simply means that when the arbitration committee makes an order, that order is registrable and, indeed, it directs the land titles office or the provincial registrar to register it against the title in the usual way.

Amendment 22, the last amendment, allows a regulation-making power to provide for substituted service of notices required to be served. I think it is fairly common, where notice has to be served and you cannot find the registered owner, that there is a provision for substituted service to be made.

That is the extent of the amendments that the committee is recommending to the Senate. The committee went over these very carefully before it brought them to the Senate. It is my view that there was not only majority agreement but unanimous agreement in the committee for every one of the amendments it is suggesting. I would hope, therefore, that the Senate will find it convenient to accept this report of the committee tonight, and, if so, I shall ask leave to move third reading of Bill S-12 tomorrow.

Senator Grosart: Honourable senators, I regret that I am not in a position to accede to the request made in the final remarks of Senator Olson. For that reason, in the name of Senator Flynn, I move the adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Senator Grosart, for Senator Flynn, debate adjourned.

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION BILL, 1979

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Daniel Riley moved the second reading of Bill C-35, respecting the organization of the Government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto.

He said: Honourable senators, as you all know, this bill entitled “An Act respecting the organization of the Government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto” provides for a number of improvements in the organization of the Government of Canada.

Part I provides for the establishment of a separate Department of Fisheries and Oceans. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans is to have responsibility for sea coast and inland fisheries; fishing and recreational harbours; hydrography and marine sciences; and the co-ordination of the policies and programs of the Government of Canada respecting oceans. These responsibilities provide for a comprehensive approach to fisheries and oceanic issues, recognizing the need for a sound scientific base both for the development of modern fisheries and to underpin our other oceanic responsibilities. It will also establish a focal point to co-ordinate our marine policies and programs which are taking on increasing importance.

• (2200)

According to the latest figures, Canada is now recognized as the number one fish exporting country, with annual exports totalling over $1 billion. The increase in landed values last year, 1978, on the Atlantic coast amounted to 13 per cent, representing a value of $374 million. This provided an overall increase in value of 42 per cent. It can be seen that the department, which will be known as the Department of Fisheries and Oceans if this bill passes, is assuming heavier responsibilities each year.

I don't have all the figures for the west coast fisheries, but I should like to point out that in 1978 the herring roe fishery, which has been developed over the last 10 years, produced a landed catch of 7,300 tons valued at $135 million. This really added a great deal to the income of the fisheries on the west coast, and that catch may be increased this year.

Part II of the bill provides for the amendment or repeal of certain sections of the Fisheries Research Board Act to allow that board to be replaced by a new Fisheries and Oceans Research Advisory Council. The function of the council will be to advise the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, if this bill passes, on all matters the minister may refer to it relating to: fisheries research and the marine sciences, including technological developments in those fields; the scope and adequacy of the science policies and programs of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, having regard to the duties and functions of that department and the science policies and international obligations of the Government of Canada; and the co-ordination of research and development programs in the fields of fisheries research and marine sciences.

The intent of Part III is to clarify and update the mandate of the Department of the Environment, which remains following the separation of Fisheries, and to underline that its first responsibility is the preservation and enhancement of environmental quality. The bill strengthens the ability of the Minister of the Environment to ensure that other federal departments and agencies that have environmental protection powers as a necessary part of their specific responsibilities use those powers in a way that is consistent and meets certain basic environmental standards.

Part III also empowers the minister to enter into agreements with the provinces for the administration of environmental programs. This underlines the intention of the government to minimize federal-provincial duplication and to rely to the maximum extent possible on the provinces for the administration of environmental programs. This concept, together with the strengthened responsibility for co-ordinating and setting standards for the environmental activities of other federal departments and agencies, is fundamental to the new mandate of the Department of the Environment.

Part IV of this bill is a technical amendment which allows the staff of Canadian Patents and Developments Limited to continue to receive coverage under the Public Service Superannuation Act and the Flying Accident Compensation Regulations made pursuant to the Aeronautics Act.

The purpose of Part V is to transfer the responsibilities of the Representation Commissioner to the Chief Electoral Officer. Many of these significant responsibilities once accruing to the Representation Commissioner have now been carried out, and the major remaining duties of the office arise only in approximately two years in every 10 when electoral boundaries are readjusted. It thus seems timely and appropriate to rationalize the responsibilities of the two independent offices responsible for matters so crucial to democratic elections in Canada.

Parts VI to IX of the bill also contain essentially technical amendments to the constitutive acts of the Medical Research Council, National Research Council, Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council and the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council. The amendments remove the requirement in each of these acts that all staff appointments carry the specific approval of the minister. This will bring the role of the minister with respect to these councils into line with that played by the minister with respect to such organizations as the Canada Council, the Economic Council, the Science Council and the vast majority of other organizations that operate as separate employers.

Part X amends the Parliamentary Secretaries Act to correct the current wording in that act which ties the maximum number of parliamentary secretaries who may hold office to the number of ministers holding office at any given time. This has meant that if the maximum number of parliamentary secretaries are holding office when a minister resigns, one of those parliamentary secretaries must resign.

[Senator Riley.]

The amendment would provide that the maximum number of parliamentary secretaries is set at the time of appointment and so would not be affected by a subsequent resignation of a minister. This involves no increase in the maximum number of parliamentary secretaries who may be appointed.

Finally, Part XI of the bill contains a number of technical and general amendments consequential on the division of the Department of Fisheries and the Environment.

These, in summary, are the basic principles and intent underlying each of the parts of this bill. These measures sharpen the tools we have to provide better government for all Canadians. I would hope that honourable senators would agree that the bill should proceed without delay.

Senator Grosart: Honourable senators, it is my intention to move the adjournment of the debate on behalf of the Honourable Senator Marshall.

Senator Marshall: I am here.

Senator Grosart: I am sorry. Then, perhaps before I withdraw that statement, I would direct one question to the sponsor of the bill. In view of the fact that this extraordinary omnibus bill amends many acts—it covers practically the full range of government activity from patents to the Medical Research Board, the Representation Act and so on—is it the intention of the sponsor to move that this bill be referred to a committee or to a number of committees of the Senate?

Senator Riley: Honourable senators, naturally I would hope that the bill would not be sent to any committee, but I can understand that some honourable senators opposite may want it referred to a committee. I suggest that if it is referred to a committee, we follow the procedure followed in the other place and refer it to one committee. In the other place the whole of the bill was referred to the Fisheries and Forestry Committee with the approval of the whole house.

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, if I may make a suggestion, owing to the many facets of this piece of legislation, the proper committee, to my mind, would be a Committee of the Whole with the minister in attendance.

Senator Grosart: I find myself in full agreement with that. I agree that it should not go to any single committee. It is not likely that any one committee would have the competence to deal with the range of subjects covered by the bill.

• (2210)

Senator Williams: Honourable senators, in view of the fact that this bill involves both east coast and west coast fisheries, with the impact on one coast being different from that on the other, I do not think it is something that should be rushed through. I am already receiving reports of problems on the west coast due to the bunglings of certain officials. To my mind, the bill requires in-depth study.

On motion of Senator Marshall, debate adjourned.

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT
CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat moved the second reading of Bill C-29, to amend the National Housing Act and the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act and to make other related amendments.

He said: Honourable senators, I appreciate being granted leave to proceed with second reading at this time. I think this is a very important bill and one which should be proceeded with as quickly as possible, subject, of course, to proper discussion in the Senate.

I am pleased to have this opportunity of speaking on Bill C-29 and to explain how it will provide Canadians with better access to good housing at prices they can afford.

Early last year the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, the Honourable André Ouellet, announced some new directions in housing policy that would be beneficial in a variety of ways. Among the most important of these benefits were greater assistance to the shelter needs of people on very limited incomes, greater and more effective use of private capital in the financing of housing programs, and more streamlined administrative approaches. The bill now before us, in its most important aspects, gives effect to these new directions.

While Canadians, generally speaking, are very well housed—we are, in fact, among the most advantaged of all nations in this regard—there are, as we are all aware, many Canadians who face serious housing problems. For the most part, these are low-income people—people who simply cannot afford to rent, let alone buy, adequate accommodation. These include the elderly, women raising families alone, the sick, the physically or mentally handicapped—in short, people who must depend upon help from the government in meeting their housing needs.

Up to now, federal programs undertaken jointly with the provinces have resulted in about 19,000 housing units for low-income people each year. This is not enough to meet existing needs, and the government has now set a target of 30,000 units of such housing a year—an increase of almost 60 per cent.

The bill now before us will, if passed, authorize the implementation of a new non-profit housing program designed to increase the supply of housing for low-income people and to overcome many of the disadvantages of the traditional federal-provincial public housing programs.

We are going to do a major portion of this by operating through non-profit corporations—public corporations established by provincial or municipal governments or private corporations set up by churches, service clubs and similar organizations.

Non-profit corporations which propose to build or acquire modest-cost rental housing will obtain their financing from approved private lenders. To make sure that mortgage loans are readily available, CMHC will provide NHA insurance covering 100 per cent of the value of the properties. This insurance will apply to existing housing that is to be bought and improved as well as to new housing.

Housing brought on to the market under this program will be available to everyone at market rent. Those whose income is not sufficient to allow them to afford the market rent will pay according to their income. Federal subsidies will be available to bridge the gap between full recovery and affordable rents. Program delivery will be simplified and red tape reduced.

For a number of years, the system of NHA insurance for private mortgage loans has been a most important stimulant to investment in housing. By protecting approved lenders from loss, NHA insurance, in addition to contributing to the construction of a very substantial volume of housing in the moderate price range, has persuaded lenders to provide high-ratio mortgages to people who, because of the high down payment that would be necessary, might otherwise not be able to own their own home.

The amendments now before us include important extensions to the system of NHA insurance. Under this bill, NHA insurance covering 100 per cent of project value will be provided on loans made for the purchase of existing rental properties for low-income housing by non-profit groups. In addition, NHA insurance will provide for the privately-financed rehabilitation of older structures for resale by builders, and will also be available for loans on non-residential structures that are converted to provide living accommodation.

These amendments support and extend the federal policy of making the greatest possible use of private funds for housing production, while conserving public money for the kind of assistance that can only be provided by government.

For the past few years two federal housing programs, the Assisted Home Ownership Program, or AHOP, and the Assisted Rental Program, or ARP, have not only been popular but have contributed to an important degree in relieving the housing shortage, in moderating prices, and in helping Canadians obtain affordable accommodation for purchase or rent.

• (2220)

Both of these programs went through a few necessary alterations as market conditions changed, and they were then discontinued last year because it was considered that they had achieved their basic objectives. There is, however, still a need for the type of assistance that both AHOP and ARP provided, and the natural evolutions of these two programs is a new program, the graduated payment mortgage, known as the GPM.

The GPM allows borrowers to make reduced monthly mortgage payments during the first years of occupancy. Payments gradually increase for about 10 years, and then level off for the rest of the repayment period.

We do not claim that the GPM is the answer to everyone's housing problems, but when it is used with judgment and discretion it can be extremely helpful to many people—for example, to young couples who have reason to expect that their financial resources will gradually improve year by year, but who need initial help in buying a home.

The bill we are studying would encourage lenders to use the GPM by providing a "quick settlement" provision for mortgage loans up to a moderate limit. This would vary from region to region in accordance with local market conditions; but in the event of default, CMHC would make an immediate settlement with the lender, which would relieve the lender of the time and expense of the traditional foreclosure proceedings. So it encourages them to make the loans.

When the bill was discussed in the other place, members of the opposition were concerned that the proposed 5 per cent down payment for GPMs might, in fact, encourage some people to buy a home before they were quite ready financially to do so. The minister responsible for housing has therefore undertaken, at the request of members in the other place, to require a 10 per cent down payment for GPMs.

An important feature of the introduction of mortgage insurance and the quick settlement provision for GPMs is that it extends the government's policy of encouraging private investment in housing rather than the use of public funds, which can be put to better use in assisting non-profit involvement in public housing.

The bill further provides for a community services program which will consolidate federal assistance given to municipalities for a variety of purposes. Among these purposes have been facilities for the treatment of water and sewage, neighbourhood improvement, and for the construction of moderately priced medium-density housing.

The new program reflects the principles of global funding that were accepted by the provincial ministers at a meeting with federal officials in Edmonton in February.

The arrangements ensure that federal funds will be used, as it is intended, for community services, but they will be applied in accordance with provincial and municipal priorities. There will be no need—as there has been under other programs—for project-by-project approval by federal officials. This means that the program can be delivered more efficiently and effectively and at less cost to the Canadian taxpayer.

Through the community services program, assistance in the form of outright federal contributions will continue to be available for all activities previously eligible for such help, and for an expanded list of social, cultural and recreational services. These services could include, for example, community and recreation centres, parks, skating rinks, day care centres, and libraries—all programs where federal funds were not previously available.

The federal contributions could be used to improve municipal buildings, as the municipal equity in the new non-profit housing program, for plants to convert municipal waste into energy—for any agreed-upon municipal capital works. At the discretion of the province they could indeed be used for the servicing of municipal debt.

[Senator Molgat.]

As honourable senators will appreciate, one very noteworthy feature of the proposed legislation is that in two important areas—social housing and community services—federal support is increased while much of the overlapping of jurisdiction and duplication of efforts with the provinces has been eliminated. That is one of the primary objectives of this bill, namely, to disentangle federal and provincial activities that restricted the effectiveness and increased the cost of some necessary and beneficial programs.

There is one final point that I would like to make. At the request of members of the opposition in the other place, the minister responsible for housing agreed to an amendment to the bill which would help other levels of government in assembling and servicing of land for housing and related purposes. The bill now allows CMHC to insure loans made to provincial or municipal governments or public housing agencies by approved lenders for the purpose of acquiring or servicing land for housing or for purposes incidental to the provision of housing.

I believe, honourable senators, that I have covered the main elements of this legislation, which is designed to give effect to important new policy directions affecting both housing and the quality of urban life in Canada. I sincerely hope that these provisions can be approved here without delay and put into law.

I notice that Senator Grosart asked the sponsor of the previous bill as to its disposition. I am in the hands of the Senate in this regard, but, if I may, I would suggest that we consider a procedure which has been followed previously in this same area, and I believe with the same minister, and invite the minister to appear before us in Committee of the Whole to provide further information and clarification.

I believe this to be a very important bill. It concerns an area where a great deal has been done in the past but obviously where there are still some very important requirements, particularly respecting citizens of this country who have low incomes. I commend the bill to honourable senators.

Senator Grosart: Honourable senators, I direct one question to the honourable sponsor of the bill. In view of the recommendation of the Governor General, which indicates that this could cost money, will he give us the total estimated appropriation of public revenues that would be necessary to implement the bill.

Senator Molgat: In reply to the honourable senator, I regret that I do not have that information at hand, but I will be pleased to try to obtain it for him. Obviously the minister, if we ask him to appear before a Committee of the Whole, would have that information. In the meantime, I will try to obtain it.

Senator Grosart: May I suggest it is extraordinary, in view of the Governor General's recommendation, that we are asked to proceed on second reading without being told what it is likely to cost. This is surely the stage at which the Senate should be informed. However, if it is the intention to introduce the bill in this manner, I have no further comment to make, except to say that I see no objection to its being referred at this stage to a Committee of the Whole.

On motion of Senator Marshall, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

APPENDIX

(See page 744)

INCOME TAX

REPORT OF BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE ON SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-37

THURSDAY, March 8, 1979

On January 29, 1979, Bill C-37, intituled "An Act to amend the statute law relating to income tax, to amend the Canada Pension Plan and to provide other authority for the raising of funds" received first reading in the House of Commons. This Bill is intended to implement the Ways and Means Motion which was tabled by the Minister of Finance on January 25, 1979. A Ways and Means Motion was tabled by the Minister of Finance with his budget on November 16, 1978, substantially to the same effect and which was expanded by a further Ways and Means Motion tabled on December 19, 1978.

By resolution of the Senate on January 30, 1979, the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce was authorized to examine and consider the subject-matter of the Bill in advance of the Bill coming before the Senate or any matter relating thereto.

In accordance with the Order of Reference, your Committee has given careful consideration to the said Bill C-37 arising from the said Ways and Means Motion and in connection with such consideration has engaged the services of Mr. Charles Albert Poissant of Thorne Riddell & Co., Chartered Accountants, and retained as its counsel, Mr. Thomas S. Gillespie of Ogilvy, Montgomery, Renault, Clarke, Kirkpatrick, Hannon & Howard.

The Committee has heard Dr. E. P. Neufeld, Assistant Deputy Minister, Tax Policy and Federal-Provincial Relations Branch, Mr. R. Alan Short, Director, Tax Policy Legislation, Mr. John Haag, Special Adviser, Tax Policy, Mr. H. David McGurran, Officer, and Mr. A. Mitchell, Officer, Tax Policy—Legislation, all of the Department of Finance, and Mr. R. M. King, Director, Current Amendments Division of the Department of National Revenue. In addition, the Committee has also heard submissions from the Life Underwriters Association of Canada, The Canadian Medical Association, The Canadian Dental Association, the Mining Association of Canada and The Trust Companies Association of Canada. The Committee has also received written submissions from other organizations and corporations.

Bill C-37 contains amendments to the Income Tax Act and the Income Tax Application Rules, 1971, some of which amendments provide additional benefits to Canadian taxpayers and others are designed to put an end to perceived abuses. The Bill also contains amendments to the Canada Pension Plan and provides borrowing authority for public works and general purposes in the amount of $10 billion in relation to the fiscal year 1979-1980 which may be borrowed and repaid in a currency other than that of Canada.

Your Committee commends the fact that for the first time the Minister has tabled a detailed Ways and Means Motion prior to tabling the Bill, thereby enabling taxpayers to examine and comment on the proposed legislation.

The draft regulations published by the Minister have enabled taxpayers to have a more detailed comprehension of the proposed legislation and have assisted your Committee in formulating its recommendation respecting the small business deduction and the investment tax credit. The Committee has come to the conclusion that the proposed regulations dealing with the small business deduction should be contained in the Bill. This is discussed more fully later in this report.

Your Committee would like to make the following comments with respect to the Bill:

EMPLOYMENT EXPENSE DEDUCTION

Taxpayers are allowed to deduct an amount equal to the lesser of $250 and 3% of the aggregate of their income from offices and employments.

Your Committee welcomes the proposal (clause 1) to increase the limit to $500. It is anticipated over 6,200,000 taxpayers will benefit from the change. Of these some 2,800,000 will receive the maximum proposed deduction of $500.

INVENTORY ADJUSTMENT

The new paragraphs 12(1)(r) and 20(1)(ii) proposed by clause 3 and subclause 7(2) of the Bill are in response to the recent decision of Quebec North Shore Paper Company v. The Queen 78 DTC 6426. This decision allowed the taxpayer a one-time but permanent deferral of income equal to the depreciation content in the closing inventory by (i) adding back the depreciation content in the opening inventory, (ii) adding back the depreciation charged in the year, and (iii) deducting the depreciation content in the closing inventory. For taxpayers using this method, the deferral arose from not adding back the depreciation content in the opening inventory in the transitional year.

The Bill proposes to offset this adjustment by deeming that the depreciation content in inventory to be included in income for the year. A corresponding amount may be deducted in the following year. To the extent that the depreciation content of inventory raises its cost above fair market value, this adjustment would appear to be reduced. A similar adjustment is proposed in respect of any amount representing a reserve for obsolescence or depletion expense which is included in the cost of inventory.

NATURAL RESOURCES

The Bill contains several measures to stimulate investment in exploration and development and new mining ventures in Canada.

CANADIAN EXPLORATION EXPENSES

Subclause 20(1) of the Bill proposes to extend until December 31, 1981 the opportunity available to individuals and non-resource corporations to immediately deduct the full amount of Canadian exploration expenses incurred. The full deduction was only available for Canadian exploration expenses incurred May 25, 1976 and before July, 1979. Thereafter, the maximum amount deductible would have been 30% of the taxpayer's cumulative Canadian exploration expenses.

NEW MINES

The Bill proposes (subclause 20(7)) an amendment to include in the definition of "Canadian exploration expense" expenses incurred by a taxpayer after November 16, 1978 for the development of new mines. This amendment will mean that the cost of new mines prior to commencement of production, including clearing, removing overburden and stripping, sinking a mine shaft and constructing an adit or other underground entry, will be deductible at a rate of 100% rather than the previous maximum rate of 30%.

RECOMPLETION EXPENSES

The Bill (subclause 21(3)) proposes to extend the definition of "Canadian exploration expense" to include expenses relating to the recompletion of oil or gas wells in Canada incurred after November 16, 1978. As such, taxpayers will be entitled to deduct up to 30% of recompletion expenses incurred in any given year and such expenses will be eligible to earn depletion. Recompletion involves work necessary to maintain or extend the life of a producing well.

SMALL BUSINESS DEDUCTION

Certain Canadian controlled private corporations are allowed a favourable federal tax rate of 15% on the first $150,000 of income earned from "active business" carried on in Canada. This federal rate is reduced to 10% for small manufacturing firms. These federal rates compare with the 36% federal tax rate (30% for manufacturing) which applies to other corporations. The low federal rate applies as long as the qualifying corporation's retained business income is less than $750,000. Once this limit is reached, the corporation can continue to qualify for the low rate by paying dividends to shareholders.

The Act does not define what constitutes "active business" income but the courts have interpreted this phrase liberally.

Amendments are proposed by the Bill (clause 38) which are intended to give a more precise and limited definition of what constitutes "active business", therefore permitting the determination of who may benefit from the low tax rate on small business. The Supplementary Information accompanying the Notice of Ways and Means Motion tabled on November 16, 1978 indicates that amendments are also designed to ensure that this tax incentive will serve its original purpose of promoting expansion of small business and not be used as a tax shelter for employment, professional and investment income. Draft regulations have been issued to supplement the measures contained in the Bill.

Corporations in existence on November 16, 1978 will be subject to the new rules for years commencing after 1979; corporations formed after November 16, 1978 will be subject to the new rules for taxation years commencing after 1978. This will assist corporations in existence on November 16, 1978 to arrange their affairs accordingly if they will no longer qualify for the small business deduction under the new rules.

Subclause 38(3) of the Bill defines "active business" to mean

"the business of manufacturing or processing property for sale or lease, mining, operating an oil or gas well, prospecting, exploring or drilling for natural resources, construction, logging, farming, fishing, leasing property other than real property, selling property as a principal, transportation or any other qualifying business carried on by the corporation".

Other "qualifying business" is defined in the regulations to mean any business other than a non-qualifying business. The draft regulations define "non-qualifying business" as:

"(i) the professional practice of an accountant, dentist, lawyer or medical doctor that is not permitted under the law of one or more provinces to be carried on by a corporation,

(ii) a business of providing services if more than 66⅔% of the gross revenue for the year of that business derived from services

(A) is derived from services provided to, or performed for or on behalf of one entity, and

(B) can reasonably be attributed to services performed by persons who are specified shareholders of the corporation or persons related thereto unless the corporation employs in the business throughout the year more than five full-time employees who are not specified shareholders of the corporation or persons related thereto.

(iii) a business the principal purpose of which is to derive income from property including real property, shares, bonds, debentures, bills, notes, mortgages, hypothecs or similar obligations, unless the corporation employs in the business throughout the year more than five full-time employees who are not specified shareholders of the corporation or persons related thereto, and

(iv) a business the principal purpose of which is to provide managerial, administrative, financial, maintenance or other similar services to a business connected at any time in the year with the corporation."

With respect to the draft regulations:

(1) First and foremost, the Committee strongly objects to definition of "qualifying business" and "non-qualifying business" being included in the regulations. While the inclusion of such definitions in the regulations has the advantage of providing a more flexible definition of what constitutes active business, it confers upon the government the power to tax in an arbitrary (and clearly indirect) manner. It is a fundamental principle that the power to tax should be reserved to Parliament alone. Your Committee feels that the definition of what constitutes an active business should be confined to the Act.

(2) Paragraph (i) of the definition of "non-qualifying business" relating to accountants, dentists, lawyers and medical doctors is arbitrary and discriminatory. For example, this paragraph would allow a lower federal corporate income tax rate to an optometrist but not to an ophthalmologist because the ophthalmologist happens to be a medical doctor and it would allow the lower rate to a chiropractor but not to a family physician for the same reason. The Committee does not see the logic in such a distinction.

Professionals earning business income (as opposed to employment income) earn income from an active business. The Income Tax Act has always treated employees differently from those who carry on their own business, recognizing that there are basic legal and economic differences between the two groups. The employed have the security of employment and the fringe benefits attaching thereto and do not undertake the kinds of financial risks and commitments made by a person carrying on a business.

Your Committee feels that those professionals who are permitted to incorporate under the laws of their respective provinces should be entitled, where applicable, to the small business deduction. Your Committee recognizes that this will give them an advantage over their colleagues who practice in the other provinces, but it will remove the disadvantage they have compared to taxpayers engaged in other forms of active business. Paragraph (i) of the definition of "non-qualifying business" discriminates not only against the four professions named; it discriminates against the members of those professions who are entitled to incorporate. It may be said that to allow all members of these professions the right to the small business deduction is discriminatory against those who are not entitled to incorporate. However, the power to entitle a given profession to incorporate lies with the provinces and not with the federal government. To allow all professions the small business deduction is to render the provinces accountable to the charge of discrimination, not the federal government.

(3) Your Committee anticipates that the definition of a non-qualifying business is too broad and may cause unnecessary hardship in many instances. For example, the inability to consider a specified shareholder or related persons as full-time employees will be inequitable in the case of closely held family run corporations. There may be situations where a corporation has more than five full-time employees, but because some of them are children of the principal shareholder, the corporation would not be permitted the small business deduction.

The Committee feels that corporations with a sufficient amount of capital invested or at risk in tangible assets which generate business income should be entitled to the small business deduction.

(4) The Canadian Medical Association has argued that corporations providing managerial, administrative, financial, maintenance or other similar services are desirable for the current practice of medicine, particularly in instances where a doctor's spouse is employed. If she were not employed by a corporation, her income would be attributable to her husband and taxed in his hands. Furthermore, they have argued that the pooling of resources of a number of doctors in a corporation would be advantageous in obtaining credit, thereby enabling them to enter into long-term leases, construct clinical facilities and to acquire computers and other equipment.

The Canadian Dental Association has argued that corporations have the further advantage of limiting liability. They indicated this is desirable as some dentists have gone into bankruptcy trying to finance expensive machinery.

In response to the foregoing arguments, your Committee notes there is nothing in the draft regulations to prevent corporations formed to acquire expensive equipment and to provide clinical services, such as a radiology laboratory or a blood test clinic, from enjoying the small business deduction.

Furthermore, there is nothing in the regulations to prevent the formation of corporations to provide managerial, administrative, financial, maintenance or other services. The effect of excluding such corporations from the small business deduction would be to impose a heavier tax burden on them than on a doctor or dentist providing such services. However, such corporations can be established to provide the necessary protection and advantages requested by The Canadian Medical Association and The Canadian Dental Association and it can be assumed that such corporations can arrange their affairs to avoid any unnecessary tax burden by incurring no profits.

The Committee concludes that the provisions of the Bill and the draft regulations respecting the small business deduction are unsatisfactory. They are discriminatory and require further consideration and dialogue with those affected before being implemented. The Committee is not satisfied with the proposal as presented in the Bill and recommends that clause 38 of the Bill be deleted.

INVESTMENT TAX CREDIT

The acquisition of qualified property gives rise to a tax credit which is deductible in full against the first $15,000 of federal tax payable and to the extent of one-half of any tax in excess of $15,000. Any unused tax credit may be carried forward for a period of 5 years. The credit applies for assets acquired for use in manufacturing or processing businesses; in the petroleum, industrial mineral and mineral industries and in logging, farming, fishing and grain storage. Both current and capital expenditures on scientific research and development qualify for the credit.

The Bill (clause 40) will increase the credit, maintaining the regional variation. The basic rate of credit is being raised from 5 to 7%, applicable to qualified property being used in southern Ontario, southwestern Quebec and most of Alberta and British Columbia. The rate of credit will be increased from 7½% to 10% for qualified property being used in Saskatchewan, Manitoba, northern Ontario and the rest of Quebec, other than the Gaspé region. Investments in the northern parts of Alberta and British Columbia, and the Yukon and Northwest Territories will also qualify for the credit at this rate. A rate of credit will be increased from 10 to 20% for qualified property used in the Atlantic Provinces and the Gaspé region of Quebec.

The credit presently applies to investments made before July 1, 1980. It is proposed to extend the credit indefinitely.

The credit will be increased for eligible current and capital scientific expenditures:

- (1) to 25% for Canadian controlled private corporations which qualify for the small business deduction; and
- (2) to 20% for research carried on in the Atlantic Provinces and the Gaspé region of Quebec; and
- (3) to 10% for research carried on elsewhere in Canada.

A credit of 7% will be extended to transportation equipment to be used principally for the purpose of transporting passengers and property in Canada. To qualify for the credit, the transportation equipment must not have been used for any purpose whatever before it is acquired by a taxpayer. The draft regulations released by the Minister of Finance indicate that the credit will be extended to the following:

“(a) a property included in paragraph (g), (h) or (i) of class 9 of Schedule B;

(b) a vessel, including the furniture, fittings and equipment attached thereto or property included in paragraphs (c), (d), (e) or (f) of class 7 in Schedule B;

(c) a bus designed to carry 35 or more passengers, and used principally

(i) for regularly scheduled trips covering a distance in excess of 25 miles, or

(ii) between locations that are more than 25 miles apart but does not include any bus used principally for urban transportation;

(d) a truck, tractor, trailer or semi-trailer acquired principally for use on highways and designed for the carriage of freight, having a gross vehicle weight rating (which means the value specified by the vehicle manufacturer as the loaded weight of a single vehicle) of 44,000 pounds or more, and used regularly for the carriage of freight for distances in excess of 25 miles from the urban centre or other location, in which a place of business of the user is situated;

(e) a container specifically designed to facilitate the transport of property by one or more modes of transport and designed to be secured and readily handled and having corner fittings (which means an arrangement of apertures and faces at the top or bottom of the container for the purposes of handling, stacking or securing); and

(f) railway rolling stock including machinery and equipment used primarily to service the rolling stock, property described in paragraphs (h) or (i) of class 1, or subparagraph (i), (ii) and (iii) of paragraph (b) of Class 10 of Schedule B and a bridge, culvert, subway, trestle or tunnel that is ancillary to railway track and grading.”

Your Committee feels the credit should be extended to used aircraft. Many airlines, particularly the smaller ones, are buying used aircraft from outside the country as they are not available in Canada. To extend the credit to new aircraft only would put them in a disadvantageous position compared to larger airlines which can afford to buy new equipment.

Furthermore, Nordair has argued in a brief dated February 19, 1979 that aircraft and aircraft engines are unique for several reasons:

Aircraft and engines whether purchased new or used are maintained according to federally regulated standards to “time zero”, by defined periodic maintenance procedures, in the case of airframes culminating in major “D” checks which effectively return the aircraft to a zero time basis. As such the predominant factor considered by an aircraft owner or prospective owner is not whether an aircraft is new or used but rather where the aircraft and engines are in the maintenance cycle at any given time.

Because of the differing characteristics of different types of aircraft, it is in some cases impossible to purchase an aircraft new to fit a particular requirement depending upon passenger capacity, cargo capacity, speed, operating characteristics in various geographic areas, etc. For example, Nordair's L-188 Electra aircraft are specially configured and utilized for the ice reconnaissance flying on behalf of the Canadian Department of the Environment. At the time the aircraft was chosen it was the most suitable for the type of flying involved, however the aircraft was out of production and could not be purchased new. Furthermore, because of the lead time required to purchase new production aircraft, it is in many cases more expedient to purchase a used aircraft which is available to satisfy an immediate need. For example, the present production scheduling for a 737 from The Boeing Company would require approximately 1½ years from the date of signing a contract to the delivery date.

There is an integral direct relationship between the new and used aircraft markets. The market for each is based on the availability and demand for a particular type of aircraft at a particular time. Any decrease in demand in the used aircraft market will manifest itself in decreased production of new aircraft, and any increase in demand for used aircraft will increase the demand for new production aircraft. It is difficult to isolate the two markets because the product of each is to a large extent an adequate substitute for the other.

By extending the tax credit to include transportation equipment, it is the Minister's intention to increase employment in the equipment manufacturing sector and to provide a stimulus for transportation companies to upgrade their assets to improve transportation services. Your Committee recognizes that except in the case of very specialized aircraft types, the manufacturers of aircraft are all foreign based. Unquestionably a tax credit will assist the improvement of transportation services. The purchase of used aircraft by a carrier will in no way violate this objective and will have similar results as to the purchase of new aircraft.

The officials of the Department of Finance have explained the difficulties and complexities involved in extending the credit to used property. In order to meet the difficulties and avoid the complexities envisaged by the officials of the Department of Finance, it is suggested that the tax credit be extended to used aircraft which have theretofore never been registered in Canada and that did not receive the tax credit previously. This limitation would ensure that the credit could never be taken on the same aircraft more than one time.

ANNUITIES

LIFE ANNUITIES

Normally life annuity contracts provide for monthly annuity payments starting when the purchaser reaches a certain age and continuing until his death or the death of a named beneficiary. The Income Tax Act provides that the interest portion of each payment is to be taxed and the balance representing return of capital is not. If, however, the annuitant dies and the lump sum payment is made to his beneficiaries, the whole amount is treated as a return of capital.

Some annuity contracts have been structured to make sure that the interest portion passes free of tax after death. This is achieved by arranging for annuity payments to commence well beyond the normal life expectancy of the purchaser. At death, funds accumulated under the contract would be distributed tax-free. Clause 50 proposes that after 1979 the accumulated interest income realized on any lump sum or other payment under a life annuity be included in the taxpayer's income.

The Life Underwriters Association have argued that the proposal contained in clause 50 of the Bill to tax lump sum dispositions arising on termination of a life annuity contract should not apply to life annuity contracts issued prior to November 16, 1978. They argue that taxpayers who purchased deferred annuity contracts prior to November 16, 1978 did so in good faith in the light of the law as it stood at that time. To impose a new law retroactively to January 1, 1978 is arbitrary and unwarranted.

Reference has been made above to instances where life annuity contracts were issued with maturity dates well past the normal life expectancy of the annuitant. The Committee has no quarrel with this form of retroactivity being introduced in the Act against people who consciously attempt to avoid tax in this manner. However, your Committee feels that this form of retroactivity should not apply to the bona fide life annuity contracts with realistic maturity dates. Your Committee therefore recommends that the Bill be amended to tax only those lump sum dispositions arising on termination of a life annuity contract with a maturity date in excess of the life expectancy of the annuitant as established by actuarial tables.

INTEREST ON BORROWED FUNDS

Taxpayers are entitled to deduct interest on borrowed money used for the purpose of earning income from business or property. Thus, taxpayers could deduct interest on money borrowed to purchase annuities.

Subclause 7(3) provides that for 1978 and subsequent taxation years, taxpayers will only be entitled to deduct interest paid on money borrowed before 1978 to purchase an annuity before 1978 provided (i) the money was not borrowed from the issuer of the contract and (ii) the annuity payments under the contract commenced not later than the date on which the annuitant becomes 75 years of age.

The Life Underwriters Association of Canada has recommended that interest be a deductible expense at all times, provided the same tests are met. They argue that because life annuities will be taxable on the death of the policy owner to the extent of any gain in the policy, life annuities should be treated in the same manner as any other investment. The Bill proposes (subclause 7(3)) that taxpayers be entitled to deduct interest paid on money borrowed before 1978 to purchase an annuity contract before 1978 provided that the money was not borrowed from the issuer of the contract and annuity payments under the contract commence not later than the date on which the annuitant becomes 75 years of age.

The officials of the Department of Finance have argued that interest should no longer be deductible to purchase annuity contracts because this would afford taxpayers undue deferral of tax. That is to say, taxpayers would get a current deduction with respect to interest paid and the accumulated earnings would be taken into income at a later date. Such a deferral is available with respect to registered retirement savings plans ("RRSP's"), but the officials argue that the same treatment should not apply to annuities because, unlike RRSP's, there are no limitations on amounts which may be contributed to annuities.

Your Committee is in agreement with the principle that taxpayers should be entitled to deduct interest on money borrowed to acquire income producing assets. Life annuities, like RRSP's, assist taxpayers to provide for their retirement. Your Committee feels that a deferment of tax is justifiable in the circumstances and therefore endorses the recommendation that interest paid on money borrowed from a source other than the issuer of the annuity be a deductible expense at all times, provided that annuity payments commence not later than the date on which the annuitant becomes 75 years of age.

ADJUSTED COST BASES OF LIFE INSURANCE POLICIES

Interest paid on policy loans increase the adjusted cost basis of a policyholder's interest in a policy (paragraph 148(9)(a) and subsection 148(9)(e.1) of the Act). Bill C-56 amended the Act to exclude from the adjusted cost basis of a life insurance policy interest paid before 1978 on a policy loan. In its report tabled June 27, 1978, your Committee noted as follows:

Bill C-56 proposes (Clause 36) that in computing the adjusted cost basis of a life insurance policy after March 31, 1978, the premium paid on the policy exclude any interest paid before 1978 on a policy loan. Officers of the Department have indicated that justification for such a proposal is that many insurance companies have indicated they do not have complete records as to prior interest payments.

Your Committee notes that the adjusted cost basis of an interest in a life insurance policy will be increased in some instances by the amount by which the cash surrender value of the policy at its first anniversary date after March 31, 1977 exceeds the adjusted cost basis of the policy as otherwise determined. Therefore the effect of excluding interest paid before 1978 on a policy loan from the adjusted cost basis may not be severe in many instances.

Notwithstanding this mitigating consideration, your Committee feels many insurers or policyholders have records of payments of interest on policy loans and if such records are available, policyholders should be allowed to use them to establish their adjusted cost basis. It is recommended Clause 36 be deleted.

It is noted that this recommendation has not been followed. No satisfactory answer has been given to your Committee why policyholders should be discriminated against if they or their insurers have records available to establish the actual amount of pre-1978 policy loan interest paid. The Committee reiterates its recommendation that such policyholders should be entitled to include interest paid on policy loans prior to 1978 in the adjusted cost basis of their policy.

REGISTERED RETIREMENT SAVINGS PLANS

COMMUTATION OF BENEFITS AT DEATH

The Income Tax Act was amended, effective June 30, 1978, to the effect that except where the spouse is the beneficiary, benefits pursuant to an RRSP are commutable at death and the annuitant is deemed to have received the value thereof immediately before death. As a result, the deceased is taxed in the year of death on the fair market value of his RRSP.

In its interim report tabled June 27, 1978, your Committee commented on this proposal as follows:

"Furthermore, the proposal may create hardship for the deceased's estate. The beneficiaries receive the proceeds whereas the estate is obliged to pay the tax—and usually at a higher rate than that which would be applicable to the beneficiaries.

It is recommended that in the event the deceased dies without a spouse and the children of the deceased are the beneficiaries of his RRSP, there be no commutation of the RRSP benefits at his death and he not be taxed in the year of death; rather, the children be taxed on the benefits received with the option of deferring tax through the purchase of an income averaging annuity contract."

Subclause 46(3) proposes the Bill be amended to provide relief in situations where both parents die leaving minor or disabled children. If there is no surviving spouse, the portion of a plan passing to a child or dependent grandchild equal to $5,000 multiplied by the number of years until the child reaches 26 years of age will be included in the child's income. The child may defer paying tax on such amount by purchasing an income averaging annuitant contract. For dependents who are dependent by reason of physical or mental infirmity, the full amount of the balance of a plan will be included in their incomes, rather than being included in the income of the deceased.

The Bill also proposes (clause 54) that the recipient of the balance of a plan will be jointly and severally liable with the estate for the tax payable by the annuitant.

Witnesses have testified that very large amounts ($300,000-$500,000 or more) may accumulate in RRSP's but that the portion passing to the children and subject to the proposed relief provided by the Bill will be relatively small in most cases. That is to say, the relief proposed by the Bill does not go far enough; only a relatively small amount will not be taxable in the hands of the deceased in the year of death. The witnesses have also advised the Committee of the difficulty minor children may have in purchasing income averaging annuity contracts. In many cases, this form of deferment will not be available.

As a result, the commutation of RRSP benefits will be taxed at prohibitive rates, except in those instances where they pass to the spouse. The Committee therefore reiterates its recommendation set forth in last year's report.

MINIMUM MATURITY AGE

Bill C-56 amended the Income Tax Act in 1978 to the effect that RRSP's may mature only after an annuitant attains 60 years of age. Your Committee indicated in its interim report tabled June 27, 1978 that the imposition of a minimum age would create unnecessary and severe problems for persons who require annuity payments prior to the age 60.

Subclause 46(5) proposes that RRSP's be entitled to mature prior to the age 60 if (i) the annuitant or his spouse receives a disability pension under the Canada Pension Plan or a provincial plan as defined in Section 3 of that Act or (ii) where the spouse of the annuitant has died, the annuitant receives a survivor's pension under the Canada Pension Plan or a provincial pension plan as defined in Section 3 of that Act.

The definition of disability under the Canada Pension Plan is extremely narrow. Paragraph 43(2)(a) of the Act reads as follows:

"(2) For the purposes of this Act,

(a) a person shall be considered to be disabled only if he is determined in prescribed manner to be suffering from a severe and prolonged mental or physical disability, and for the purposes of this paragraph.

(i) a disability is severe only if by reason thereof the person in respect of whom the determination is made is incapable regularly of pursuing any substantially gainful occupation, and

(ii) a disability is prolonged only if it is determined in prescribed manner that such disability is likely to be long continued and of indefinite duration or likely to result in death;"

A review of the definition and recent Pension Appeals Board decisions leads your Committee to the conclusion that the proposed exception to the age 60 limitation is too restrictive.

Your Committee is aware of the trend towards earlier retirement. Retirement before age 60 is not uncommon. For example, policemen, members of the armed forces and school teachers often retire at younger ages such as 50 or 55 and purchase RRSP's on that understanding.

Should the Minister insist on imposing an age limitation, your Committee strongly recommends that a more liberal and meaningful exception be provided whereby taxpayers in deserving circumstances should be entitled to mature their RRSP before the age 60. The definition under most private disability income plans is much less restrictive than the Canada Pension Plan disability test. The usual private plan test is whether the person is considered for the first two to five years to be unable to pursue the regular duties of his or her own occupation and thereafter to perform the duties on any occupation for which the person is suited by education, training or experience. Your Committee recommends that a person receiving any form of disability pension should be entitled to mature his RRSP before he becomes 60 years of age.

Your Committee is also concerned that there will be instances where a disabled person does not qualify for any form of disability pension. Information Circular 72-13R5 indicates that an employees' pension plan may provide for reasonable disability pension benefits "if disability is total and permanent, such as to prevent an employee from continuing active employment, and is so certified by a medical practitioner". Your Committee feels that any disabled person meeting this test should be entitled to mature his RRSP before he becomes 60 years of age.

TERMINATION PAYMENTS

Amounts received by an employee on termination of his employment are taxable if paid and received voluntarily. Jurisprudence has established that if such amounts are paid involuntarily, particularly where the employee has alleged wrongful dismissal, the amounts received as damages are free of tax.

In order to remove uncertainty and curtail certain abuses, the Bill proposes (subclauses 15(1) and 65(7)) that any amounts received in respect of a termination of office or employment after November 16, 1978 and not otherwise taxable will be considered a termination payment and taxable to the extent of one-half the employee's remuneration for the preceding 12-month period. Any amounts in excess of the 6-month salary will not be taxable.

Persons receiving termination payments, to the extent they are taxable, will be entitled to defer tax thereon by purchasing an income averaging annuity contract ("IAAC"). The employee investing his termination payment in an IAAC will receive annuity payments commencing no later than 10 months after the purchase of the IAAC for a term, guaranteed or not, of up to 15 years or until the employee reaches 85 years of age, whichever is sooner. The annuity payments will be taxable in the year of receipt.

The Bill does not contemplate that the employee would be allowed to claim a deduction if he were to contribute a termination payment to a registered retirement savings plan ("RRSP"). The ability to place funds in an RRSP provides more flexibility and may provide a greater opportunity for deferment of tax than the placing of funds in an IAAC. An RRSP may mature at any time after the annuitant has reached 60 years of age and before the end of the year in which he reaches 71 years of age. At maturity, the annuitant may opt to receive payments from his RRSP or transfer his RRSP to a registered retirement income fund.

A "retiring allowance" is defined in part to mean an amount received on or after retirement from an office or employment in recognition of long service or in respect of loss of office or employment.

A person receiving a retiring allowance may purchase an IAAC or place his allowance in an RRSP.

Payments representing damages arising from dismissal, to the extent taxable, have been considered heretofore by the Department of National Revenue as retiring allowances (see Interpretation Bulletin IT-337, paragraph 3) and have qualified for RRSP rollover treatment.

As a result of the proposed amendments, not only will the taxpayer be subject to the payment of income tax on the termination payment which tax he would not have incurred if he had been dismissed prior to November 17, 1978, but he will also be denied the tax deferral benefits which would avail had he been able to contribute the termination payment to an RRSP.

The denial of RRSP rollover treatment to recipients of sums representing damages arising from dismissal will result in taxpayers opting for different tax treatment, depending on the size of the amounts received. Taxpayers receiving less than 50% of their previous year's employment income will, in most cases, arrange their affairs to have the amounts received treated as a retiring allowance. Taxpayers receiving more than 50% of their previous year's employment income will, in most cases, arrange their affairs to have the amounts received treated as termination payments. Accordingly, they will be prejudiced compared with their counterparts receiving lesser amounts because they will be denied the more liberal deferment of tax available with RRSP rollovers. Furthermore, the different treatments will encourage taxpayers to continue the practice of arranging their affairs in an artificial manner in order to obtain more favourable tax treatment.

The plight of elder persons dismissed from employment is of great concern. On December 7, 1978, the Honourable Monique Bégin, Minister of National Health and Welfare, testified in part as follows before your Committee:

"In June, 1976, the provinces, basically Ontario followed by Quebec—got nervous about what the economic "adventure" which guaranteed an annual income by a form of negative income tax, I presume, would mean for Canadians, and decided to freeze it; and requested my predecessor, Marc Lalonde, to investigate and explore tax-related mechanisms of delivering social benefits to selective groups. That says it all. We identified three groups of the most vulnerable people in Canada: the people aged from 55 to 64 who lose their jobs and cannot be re-employed because of unwritten discrimination in the marketplace; single parent families; and working poor families. Two of those groups were characterized by children. Consequently, we devised this mechanism to have a program that would meet the needs of those two groups."

The Committee agrees with the Minister and urges that they be entitled to the benefit of choosing the rollover benefits of an RRSP or an IAAC should they be in receipt of termination payments.

Furthermore, in many cases it may be difficult to determine whether a payment should be classified as a retiring allowance or termination payment. An employee may be prejudiced if in thinking the payment was a retiring allowance he invested the funds in an RRSP which was ultimately determined to be a termination payment. He would not be entitled to deduct the funds invested and would therefore be taxable immediately on the full amount received. The taxpayer will be subject to two additional penalties assuming he has contributed more than $5,500 to his RRSP in the year; he will be taxable again when he receives back the amount inadvertently contributed to the RRSP; and he will be subject to a penalty tax of 1 per cent per month as long as the amount remains in the RRSP.

Your Committee feels that because of the similarity between termination payments and retiring allowances and the very adverse tax consequences which may arise if a given payment is characterized in the wrong manner, taxpayers should be entitled to invest their termination payments in the same manner as they may invest their retiring allowances. That is to say, they should be entitled to place the funds received in an RRSP as well as an IAAC.

INCOME BONDS AND CERTAIN PREFERRED SHARES

Income bonds and debentures are obligations on which interest is payable only when the borrower has made a profit. They were originally provided for in the Income Tax Act in the 1930's to help companies in serious financial difficulty.

Interest payments on income bonds and debentures are deemed to be dividends for tax purposes and therefore pass free of tax between Canadian corporations. No deduction is available for such payments made by a borrower.

Retractable preferred shares, of more recent origin, may be redeemed at the holder's option, and term preferred shares are now frequently issued for a limited period, usually less than 10 years.

These types of securities have been used instead of traditional debt financing, particularly for major loans by chartered banks to large corporations not subject to tax and who therefore do not need to deduct interest payments.

The Bill proposes (clauses 5 and 65) that interest paid on income bonds and debentures will be treated as interest for tax purposes. Similarly, dividends paid on retractable or term preferred shares with terms of less than 10 years to specified financial institutions (banks, trust companies, credit unions, life insurance corporations and finance companies) will be treated as interest for tax purposes. Notwithstanding the foregoing, the following payments will continue to be considered as dividends for tax purposes:

- (1) Interest and dividends payable on income bonds and debentures and retractable and term preferred shares issued before November 17, 1978 provided the conditions attaching thereto are not altered, their term not extended and the holders thereof do not waive their right to redeem.
- (2) Interest and dividends payable on income bonds and debentures and retractable and term preferred shares issued after November 17, 1978 and before 1980 under the terms of an agreement in writing to do so made before November 17, 1978.
- (3) Dividends on retractable or term preferred shares for terms not exceeding 10 years and issued by borrowers in financial difficulty.
- (4) Interest on income bonds and debentures issued for terms not in excess of 5 years by borrowers in financial difficulty.

The Mining Association of Canada has indicated that there are mining projects in Canada awaiting development which will require very large amounts of capital. The most appropriate manner of raising capital was said to be by way of income bonds or preferred shares with limited maturities. They suggest this form of financing be retained for mining companies wishing to develop new mines or expand existing facilities. Mr. John L. Bonus, Managing Director of the Association testified in part as follows:

"Gentlemen, the important point is, we desperately need new mines in Canada if we are to maintain let alone expand our position as a world-class supplier of minerals in the future. We have in Canada a very substantial number of discovered deposits awaiting development, and we believe that many of these would go ahead if financing of them could be secured at interest rates considered reasonable. These projects would, of course, create new employment, directly and indirectly, and contribute in many ways to a stimulation of the economy.”

They therefore suggest the Bill be amended to allow the financing of specific depreciable assets by way of income bonds or preferred shares with limited maturities. They suggest that income bonds or preferred shares with limited maturities could be issued having principal amounts that would not exceed at any time the amount of capital cost of depreciable assets not yet written off for tax purposes.

The Committee has noted the large cost of income bonds and preferred shares with limited maturities to the federal and provincial treasuries. This amounted to approximately $500 million last year. It is anticipated there would have been an additional loss to the federal treasury of $150 million for the fiscal year 1979-1980 without the proposed amendments.

This report has noted the additional benefits proposed by Bill C-37 with respect to pre-production expenses of new mines and a larger investment tax credit. The Committee is mindful of the extensive benefits given to the mining industry by the federal tax system. These benefits include the deduction of Canadian exploration expenses, earned depletion, accelerated capital cost allowances, resource allowances and the investment tax credit.

It would appear to your Committee that mining properties susceptible of financing by way of income bonds and debentures would have to be of high quality involving low risk on the part of the lender. It is to be noted that equity financing for the development of such properties is still available and in particular circumstances may be more appropriate.

However, in the light of evidence produced before the Committee, there would appear to be cases where income bonds or debentures or preferred shares with a shorter term than 10 years may be the only acceptable form of financing available. The Committee feels that more liberal provision should be given in the Bill to allow for financing by way of income bonds and debentures and preferred shares of a shorter term to assist the development of the Canadian economy as long as such provisions do not represent an unreasonable loss to the federal treasury.

OTHER AMENDMENTS

INTEREST AND PROPERTY TAXES ON VACANT LAND

Clause 6 proposes that the Act be amended to permit a deduction for interest and property taxes incurred after November 16, 1978 with respect to land held primarily for the purpose of resale or development by a taxpayer in the ordinary course of his business. The Income Tax Act presently disallows such a deduction. Your Committee welcomes this amendment which conforms to the tradition that all expenses to earn income from a business or property and otherwise acceptable are deductible.

The Committee notes with concern, however, the proposal to repeal subsection 10(1.1) of the Act (clause 2 of the Bill). This subsection allowed taxpayers to add interest and property taxes to the cost of land held as inventory. The repeal of subsection 10(1.1) will mean that taxpayers holding land as inventory and not receiving income in a year will suffer a loss for that year which will not be recoverable if income is not earned in the previous year or any of the five succeeding years. The Committee recommends that subsection 10(1.1) should not be repealed.

SMALL BUSINESS CORPORATIONS

In June, 1978, the Income Tax Act was amended to permit the avoidance of tax on $200,000 of capital gains where the gains arose on the transfer of shares of a small business corporation to the child of the transferor.

There had developed a practice whereby taxpayers could double the exemption from tax by utilizing the $200,000 exemption, transferring shares to his spouse, who would in turn transfer shares of the small business corporation to the child, thereby creating an aggregate exemption of $400,000. Clause 24 proposes an amendment to deny the $200,000 exemption where shares had been previously transferred between spouses in such a manner that the attribution rule of sub-section 74(2) of the Act would have been applicable.

CURRENCY GAINS OF FOREIGN AFFILIATES

Foreign accrual property income (“FAPI”) of a foreign affiliate of a taxpayer is included in the income of a Canadian taxpayer in the year it is earned by the foreign affiliate. FAPI income consists of income other than active business income and includes taxable capital gains. As such, capital gains arising from the fluctuation of foreign currencies relative to the Canadian dollar could give rise to FAPI income.

Clause 32 of the Bill proposes that such currency fluctuations be eliminated from the computation of FAPI income.

INTEREST AND DIVIDEND DEDUCTION

Individuals are entitled to deduct up to $1,000 of interest and grossed-up dividends received and taxable capital gains incurred from the disposition of Canadian securities.

Sub-clause 34(3) of the Bill will disallow a deduction in respect of dividends deemed by Section 84 of the Act to have been received by a taxpayer. This clause has been inserted in the Bill to prevent abuses whereby individuals would purchase shares in a public company knowing that such shares were being purchased for cancellation by the company. Upon having his shares purchased for cancellation, the individual would be deemed to have received a dividend equal to the difference between the paid-up capital in respect of the shares cancelled and the redemption proceeds. Heretofore, the deemed dividend could be received tax-free to the extent of the $1,000 deduction. The Act provides that where a portion of the proceeds of disposition of a share are considered to be deemed dividends for the purpose of Section 84, the amount of the deemed dividend reduces the proceeds of disposition of the shares for tax purposes. Thus the proceeds of disposition for tax purposes being less than the individual's cost of the shares by the amount of the deemed dividend, the amount of the deemed dividend became a capital loss for tax purposes which the taxpayer could deduct up to $2,000 against other income in the year.

SUBMISSION OF THE TRUST COMPANIES ASSOCIATION OF CANADA

The Trust Companies Association of Canada testified before the Committee respecting options available at the maturity of RRSP's.

THE FIXED TERM ANNUITY OPTION

Paragraph 146(1)(i.1) of the Act was added by Bill C-56 effective June 30, 1978. This gave the annuitant the option of acquiring an annuity commencing at maturity of the RRSP for a term extending to the annuitant's 90th birthday or that of his spouse.

The annual payment under this option must be equal which means the interest rate must be fixed for the term of the contract—a minimum of 19 years which could extend to 30 years or more. The witnesses testified that the trust companies match as closely as possible the interest rates and maturities of their assets with those of their liabilities. The commitment to the long-term guarantees of capital and fixed rates of interest required under fixed term annuities would be a major departure from their traditional investment practice, which practice has tended to favour shorter term investments, i.e. residential mortgages with renewable terms of one to five years.

Accordingly, they have recommended that the Act be amended to permit the interest rate on fixed term annuities to be varied periodically throughout the term of the contract, with the intervals and the rate to be negotiable between the annuitant and the issuer.

They have also noted that annuitants were not receptive to fixed term annuities because the maximum term of age 90 was inflexible. Annuitants were, in most cases, forced to think in terms beyond their normal life expectancy. They have recommended that the fixed term annuity term be reduced to a minimum of the annuitant's life expectancy at maturity, while retaining age 90 as the maximum term.

THE REGISTERED RETIREMENT INCOME FUND OPTION

It was noted that payments under registered retirement income funds ("RRIF's") grow from year to year at the rate of return on investments in the Fund. It has been pointed out that the growth in the rate of return may be out of proportion. For example, payments under an RRIF for each $1,000 invested by a taxpayer at age 70 and assuming an 8% interest return will provide a $50 return to the taxpayer in the first year of the RRIF and $215.79 for the last year. The increase in rate of return is designed to protect the taxpayer against inflation. The Association has argued that there should be some adjustment made to the payment formula to permit larger payments in the earlier years as the differential in payments as presently established is out of proportion and will cause the taxpayer to be subject to higher tax at death because the commuted value of his RRIF will always remain relatively high.

The Association has also recommended that the RRIF term be reduced to a minimum of the annuitant's life expectancy at maturity, while retaining age 90 as the maximum term.

THE TERM CERTAIN ANNUITY

The Association has strongly recommended the introduction of the term certain annuity as a further option at maturity of an RRSP. This option would entitle taxpayers to choose the term of their annuity in order to meet their particular individual needs.

The recommendation of The Trust Companies Association of Canada do not relate to Bill C-37. However, your Committee considers their recommendations to have merit and feels they should be given consideration by the Minister.

CONCLUSION

Your Committee wishes to express its appreciation for the services rendered in the review of the Bill by Messrs. Charles Albert Poissant and Thomas S. Gillespie.

Your Committee has examined and considered the subject-matter of Bill C-37 in accordance with its terms of reference and, except as noted above, has no comment to make on the Bill.

Respectfully submitted,

SALTER A. HAYDEN,
Chairman.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, March 14, 1979

The Senate met at 2 p.m., Hon. Maurice Bourget, P.C., Speaker pro tem, in the Chair.

Prayers.

NATIONAL FINANCE

ACCOMMODATION PROGRAM OF DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS—COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO REVIEW RECOMMENDATIONS

Senator Grosart moved, seconded by Senator Hicks, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(e):

That the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance be authorized to review, with the appropriate ministers and officials, the recommendations contained in the report of the said committee on the Accommodation Program of the Department of Public Works.

Motion agreed to.

HEALTH RESOURCES FUND ACT

RECOMMENDATIONS OF HEALTH, WELFARE AND SCIENCE COMMITTEE—QUESTION

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. Has the government accepted the recommendations of the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science regarding Bill C-2, to amend the Health Resources Fund Act; and, if so, is the government acting on those recommendations?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, it is my understanding that the recommendations are being considered.

ENERGY

INTERNATIONAL ENERGY AGENCY—SUPPLY OF OIL IN ATLANTIC CANADA—QUESTION ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, a question was asked by Senator Roblin on March 7 last regarding the supply of oil in Atlantic Canada.

The quantity of oil held in storage by the oil companies in Atlantic Canada and elsewhere in the country is reported monthly to the government. While the government does not exercise direct control over these stocks, routine contact with the oil supply companies through both the National Energy Board and the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources provides a measure of indirect control.

Generally speaking, the government has found the oil stock levels to be satisfactory. From time to time, problems have arisen and have been resolved through consultative means.

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Senator Adams moved the third reading of Bill C-28, to amend the Northwest Territories Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD ACT

BILL TO AMEND—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the consideration of the report of the Special Committee of the Senate on the Northern Pipeline on Bill S-12, to amend the National Energy Board Act, which was presented on March 8, 1979.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I did not have time to participate in the work of the Northern Pipeline Committee in formulating this bill, but I have been kept au courant by others, most notably Senator Smith (Colchester), who faithfully attended all meetings. I was aware from having attended some of the earlier meetings of the purpose of the bill, and I expressed my entire agreement with the objectives of the committee, and especially those of its chairman, Senator Olson.

The provisions of the National Energy Board Act concerning expropriation are entirely inadequate, so the committee produced a bill to amend the act in order to set rules for expropriation especially with regard to the northern pipeline. These amendments, on the whole, are laudable and adequate, and I have no objection to this report being adopted and the bill receiving third reading today.

There are some problems, and they were mentioned by Senator Olson. One of these is that there probably should be a direct government input into some of the provisions of the bill. For instance, there was the problem of the expense of operating the Arbitration Board. In these amendments it is provided that the cost will be paid by the oil company, which, on the surface, appears fair. But it does constitute a departure from the general principle that a court is something which is operated in the public interest and, as such, is paid for out of public funds. So we may be establishing a new principle or adopting a new rule there. But we will see how it goes when it is considered in the other place, if it is ever considered there as such. I doubt it under the circumstances. It may come back to us in a new Parliament as a government bill, sponsored by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Another interesting precedent proposed in this bill is that landowners may have a choice of immediate compensation for the easement or for the loss of the property, depending on the circumstances—because in some cases I understand the oil companies will be entitled only to an easement, a servitude, and not total possession of the land—in the form of a lump sum or having compensation on the basis of an annual rental which would be reviewed every five years. The review at the end of every five-year period is something entirely new. I can understand the logic behind it. These are times of discouraging inflation. But the idea breaks new ground and may create many problems.

I am not opposed to this idea, but I would like to study it more closely. I am interested in seeing what reception it gets as this bill moves along the road towards final adoption. On the whole, I would say that the provisions in this bill are necessary if we are to provide adequate protection and compensation for those people who will be affected by the construction of the Northern Pipeline.

With those few remarks, honourable senators, I support the adoption of the report and we will not oppose third reading, even this afternoon, if the sponsor so desires.

● (1410)

Hon. H. A. Olson: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: I must inform honourable senators that if the Honourable Senator Olson speaks now his speech will have the effect of closing the debate.

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I just want to reply, albeit briefly, to some of the comments made by Senator Flynn. First, let me say that I appreciate his comments respecting the new departures we are setting out in this bill. I also want to express to him our appreciation for the constructive and co-operative work we had from Senator Smith (Colchester) in putting this bill together. He attended faithfully and helped us a great deal in putting the legal terminology into its most acceptable form.

With respect to the matter of annual payments for land which a resource company or pipeline or gas company takes by way of an interest short of fee simple, the right to the ownership of the surface is new in respect of pipelines but it is not a new concept in the western provinces. For example, a common practice out there is the leasing of small parcels of land, sometimes from two to five acres, which are taken for the purpose of drilling wells. While the companies do rent the lease, they call it a surface lease and it gives them the right to go on the land to service the well.

The fact is that the landowner usually gets back 75 to 95 per cent of that land to farm on as he was before the construction of the surface requirements for the well were put in place.

Since 1972, at least in the province of Alberta where they are made annually, such surface lease rentals are subject to review every five years at the initiation of either one party or the other. The review is not automatic or done of necessity. It must be initiated. We know that that is now happening in Alberta in respect of at least 40,000 wells. So it is not an impossible job in terms of administration or coming to an agreement when a five-year review comes up. For those reasons we have included that in this legislation. It makes for much better relations between the pipeline company, gas company or oil company and the landowner.

Honourable senators, with these comments I should again like to express my appreciation to all members of the committee and as well to the staff of the committees branch and others for being so helpful during the six-month job of getting this bill to this stage.

Motion agreed to and report adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(b), I move that the bill be read the third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION BILL, 1979

SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the motion of Senator Riley for the second reading of Bill C-35, respecting the organization of the Government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, I am pleased to respond, on behalf of my leader and my party, to Bill C-35, and I am pleased also to associate myself with the mover of the bill, Senator Riley, a fellow maritimer, who shows such an unpartisan attitude in dealing with matters affecting our country and who is interested in the fisheries of Atlantic Canada. May I also pay my respects to you, Mr. Speaker, for the excellent job you have done during the past three days. I hope that you are not trying to take the job away from Senator Lapointe.

In scanning the debates in the other place, I noticed that repeated criticism was made, by most participants concerned with fisheries at both ends of our country, of the fact that the establishment of a Department of Fisheries and Oceans was included in the omnibus type of bill we have before us. They felt it should have been dealt with in a separate bill rather than being included in a hodge podge of various sections dealing with 10 agencies or departments, or elements of same, including the setting up of a separate Department of the Environment.

The bill repeals the Representation Commissioner Act, abolishing the position of Representation Commissioner and putting his duties under the Chief Electoral Officer.

The bill allows parliamentary secretaries to remain in their jobs when their ministers resign, whereas now they have to resign when their ministers do. I am sure that no senator quarrels with this aspect of the bill.

The bill brings the employees of Canadian Patents and Development Limited under the Public Service Superannuation Act, and it allows certain research councils to appoint and classify staff without ministerial approval.

I see no quarrel with Parts IV, V, VI, VII, VIII, IX and X of the bill, which seem to be housekeeping measures, although I have some reservations about allowing the bureaucracy to appoint and classify officials and staff without ministerial approval. This allows too much room for straying from responsible practices of appointments, and it could get ministers into embarrassing situations.

In this regard, I hope that when we reach the committee stage we can explore those sections which may leave some doubts in the minds of members. I am pleased also, in this regard, that my colleague Senator Phillips will be speaking to the bill later this afternoon.

Part II of the bill contains some important factors. I refer to the abolition of the Fisheries Research Board and the substitution of a Fisheries and Oceans Research Advisory Council. It also increases the number of its members from 18 to 24, allowing for wider representation. I am pleased to note that the Council shall include "fishermen and persons from the general public". Honourable senators, these people must have a strong voice in the future determination of policy, a voice that for too long has remained unheard.

● (1420)

Already, however, if I read the bill properly, there appears to be a contradiction in that it states that the Chairman of the Council will be appointed by the Governor in Council, and the other members by the minister. Yet, as I indicated earlier, under Parts VI, VII, VIII and IX, the bill seeks to allow the council to appoint its members without ministerial approval. Perhaps that, too, can be explored in committee or explained by my good friend the sponsor of the bill, Senator Riley.

I am pleased that Senator Grosart agrees with the government side that this bill should go to a Committee of the Whole, where we will be able to explore the unexplained portions of the bill.

Dealing with Part I of the bill, it is gratifying to note that we have come full circle since the government, in its wisdom, decided to combine the departments of fisheries and forestry under the Department of the Environment. This caused much needless controversy, but we are now back to square one with the recognition that fisheries is a very important part of our economy. It is regrettable that it has taken so many years to realize just how valuable our fisheries resources are. We allowed them to be exploited by foreign nations, but now, through necessity rather than good sense, we are on the road, hopefully, to realizing the full potential of these resources, and with good planning our fisheries will provide a more prosperous foreign trade and a good livelihood for our fishermen. Our fishermen have suffered for too many years from lack of leadership, being barely able to eke out a meager existence from their back-breaking labours in small fishing dories.

For too many years the exploitation of this resource has remained at a standstill while foreign nations have modernized with massive factory ships. We are now having to follow their example instead of their having to follow ours. These foreign countries literally vacuumed up this resource, while fishermen in Newfoundland and in other parts of Canada were being urged to burn their boats and forget about fishing. Is it any wonder that our fishermen today cannot understand why they are unable to get a licence to fish? Fishing has been a traditional way of life for hundreds of years for a great many of our people, but suddenly, because of the raping of our stocks, we now have to restrict the granting of licences to harvest lobster and other species. Our fishermen wonder why they have to abide by quotas that had to be prescribed until the stocks could be replenished. These stocks should never have been allowed to deteriorate in the first place, but we are now compelled to try to overcome the mistakes of the past.

Fortunately, as the Minister of External Affairs indicated the other day, we have bottomed out. Now, with the establishment of a 200-mile limit, with a strong sense of purpose and continued careful planning, we are recovering to the point where the most pessimistic of our fishermen have a new vision of the realization of the quality of life they were promised so many times over the years.

Despite the misfortunes of the past years it is important that we should stop looking back. Barring unforeseen crises that seem to occur every year, the Canadian fisherman, with the support of government leadership, can play his part in restoring our resources, and he will thus be enabled to enjoy a small piece of the prosperity that he is beginning to see on the horizon, even though he is still full of doubts.

Honourable senators, I have no hesitation in commending the present Minister of Fisheries and the Environment for his direction with respect to the transformation that is taking place in our fisheries. I also commend his predecessor, Jack Davis, who, back in 1968, 1969 and 1970, prodded by members of Atlantic Canada and western Canada, had the guts to firmly impress on the government the value of our resources. He argued that the government had to show a firm hand in dealing with our competitors, and that we had to control and manage our own marine resources for the benefit of our own people.

Neither have I any hesitation in commending the efforts of the officials in the department who, despite protest and criticism, have shown dedication, pride, understanding, expertise and co-operation in dealing with the many problems brought to them by members of whatever political stripe.

Honourable senators, I think too little is known about the departmental team from both the Department of External Affairs and the Department of Fisheries who continue to serve at the Law of the Sea Conferences and who have worked tirelessly at those conferences. They are unknown, dedicated Canadians who were instrumental in Canada's achieving the Law of the Sea, and they have immeasurably enhanced Canada's standing among world nations.

Too little is known about the sensitive ongoing negotiations that still remain to be resolved in the sharing of our other marine resources which are in abundance outside our 200-mile limit. We can feel assured—as I have felt in my many trips to Law of the Sea Conferences—that benefits from the seabed can accrue to Canada. They are in the capable hands of Mr. Allan Beasley and his competent staff.

For fear of reprisal from my leader for throwing out bouquets, let me make it clear that our party will do a much better job and will progress much more rapidly in the very near future, but it is common courtesy to soften the blow of defeat that the government will be facing in the near future.

A separate Department of Fisheries and Oceans will allow the minister to direct all his efforts towards the build-up of the fishing industry. The structure of the new department will enable the minister to oversee all sectors of interest.

We are continually warned that the extension of our 200-mile limit should not be considered as the end of our fishery problems. I have to agree, but certainly since its inception, great strides have been made, in spite of the government, to manage our stocks so that they are now being slowly replenished after a long period of deterioration. Hopefully, with effective management control over most of the fishing grounds, a new era of prosperity looms on the horizon for Canada's hard-pressed fishing community scattered across Canada. Certainly, in the two years since the establishment of our 200-mile zone, fisheries has become big business and has reached the magic billion dollar mark in market value.

One of the publications I like to read each year is one put out by the Fisheries Prices Research Board, which states:

The establishment of a 200-mile fishery-management zone in 1977 opened a new era in the commercial fisheries of Canada. Through bilateral and international negotiations, as well as by the introduction of a comprehensive enforcement plan, a management régime for the zone was initiated smoothly and effectively.

I do not particularly agree with those words. It was not that smooth, and it has not been that effective. However, the publication further states:

Strict conservation measures to restore depleted fish stocks and programs to sustain the weaker segments of the chronically troubled fishing industry continued in place. The quantity of landings, the value of production and of exports showed improvement, indicating that the Canadian fisheries were on the path to recovery.

● (1430)

Landings on the Atlantic coast were slightly more than 1,000,000 tonnes in total, with a value overall of $283 million, an increase of 14 per cent in quantity and of 29 per cent in value terms. Groundfish landings in the region were well over 500,000 tonnes, reflecting substantial increases in catches in cod, haddock and turbot.

But we should not be too enthusiastic, because redfish landings were down as a result of smaller quotas in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, which is an example of the way we have to replenish our stocks by conservation. However, the increase in gross terms to primary producers of groundfish was close to 30 per cent over the 1976 level.

Moving to the other part of the country, to our good friends on the Pacific coast, we can see that landings in the fisheries on that coast increased in 1977 to 205,000 tonnes, worth $168 million, from 181,000 tonnes valued at $142 million—an increase of 13 per cent and 18 per cent respectively over 1976. Increases in catches of salmon, herring and certain ground fish species and price rises from salmon and herring, particularly the latter, accounted in the main for the improvement in performance. Somewhat higher prices for halibut, however, were insufficient to compensate for a further decline in the catch of that species.

On a positive note the situation looks good, if we use cautious optimism and careful planning to reinforce the success we have, rather than repeat the complacency that has existed over the years in dealing with the valuable protein-filled resource that we in Atlantic Canada have been reminding the government of for so many years.

Certainly I see, in my ten years of visiting the northern isolated communities of Newfoundland and Labrador, it is transforming the small isolated fishing communities into maturity in Atlantic Canada. The progress in that part of the country has injected new life into the fishery departments of provincial governments and a new sense of purpose. I do not absolve my government in Newfoundland, the present Progressive Conservative government, nor indeed the government that existed in the past, for the lack of realization and the complacency they showed in dealing with that valuable resource.

In Newfoundland, for example, in the past one and a half years more money has been spent on fisheries than in the years since Newfoundland joined Confederation to 1971. In that 23-year period, total expenditure was $25.7 million, yet from 1972 to only the present time the expenditure has been $85 million. The new emphasis on and encouragement for fishing is resulting, too, in more money being invested by the private sector, so we have injected a sense of purpose in the private sector, and estimates indicate that investment by the private sector could reach some $300 million in the next five to eight years.

I mention Newfoundland, honourable senators, because that is the part of our country I know best, and because that province was a fishing area long before it was anything else, and it will remain a fishing country long after it is anything else. That is why the fishery is so much more important to us proportionately in terms of population, employment and community impact than it is to our neighbouring provinces in Atlantic Canada. Over 100,000 Newfoundlanders depend, directly or indirectly, on the future of the fishery. If I can quote from one of the pamphlets put out by the Minister of Fisheries for the Province of Newfoundland, it said:

● (1440)

The sea will be to Newfoundland and Labrador what the oil fields are now to Alberta—except that the sea will be there when the oil fields are dried up.

Just as the have-not province of Newfoundland realizes its responsibility to show leadership in developing and encouraging the fishing industry in every way possible, with her sister provinces of Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Quebec joining her, so must the federal government show leadership in the development of that valuable, protein-rich food which is in such demand in the world, and it is finally doing so.

One of the most serious criticisms I have made respecting fisheries over the years—a criticism repeated by my colleagues from the Atlantic provinces—concerned its insufficient budget. I can only hope that the federal government sees the need to reinforce the significant success we have seen over the past two years.

I am willing to take the minister's word that we do not, as yet, need the massive trawlers that the Atlantic premiers want to start building. I am willing to take the minister's word, on the matter of fleet expansion that the premiers are advocating, that it is premature because our existing fleet cannot take 50 per cent more than it is taking now. We must remember our ships are getting older and are deteriorating. We must start planning and looking to the next 10 years, a time when the experts tell us we will have that prosperity in the fishing industry.

I am also willing to believe the minister when he states that we cannot take advantage of the underutilized species until we have a breakthrough in market development, but I should like to ask the minister what we have been doing over the past 25 years in utilizing the species that we knew were available in abundance?

One example of that is that we were standing by studying our capelin potential while the Norwegians were processing that species on factory and feeder ships right before our very eyes and readying the product for markets in Japan. All we had to do was ask the Norwegians about it at a cocktail party and they would have told us.

We were neglecting the schools of mackerel, mackerel so numerous that you could walk on them, but we were refused the support in respect of prosecuting mackerel fishing which today, we find, is a valuable marine resource.

Yet, as to the known value species such as the cod, we neglected our fishermen and failed to protect them while we allowed foreign dragnets to rape our stocks, even within our 12-mile limit. The excuse given by the federal government was that it did not have enough money to expand its patrol capability.

And is it not strange to read in the 1977-78 annual report of the Fisheries Prices Support Board the following sentences:

Imports of fishery products into Canada increased by 21 per cent, to $221 million in 1977. An increase of over 20 per cent was recorded for fresh (chilled) and frozen products. The United States continued to be the major source of supply of imported fishery products, followed by Japan, Cuba and the European Economic Community in that order.

I venture to say, and I would bet, that most of that $221 million of fishery products was our raw fish which we exported, and which we bought back processed at probably 10 times the price. A perfect example of the cheapest kind of fish is herring. As honourable senators know, a one-and-a-half ounce bottle of herring costs approximately $1, although it is sold to foreign countries for approximately one or two cents a pound.

[Senator Marshall.]

What was our government saying when the fishermen were screaming for small craft harbour facilities, and were breaking their backs dragging their boats ashore and begging members of Parliament for help? The government said that it was sorry; that it recognized the need but its budget was too small.

Despite criticism of the Canada Works Program, I say that over the past five years we should thank God for the Canada Works Program, because it was only under that program, which had the money, that fishermen were able to apply for funds to build their own facilities and, indeed, the Ministry of Fisheries and the Environment recognized that and helped them in that regard with capital expenditure.

What was the government doing over the years when our delightful salmon rivers were being poached and ravished? They closed the rivers for the want of a few more river guardians. What did the government say? It said that it had no money in the budget, yet the part-time guardians who were laid off because of those budget restrictions were still able to collect two-thirds of their salary on unemployment insurance.

Honourable senators, I indicated earlier in my speech that we were slow learners, but no doubt we have learned our lesson. While we were fiddling in Canada studying the fishing industry, our fishery industry almost deteriorated to obsolescence. Thank God we had the guts, through prodding, to unilaterally declare a 200-mile zone which will revolutionize the industry.

I want to make it clear that I do not blame the minister or his officials, because I know how he has appealed and begged for increases in his budget; for more money for small craft harbours, research, search and rescue and everything that will protect the fishermen and give them the infrastructure they need so badly. However, I must put the blame on the short-sightedness of the government that is in power.

Certainly, however, without spelling doom and gloom, the creation of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans is a forward step. Certainly, as a result of the 1976 policy paper which establishes objectives and strategies, we can go on to make further progress. It elicits the need for resource management to ensure not only a sustainable yield but also to recognize the need for the industry's impact, not only for economic purposes, but also—and this is more important—to improve the standard of living of the many hundreds in the isolated and remote areas in northern Newfoundland and Labrador, and certainly in many other parts of the country.

Honourable senators, I should now like to deal with harvesting. That same document advocates the need for systems of balanced access to ensure stability of the resource and improved incomes for fishermen. It advocates improvement in fishing gear and practices and ensures the viability of appropriate fleets, depending on the nature of the fishery. In processing, the document advocates quality, full utilization of the resource, and arrangements for the distribution of catches, particularly during drought periods, to plants in areas where catches are low, in order to extend the working time of the plant.

In marketing, we have been a dismal failure. I indicated imports of $221 million. This proves that we are not marketing our fish properly, nor are we getting our dollar value out of the fish by selling it abroad.

As an aside, I should like to see when I travel to Newfoundland—and I travel there quite often—Air Canada using fish on their menus rather than the cold plates it serves to its passengers as though they were refugees. Indeed, they should be ordered to serve fish when going to Atlantic Canada and, possibly, to western Canada.

One of our most vital needs in planning priorities must be directed toward a protective capability. Too many of our fishermen in Atlantic Canada have gone out and faced the dangers and never returned. This emphasizes the need for a build-up of our search and rescue capability. Every year I know, just as sure as I am standing here, that the fishermen are not going to be able to get out to the grounds because of ice and yet, after prodding and pleading for more ice-breaker service, we are told that the government does not seem to have the money to provide more. And yet the ice-breaker service is deployed in Halifax and Quebec, when 90 per cent of the incidents occur in Newfoundland. I am not saying that all the ice-breaker service should be moved to Newfoundland, but certainly during that part of the season when an ice-breaker can be utilized one should be stationed, located or deployed in the province of Newfoundland.

● (1450)

We must have an expansion of our lifeboat bases. Too many fishermen have lost their lives because of the scattered nature of the lifeboat bases on the west coast of Newfoundland and indeed in Nova Scotia, Cape Breton, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. Too many incidents of loss of life make us feel sorry after, and I hope that the minister—and I know he would want to do it—and the government will realize that to reinforce the potential we have to reinforce the support services to the fishermen of Canada.

If I may, I should like to turn now for a moment or two to the other important aspect of the bill, Part III, which creates as a separate entity the Department of the Environment, which not only equals in importance the fisheries, but reflects responsibility towards Canada's most valuable resource, or indeed one of its two top resources, the forests of our nation.

One of the members of the other place criticized the fact that all we hear about in the House of Commons is fish, but our forest products are so much more valuable. That is true. But it does not mean that we do not realize the potential of an underutilized resource such as fish and how best to utilize it for the benefit of Canadians and for the benefit of our nation.

The forest resource supports 300,000 Canadians directly, and up to 700,000 jobs indirectly in secondary manufacturing and service industries. The forest products industry in Canada is the leading commodity sector in terms of sales, employment, exports earnings and regional dispersion. Yet again the government does not seem to want to realize the dangers that exist in the forest industry. Canada's share of world export markets for forest products has decreased from 31 per cent to 19 per cent in the last 20 years while the share of the United States—our best customer—has increased from less than 9 per cent to more than 12 per cent.

These are all figures which are very boring, honourable senators, but we see the Export Development Corporation and the Canadian International Development Agency and the other agencies which are granting guaranteed loans to other countries to build paper mills, to support their pulp and paper industry, and the only excuse they can give is that if we do not do it somebody else will. We should become more competitive and we should put more money into research and we should be supporting the main industry that has held Canada together for so long, the pulp and paper industry, which is so vital and for which we have such abundant resources.

Even though the two departments will be separated under this bill, there will have to be a close co-operation and co-ordination between the Minister of Fisheries and the Minister of the Environment. I hope, honourable senators, in order not to prolong the debate, that we can discuss other matters in this bill in committee.

But I see many other dangers. I agree with the experts that we cannot take for granted that we are going to have prosperity on our seas. Sensitive negotiations are taking place between Canada and France on the allocation of quotas and the allocation of boundaries. We have right in our midst in Newfoundland the little islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon which also have rights, and there have to be sensitive negotiations with them to make sure that the median lines are fair to all. Then we have the Canada-U.S. negotiations still going on. These are vital to the fishermen of Canada and certainly to our neighbours on both the east and west coasts.

There are many other areas in the fishing industry, but in order to try to complete the debate on this bill, I think I can be excused if I do not mention them. This is a reorganization bill and is not a bill concerning fisheries policy, and there will be other opportunities to elaborate on and delve into fisheries problems.

So, honourable senators, I agree wholeheartedly with this legislation, because along with my colleagues I have been saying that the importance of our fisheries should be recognized by the setting up of a separate department. Even though there have been many delays, that step is now finally being taken. I am sure that with correct planning and with co-operation between the federal and provincial governments, and with the latter recognizing their responsibilities on a provincial basis, and with Canada realizing the potential on the federal and international basis, we can get those jobs we are looking for; we can provide that quality of life to Canadians that they are looking for, and, in the end result, it is to be hoped that we will have a better Canada.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, throughout the debate on Bill C-35 in the other place there was very little mention made of oceanography as a scientific field. Canadians are approximately 15 to 20 years behind the Russians in this field and, in fact, most of our research work has consisted of attempting to train scientists to become sufficiently proficient in the Russian language that they can translate and understand the articles published there.

Even before Bill C-35 was introduced, the minister announced that there would be cutbacks in the fisheries research stations and the Oceanography Institute on both the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. For some reason the fisheries research station at Ste Anne de Bellevue seemed to have a higher priority in that it received less drastic cutbacks than those on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. I am not all that familiar with Ste Anne de Bellevue. The few times I have visited there I did not see very many draggers or lobster boats docking in the parking lots at the shopping centres. I would appreciate it if the Honourable Senator Riley, who sponsored the bill, would give us further details on the cutbacks to both the oceanographic programs and the various fisheries research stations and programs that have been affected.

● (1500)

When the head of the Anti-Inflation Board was appointed head of the Fisheries Research Board, I expressed concern that we either had an accountant heading the Fisheries Research Board or that we had had a fisherman heading the Anti-Inflation Board. Since that time, the indications are that we now have an accountant in charge of fisheries research—and that is a matter which causes me great concern.

Part II of the bill provides for the establishment of a Fisheries and Oceans Research Advisory Council. During the dominion-provincial conferences on the Constitution, the Atlantic provinces in particular urged that the provinces be given a greater say in the control of fisheries. Obviously their pleas fell on deaf ears because the clause governing the constitution of the council does not provide for provincial representation. This would have been a golden opportunity for the provinces to make an input into the federal program.

Clause 6 authorizes the minister to enter into agreements with the provinces respecting the carrying out of programs for which the minister has responsibility.

The federal minister met with his provincial counterparts in the Atlantic provinces to establish cod quotas. The ministers were barely back in their offices when the minister announced an entirely new program, new quotas, and a new basis of distributing the quotas between Quebec and the four Atlantic provinces.

Honourable senators, it is very seldom that I find myself in agreement with a Grit. I seem to take particular pride in avoiding that situation. However, in this case I find myself in agreement with the Minister of Fisheries of my province—who, incidentally, is the only Grit provincial minister of fisheries—who protested to the federal minister by telephone and telegram. He said the difficulty was that both the minister and his officials were slow learners. If that criticism were in the form of a motion, it would be most easy to support.

[Senator Marshall.]

The quota of 12,000 tonnes of codfish in Atlantic Canada is not extremely high. The department says it is necessary to keep this down to conserve the species. But recently on TV I heard a biologist from the Department of Fisheries discuss the seal hunt. He was very careful to explain that the number of seals would gradually be increased by 250,000. Honourable senators, each seal eats 10 pounds of fish per day, and it is not very difficult to understand that there is a certain amount of competition between the seal and the fishermen. In my opinion, the department is leaning a little too much toward the seal. I would rather see the fishermen and their families receive more consideration.

In his introduction and explanation of the bill, the sponsor made no mention of agreement with foreign countries on quotas. It is difficult for me, as a representative of the Atlantic provinces, to understand why we must have communist nations, such as Poland and East Germany, assigned quotas within the Canadian resource management limit. Perhaps this is partly due to the fact that our trawlers are not equipped to operate in ice. For some time we have been waiting for the government to announce a policy in this regard.

Perhaps it would be unfair to suggest that a number of these things may have been delayed so that they can be produced as election promises. That, honourable senators, is a distinct possibility. It has now become a rather ridiculous situation, and it is high time that Senator Davey soaked the Prime Minister's cold feet in hot Epsom salts and told him to get out and face the electorate, so that we could get on with attempting to solve a lot of these problems.

Senator Steuart: Do the same thing to Joe's head.

Senator Phillips: The honourable senator's head is not in as fine shape as Joe's, so I will disregard his remark.

Part III defines the responsibility of the Minister of the Environment. Clause 5(a)(ii) states that renewable resources, including forest resources, are the responsibility of the Department of the Environment. The minutes of the Fisheries and Forestry Committee of the other place show the Minister of the Environment stating that the federal government has no agreement with British Columbia and there will be no forestry permits issued until it is guaranteed that the salmon fishery has been protected. On the same day, the Province of British Columbia announced that it was going ahead with granting forestry permits anyway.

We now have a situation, honourable senators, where before the bill becomes law the federal government is in dispute with the provinces on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. If this keeps up we will have to amend the bill and put in something of the nature of a golf handicap before it receives royal assent.

Parts VI to IX amend the statutes that establish various councils, such as the Medical Research Council. Senator Marshall has already mentioned this. I am concerned that the councils can decide whom they want to hire and the terms on which they wish to hire these individuals. There is really no reason why, once the council members are appointed by the federal government, the Public Service Commission cannot do the hiring. It could also establish the classification and the salaries. That would put individuals working for various councils on the same basis as the rest of the public service.

I would like to know from the sponsor of the bill how many would be employed by the various councils mentioned in the bill, and the terms of their employment, including their pension benefits.

● (1510)

Part XI of the bill causes me some concern. Last year we caught the Department of Fisheries in some very irregular practices, including vote netting. This section gives the minister authority to transfer funds from one specific purpose to another. Admittedly, it is only for one year, as I understand it, but I would like to hear from the minister the manner in which this authority will be carried out and, in particular, why the minister feels it is necessary.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Guy Williams: Honourable senators, while I support the motion for second reading I do have some doubts about the bill that is before us, and I am reluctant to go along with it in its entirety. Having been connected with the fishing industry for most of my life, I do know a little bit about the problems of the Pacific coast fishermen.

The problems encountered on the Pacific coast differ from those encountered on the Atlantic side of our great country. For instance, there is a problem in connection with herring because the one-, two- and three-year-old herring intermingle, and the herring does not reproduce until it is in its third year. We are catching the one- and two-year-olds and we are, in effect, "killing the goose that lays the golden egg". Not too long ago we fished the herring to near extinction. Some of the Pacific coast fishermen moved to the Atlantic coast and did almost the same thing in those waters.

It is the golden dream of Pacific coast fishermen that one day in our country we will have a Minister of Fisheries to represent the Pacific coast—that is, that we will have two ministers, one representing the west and one representing the east, so that the needs of both fisheries would be met. This would be to the benefit of the industry as a whole.

Somewhere along the line someone made a human error and we lost large schools of herring. The officials did not call upon the fishermen to help locate these schools of herring. Then, overnight, the herring started spawning and the fishermen could not fish them. Now there is a danger that there will be an overspaw in the two main producing areas, and when there is an overspaw it is just as bad as a underspaw which happens when the eggs are deposited on material such as seaweed and rocks, and they are starved of oxygen because of a lack of circulation of water. Underspawning can be avoided. There is far too much remote control of the fisheries from the back rooms and offices when, in fact, people should be out and about trying to understand the environment that exists.

As I have said, I do agree with this bill in principle, but I still have doubts whether this move of taking a great deal away from the Department of Fisheries and moving it into the Department of the Environment is going to be useful.

Senator Grosart: Honourable senators, as I understand it, if Senator Riley rises now his speech will have the effect of closing the debate. I wish to direct a question to him in respect to what he may move in connection with further consideration of this bill. I ask him now if it is his intention to follow the suggestion made by the Deputy Leader of the Government yesterday that this bill go to a Committee of the Whole?

Senator Riley: I will answer that question simply, and in one word, before I speak—no.

Senator Grosart: In that case, honourable senators, I move the adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Senator Grosart, debate adjourned.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

CONSIDERATION OF SIXTH REPORT OF STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the Sixth Report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments which was tabled yesterday.

Hon. Eugene A. Forsey: Honourable senators, this report, as you will doubtless have noticed, has to do, once again, with this hardy perennial of increases in postal rates of somewhat dubious legal validity—and worse than dubious, impropriety. It will not take me very long to deal with it, I think, but I should first of all draw to the attention of honourable senators that in the English version of the report in yesterday's Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate there is a serious error—a whole line has been left out.

[Translation]

One of the advantages of having even a limited knowledge of the other language as I do is to be able to read the French text and correct mistakes which may appear in the English version.

[English]

The omission in the English text comes in the third paragraph of the report at line 5.

Senator Grosart: What page is it, please?

Senator Forsey: It is page 351 of the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate. It should read as follows:

Your Committee deplores the persistent defiance of Parliament by the Crown in the setting of postal rates. Your Committee's objection to the way in which the Crown has proceeded in 1976, in 1978 and again in 1979 is based partly on vires, since the Post Office Act is a special Act—

And then a whole line is omitted. It should continue:

—and the Financial Administration Act, section 13 is a general act—

Then comes the parenthesis:

—(and prior to the Post Office Act as regards the letter rate)—

[Translation]

The French is entirely correct, but the English has that somewhat disastrous omission, shall we say.

● (1520)

[English]

This is an old story, of course. We have had this raising of the postal rates now three times with, as I say, very doubtful legal validity, and with, in the unanimous judgment of the committee, complete impropriety. The validity of the crown's action under section 13 of the Financial Administration Act has been upheld at first instance in the Trial Division of the Federal Court. I think an appeal has been launched. Whether it will be prosecuted I cannot say, though I am afraid it is rather unlikely, as the appeal is being taken by the publishers, who have meanwhile concluded some kind of agreement with the Secretary of State's Department for subsidization of their enterprises, so that the increase in postal rates on newspapers and periodicals will not hit them as it otherwise would. In any event, there is this judgment of the Trial Division of the Federal Court, which upholds the crown's position on the law, though our committee, I think, in general is still very dubious about it, and is inclined to think that on appeal the judgment of the Trial Division might be set aside.

Nonetheless, even if the technical legality can be sustained, the main point is that it is really grossly improper that, when Parliament in a special act sets out the rates, and especially perhaps the letter rates, in detail, specifically and explicitly, this should be overridden by the executive making use of section 13(b) of the Financial Administration Act, which any layman at least would say was really intended to deal with certain matters coming under paragraph (a) of section 13, and which Parliament almost certainly can never have contemplated being used to override the explicit provisions of the Post Office Act.

The situation is made worse, of course, by the fact that the committee has drawn attention to the matter three times. The fourth report, for the 1977-78 session, was unanimously concurred in by both houses. I think I drew this to the attention of the house the other day. It was unanimously concurred in, with at least some of the ministers sitting there and not so much as blinking an eyelid, apparently. The committee felt it was absolutely essential, perhaps especially with the probable near approach of the end of this Parliament, to draw the attention of both houses once again to the impropriety involved in these proceedings, and to ask both houses once again to affirm that impropriety, so that this kind of practice will be discouraged in future, so that at last perhaps the lesson the committee has been trying to teach to the officials and to the ministers will penetrate and will have some effect.

That is why I venture to take up the time of the Senate, even in the present situation, relatively briefly but with great emphasis, in asking you, honourable senators, to concur in the

[Senator Forsey.]

Sixth Report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments. I understand that the same motion is being made in the other place.

On motion of Senator Langlois, debate adjourned.

THE GENTLEMAN USHER OF THE BLACK ROD

MOTION TO APPOINT SPECIAL NOMINATING COMMITTEE—
DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Daniel A. Lang moved, pursuant to notice of Wednesday, March, 7, 1979:

That a special committee of the Senate, consisting of three senators, be appointed to search for and nominate a person to serve as Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod; and

That, notwithstanding rule 66, the committee be composed of the Honourable Senators Flynn, Molson and Perrault.

He said: Honourable senators—

Senator McIlraith: I wonder if I might—

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Is the Honourable Senator McIlraith rising to a point of order?

Senator McIlraith: No, Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to ask the mover a question, because I notice the form of the motion reads: "nominate a person..." I understand that the British North America Act requires the Governor General to exercise the function of appointing the Speaker. Is that correct or not?

Senator Lang: I am not dealing with the Speaker; this motion is with respect to the Black Rod, and with respect to the Black Rod the answer is no: there is no statutory authority. It is done under the royal prerogative. I hope this will become clear during my remarks.

Senator McIlraith: That is the only point I wanted to make.

Senator Lang: Honourable senators, the purpose of my motion today is to bring before you what I consider to be a constitutional anomaly that affects this chamber. By my moving this motion I hope in some way to rectify or mitigate the usage and custom by which the royal prerogative is exercised with respect to the appointment of the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod.

I know honourable senators are all too familiar with the frustrations that have dogged Parliament almost since 1867 in connection with constitutional reform, and particularly the frustrations we have experienced during the last ten years with this government. Please do not think I am suggesting that the subject of this motion is of any magnitude in constitutional terms, but I do think it has a high symbolic significance.

● (1530)

If we are to have any hope of reforming this institution, either internally or externally, we should be able to deal with a matter as close to home as this, representing, as it does, in my opinion, a self-evident anomaly. By doing so, I think we will be taking a very small first step in the direction of reformation.

Honourable senators are aware that there are three officials in this chamber who are appointed by order in council, namely, the Speaker of the Senate, under section 34 of the British North America Act; the Clerk of the Senate, under section 38 of the Public Service Employment Act; and the Black Rod, under no statutory authority, but by virtue of an ancient and long-standing exercise of the royal prerogative.

We, of course, are fully aware that we are facing the imminent dissolution of this Parliament and, based on years of precedent, one can almost predict with certainty that, notwithstanding the outcome of the intervening election, when a new Parliament convenes there will be new incumbents in this chamber in the person of the Speaker and the Black Rod.

Honourable senators, I suggest that, because of the method of appointment that has pertained over the years, we in the Senate will be faced, in fact, with a fait accompli with respect to those appointments and without having had any input as a body as to the selections.

I feel I do not have to say this, but I must put it on the record. My remarks have nothing to do whatsoever with the capacities, abilities and merits of the present Speaker and Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod. I do not think we ever, in our history, have been served so well as we have been by the present Speaker and Black Rod. We are doubly indebted to the Black Rod for staying on, presumably beyond his retirement date, and up and until the dissolution of this Parliament.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Lang: What I am hopeful for is a small first step toward becoming "maître chez nous" in our own chamber.

This afternoon I intend to deal briefly with the office of the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod. It is interesting to note the extent of his responsibilities. First of all, he is responsible for the co-ordination of the protective staff, the pages, the cleaning staff, the maintenance staff, the repair staff, moving staff, barber and other services. Reporting to him with respect to those responsibilities is the Assistant Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod. In addition, of course, we are familiar with the more apparent ceremonial responsibilities carried out by the Black Rod. He has a major responsibility at the opening of Parliament in connection with all ceremonial functions that take place on that date and, of course, he has the day-to-day function of being in this chamber in his capacity as Sergeant-at-Arms, an office that I will refer to in a few moments.

So, we are talking about a job classification which is really and basically very important to us in the chamber. That office affects the quality of all the services that are provided for us. In fact, the Black Rod could really be described as the deputy chief executive officer of this institution. He reports only to the Clerk of the Senate.

I have received a letter which I should like to put on the record. It was written by Mr. Purves of the Research Branch, Library of Parliament. I find the letter very interesting, and feel that it should be placed on the record of this house. I might also add that our Law Clerk, Mr. du Plessis, has gone over the letter and the legal implications therein. He has reported to me that in his opinion they are all correctly stated. The letter reads:

The right to appoint the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod is part of the royal prerogative which in Canada has traditionally been exercised by the Governor General on the advice of the Prime Minister.

The history of the office of Black Rod is an ancient and honourable one going back to the founding of the Order of the Garter in 1361 by Edward III. It was not until the reign of Henry VIII, however, that the Black Rod was made chief of all the Ushers of the Kingdom to have care and custody of all the doors of the "High Court called the Parliament." Since the ancient decree establishing the office says it must be filled by "a gentleman famous in arms and in blood", it is traditionally bestowed on retired officers of the armed forces. In Britain today the appointment is made by the Sovereign after consultation with the "appropriate authorities." These appropriate authorities would certainly include the Lord Chancellor among whose duties is that of presiding over the debates of the House of Lords.

The B.N.A. Act does not refer directly to the appointment of the Black Rod, but its preamble does state the intention that the Canadian Constitution be "similar in principle to that of the United Kingdom." It might be argued therefore that the Crown in right of Canada should also consult the "appropriate authorities" before making the appointment. The Speaker of the Senate, if British practice is followed, would be among the foremost of these authorities.

On the above basis, it would be proper for the Senate to advise the Speaker of a suitable candidate or candidates and to urge the Speaker to raise the issue of the appointment with the "appropriate authorities".

My purpose this afternoon is not to try to bring about immediate constitutional change, even in this small regard, but rather to create a format whereby the Senate as a body can have direct input into the choice of a new Black Rod. In other words, a committee of this house should nominate a person or persons to be considered by the "other authorities" and this nomination should be provided to our Speaker and, through our Speaker, to the "other authorities" in addition to herself.

● (1540)

I submit, honourable senators, that such a nomination could and would be highly regarded by the "other authorities". In fact, I doubt whether the "other authorities" could or would wish to act otherwise than in accordance with such nomination, if that nomination were a unanimous or even a majority recommendation from this chamber. If a nomination from us were so accepted once, and on a further occasion was again so accepted, over the years a constitutional precedent could very well become established and gradually hardened into lex et consuetudo Parliamenti. That, of course, would exemplify the constitutional evolution that has been the hallmark of the Westminster model for a thousand years, and I submit that really basically constitutional reform to be meaningful, lasting and serving its needs, should be accomplished through evolution and not through statutory revolution as exemplified by Bill C-60.

Before closing, honourable senators, I should like to trespass on your time for a few more moments to draw to your attention two speeches that were given in this chamber on another occasion. I discovered these quite accidentally when I was researching the matter in question, and I thought they were too priceless not to pass on to you, and particularly because they rather exemplify the cement shoes into which we seem to be hardened in this chamber with regard to any change whatsoever. I might also add that I discovered that there was a debate in this house on May 6, 1868, and the motion before the house at that time was as follows:

That it is desirable that the Senate should have the selection of its own Speaker at the opening of each Parliament, and whenever a vacancy shall occur.

I suggest, honourable senators, that it would be worthwhile if all honourable senators read that debate for its historic value and for the rather amusing asides coming from the other senators. Eventually the motion was withdrawn, the argument being that the union was only a few months old, we hardly knew where we were going, we had not had any experience under the system and it was desirable "to put it off until the next session and then we will get it cleared up."

Senator Langlois: Who was the mover?

Senator Lang: Mr. Letellier de St. Just.

Now, honourable senators, I would like to turn for a moment to Hansard of 1926. I was trying to trace the evolution of the office of Sergeant-at-Arms in this chamber, and I found that initially at Confederation the Black Rod was also the Sergeant-at-Arms. Somewhere in between 1867 and 1926 those two responsibilities were divided, and in 1926 the Internal Economy Committee brought in a report which recommended the abolition of the office of Sergeant-at-Arms, and argued that his responsibilities could very well be carried out by Black Rod.

Senator Poirier, remarking upon this motion, said:

I notice also that the position of the Sergeant-at-Arms is to be abolished. To an old timer, and I happen to be one of them, this is regrettable. This position is abolished, I suppose, on the assumption that we are all inoffensive, and that no danger can possibly arise from the ire of any of us. That may be a mistake, honourable gentlemen. I remember several occasions, one especially, when but for the intervention of the Sergeant-at-Arms there might have been serious happenings in the Senate. I refer to the time when a fight was threatening between Mr. Ross and Mr. Millar, when one of them was called a toothless old serpent. If it had not been for the interference of the Sergeant-at-Arms and the display of his sword, we do not know what might have happened.

HON. MR. DANIEL: Is that the time there was a reference to a toothless old viper?

[Senator Lang.]

HON. MR. POIRIER: Yes, that is the word that was used.

I think it is regrettable that the office of Sergeant-at-Arms should be abolished—not that the Mace Bearer does not do the work very gracefully; he is an ornament to the job; but we are abolishing what exists in the House of Lords, of which we are supposed to be a reflection. Since titles are formed for purposes, I would rather have the gentleman who carries the Mace called the Sergeant-at-Arms, and have that ornamental position retained in the Senate.

HON. MR. McMEANS: The Senate is going to be abolished anyway.

Honourable senators, if I may be, with your leave, entirely irrelevant, a few remarks were made by Senator Willoughby and Senator Dandurand in that same year concerning the decor of the Senate chamber.

HON. MR. WILLOUGHBY: As we are speaking of paintings, I should like to say that when I first came into this Chamber, or shortly afterwards, the suggestion was made in certain quarters that possibly the war paintings that now adorn our walls would be replaced by others. We all know that there is a very large number of war paintings that have never found wall space anywhere, but I do not know whether anything has been done in regard to that suggestion or not.

HON. MR. DANDURAND: I understand that those paintings were put here temporarily... Of course, I have postponed taking up this question because of the state of our treasury; but, as finances are looking buoyant, I hope that before the end of this Parliament we shall have shown such a constant stream of surpluses that we may go into the proper expenditure for this building.

I thought, honourable senators, that Senator Connolly (Ottawa West) would be interested in that observation, particularly in view of his chairmanship of the Special Committee on the Clerestory of the Senate Chamber.

Honourable senators, I shall conclude now by returning to the motion. I recognize that we are under a time constraint and that dissolution might be upon us at any time. I am completely amenable to any amendment that any senator might wish to put forward as to the content or the wording of this motion, or any additions that might be suitably included. If this motion is adopted it would be a small but first step towards reform in this chamber. And perhaps even with such a small step we might just achieve enough momentum to carry us on to deal with more important and substantive reforms.

● (1550)

Senator Grosart: Honourable senators, may I ask one question of the honourable senator who has made the motion? Is the exercise of this particular prerogative of the Crown in any way enshrined—if I may use that word—in an order in council or other non-statutory instrument?

Senator Lang: The Black Rod is appointed by order in council, but there is no statutory authority for such order in council. The only authority is the prerogative of the Crown.

Senator Grosart: May I suggest that that does not answer my question. I did not ask whether there was statutory authority for an order in council, but whether this was enshrined by order in council, as many prerogatives of the Crown are. I am not speaking to the merit of his suggestion, but merely put the question for clarification.

Senator Lang: Every Black Rod in the history of this country has been appointed by order in council, and his salary fixed under that order in council. If that is enshrining a prerogative in an order in council, then I guess that is enshrining a prerogative; but there is no mention of prerogative in the order in council itself.

On motion of Senator Langlois, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, March 15, 1979

• (1400)

The Senate met at 2 p.m., Hon. Maurice Bourget, P.C., Speaker, pro tem, in the Chair.

Prayers.

BANKS AND BANKING LAW REVISION

REPORT OF BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE
TABLED AND PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Senator Hayden: Honourable senators, I desire to table the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce on the subject matter of Bill C-15, intituled: "An Act to revise the Bank Act, to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act and the Bank of Canada Act, to establish the Canadian Payments Association and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof."

I would ask that the report be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day to form part of the permanent records of this house.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

[For text of report see appendix.]

NOTICE OF MOTION

Senator Hayden: Honourable senators, I should like to give notice now that on Monday next, March 19, I will call the attention of the Senate to the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce on the subject matter of Bill C-15, intituled: "An Act to revise the Bank Act, to amend the Quebec Savings Bank Act and the Bank of Canada Act, to establish the Canadian Payments Association and to amend other acts in consequence thereof."

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, I would now ask for leave to revert later this day to Notices of Motions. Perhaps I could explain my reasons for seeking leave at this moment. We are planning to have royal assent some time today—preferably at 5.45 p.m. or, if not then, at 9.45 p.m.—for whatever pieces of legislation may be disposed of this afternoon. We have before us Bill C-35, respecting the organization of the government, and also Bill C-29, relating to housing.

If we do not have royal assent at 5.45 p.m., we shall endeavour to have it at 9.45 p.m. If we do not have it then, we shall have royal assent tomorrow morning. There is a strong possibility that we may have to adjourn the Senate until 11 a.m. tomorrow and have royal assent tomorrow. I am asking for leave to revert to Notices of Motions later this day.

Senator Flynn: It all depends on what the motion is. I should like to know what the motion will be. The Senate can sit this afternoon and it can sit tonight. There is no problem with that.

Senator Langlois: If we cannot complete today the two bills that I have mentioned, we may have to postpone royal assent until some time tomorrow. I wanted to delay the adjournment motion until I knew what was in store for us tomorrow.

● (1410)

Senator Flynn: If the object is to have these two bills passed today and assented to today, I see no problem.

Senator Langlois: We do not know. As the day develops, other legislation may come from the other place. According to my information, there is a strong possibility of that.

Senator Flynn: According to my information, there is no possibility of that.

Senator Langlois: I would not criticize your source of information, because it might be better informed than mine, but I have to rely on whatever information I have.

Senator Flynn: You can always ask for leave to revert to Motions.

Senator Langlois: That is what I am doing.

Senator Flynn: It depends on the motion you are going to put.

Senator Langlois: I am asking for leave to revert to Motions later this day.

Senator Flynn: I will give leave when you ask.

Senator Langlois: I am making my motion now because it could be otherwise if situations do not develop as I hope they will.

Honourable senators, I move that when the Senate adjourns today, it do stand adjourned until tomorrow, Friday, March 16, 1979 at 11 o'clock in the forenoon.

That is the motion I am putting now if I cannot have leave to revert to Motions later this day, because of situations developing in this place and the other place.

Senator Flynn: Leave is not granted at this time.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: I should like to know where I stand. The best solution would be to wait until later this day.

Senator Flynn: That is why I say leave is not granted at this time.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: I am in your hands.

Senator Langlois: I ask that leave be granted to revert to Motions later this day.

Senator Flynn: When the motion is put I will grant leave. That is my point. Just leave it for the time being.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: I shall wait before putting the question.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

COMPATIBILITY OF NEW HOSPITAL CHARGES IN ONTARIO WITH FEDERAL LEGISLATION—QUESTION

Senator Haidasz: Honourable senators, on February 14 I asked the Leader of the Government whether the cabinet was studying or had taken any steps to ensure that the provisions of the Hospital and Diagnostic Services Act and the Medicare Act would be accessible to all the people of Ontario at uniform standards. I ask this question again in view of deterrent fees, extra charges, and the great numbers of physicians opting out of certain provincial medical plans.

Senator Langlois: I will take that question as notice.

● (1415)

ST. PATRICK'S DAY

TRIBUTES TO ST. PATRICK AND THE IRISH PEOPLE

Senator Grosart: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day, and because of the present uncertain circumstances with regard to the sitting of the Senate and, indeed, of the Parliament of Canada, for the remainder of the week, may I be permitted to draw the attention of the Senate to the fact that Saturday is the greatest day in the year, St. Patrick's Day.

Senator Phillips: Did you never hear of St. David's Day?

Senator Grosart: The Senate has a special eminence in this regard, since it has more Irish-born members than the other place. It is a distinction which is no doubt responsible for the survival of the Senate, and for its prospects in the future.

Senator Flynn: Did you say "survival" or "revival"?

Senator Grosart: To some, on Saturday, will be recalled the sounds of the winds and the waters of Ireland, its folk songs and folklore, its larks and its linnets, and the green and the orange of Ireland. There will be many of us who will be praying that the day will come when the green and the orange in Ireland will again be united to create there the only Celtic nation in the world, where the Irish language and the Irish culture—the culture of the great Gaels of Ireland, and indeed, the culture that the smaller Gaels of Scotland took from us—still remain.

Honourable senators, I believe it is appropriate that the importance and the greatness of this day be called to the attention of the Senate of Canada on this occasion.

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, on behalf of those of my colleagues who have the very fortunate advantage of being married to a spouse of Irish descent—and this is my own situation—I support entirely what the Honourable the Deputy Leader of the Opposition has just said.

Senator Thompson: Honourable senators, I feel that I cannot be outdone by my colleague. There may have been the odd small occasion when we have disagreed with the honourable senator; nevertheless on this occasion of St. Patrick's Day and in view of the eloquence with which he has espoused that great cause, every senator will concur wholeheartedly with him. As one of the smaller Gaels, I should say this, that St. Patrick himself, as we do not admit very often, really did not come from Ireland. The fact is that he had an unfortunate period in Ireland as a captive, but later, on his return, in the true spirit of the Irish, he was taken to their bosom. The Irish have since spread that kind of generosity throughout the world. I say to all, whether Irish or not, "Enjoy the spirit of St. Patrick's Day to the fullest extent."

● (1420)

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION BILL, 1979

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the debate on the motion of Senator Riley for the second reading of Bill C-35, respecting the organization of the Government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, in the same happy spirit in which I made my earlier remarks, I want to congratulate Senator Riley for his introduction of this important bill. I asked him yesterday if it was the intention to refer the bill to a Committee of the Whole. I believe his answer today would be "yes." If that is so, it will considerably shorten my remarks on the motion for second reading.

May I ask the honourable senator if it is his intention to move that the bill be referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Senator Riley: Honourable senators, yesterday I said no. I wanted to say yes. Today I am saying yes.

Senator Grosart: I know that Senator Riley has a very important engagement in Saint John on Friday, and in light of that it is our hope that we can pass this bill today.

My comments on Bill C-35, most of which will be made to the minister and his officials once the measure is referred to a Committee of the Whole, will revolve around the fact that this is an omnibus bill. There are those of us who object to this kind of legislation. Having said that, I know that there is a rationale for it, given the slowness of the parliamentary process, the legislative process, particularly in the other place.

It is worth noting that in this one bill we are dealing with the establishment of a new department of the Government of Canada, a new ministry; a new mandate for another department, the Department of the Environment; the crown corporation, Canadian Patents and Development Limited, which handles Canadian patents; the Representation Commissioner and the Chief Electoral Officer; the Medical Research Council, the new councils established largely as a response to the recommendations of the Lamontagne committee; and, finally, parliamentary secretaries. All these various bodies and officials are being dealt with in one omnibus bill.

It must occur to honourable senators that there is surely a better way to deal with these matters than simply to throw them all into one bill simply because some of the headings covered happen to come under another act of Parliament, the Government Organization Act.

Some of us recall the good old days when the mandate of any department of government was to be found in an act incorporating the name of that department. That seemed to be the obvious way of handling it. Anyone wishing to see the mandate, the authority, the powers of any department of government today would have to search through so many different acts it would soon prove an impossible task for anyone but a lawyer. That is the situation. I am not now attempting to suggest what the alternative is, except to say that I believe there must be an alternative. Perhaps during consideration by the Committee of the Whole there will be some suggestions in that regard.

It is true that perhaps the most important provisions in this bill refer to a particular department—a new department to be set up with, to some extent, new functions. This was dealt with by the sponsor of the bill, and by Senator Marshall yesterday. I believe we are to have the minister of that department before us in Committee of the Whole, and I am given to understand that, in this rather anomalous situation, the minister will have with him officials from other departments to answer any questions we wish to ask. I hope that will be the situation, but it makes one wonder about our much-flaunted devotion to the concept of responsible government, and whether it is not a denial of that concept to have before us a minister giving evidence who has no responsibility whatsoever for many of the matters to which we will direct our questions. It is about time for somebody to give reconsideration to the operative functioning of the concept of responsible government in our parliamentary system.

● (1425)

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Riley: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Riley speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on second reading of the bill.

Senator Riley: Honourable senators, I intended to answer some of the queries that were directed to me by Senators Marshall and Phillips, but having regard to the motion that I am going to put before this chamber, I know they will forgive me for not doing so. I want to congratulate them very sincerely on the manner in which they spoke, sometimes critically, on this bill. Since the minister will be appearing before us, if the house so approves, those questions can be directed to him, and I think they would be better answered by the minister.

[Senator Grosart.]

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Riley: Honourable senators, I now move, seconded by the Honourable Senator Connolly (Ottawa West), that the bill be committed to a Committee of the Whole presently.

Motion agreed to.

● (1430)

The Senate was accordingly adjourned during pleasure and put into a Committee of the Whole on the bill, the Honourable Joan Neiman in the Chair.

Pursuant to rule 18 of the Rules of the Senate, the Honourable Roméo A. LeBlanc, P.C., Minister of Fisheries and the Environment, was escorted to a seat in the Senate Chamber.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, we are now in Committee of the Whole.

Senator Riley: Madam Chairman, I wonder if I could have permission to sit in the front near the minister.

The Chairman: Is it agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, we are dealing with Bill C-35. Shall the title of the bill be postponed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Before going through the clauses individually, perhaps it would be appropriate to welcome the minister.

Senator Marshall: I wonder, Madam Chairman, if I might be permitted to welcome the Minister of Fisheries to the Senate.

An Hon. Senator: Do you mean permanently?

Senator Marshall: I hope the minister read the speech I made yesterday in which I commended him and his staff, and also those members of the Department of External Affairs who, at the Law of the Sea Conference, were instrumental in helping the Minister of Fisheries and the Minister of External Affairs to achieve Canada's 200-mile zone.

I do not want the minister to become over-confident or to be overcome by the kind things that were said about him yesterday, but I must say I am happy that we will now have a separate Department of Fisheries. We have been striving for that separate entity for many years now.

I am in accord to some degree with the direction the minister has been taking, and, certainly, there is Canada-wide support for his direction of effort.

● (1435)

Even though this is an organization bill and does not deal directly with policy, I should like to know if the minister recognizes the lack of funding necessary to provide infrastructure support for the fishermen and to review the licensing. Newfoundlanders wonder at the quota system; they wonder at the fact that licences are being restricted in order to replenish the stock. Could the minister advise us if there is any hope for a larger budget in order to provide to the fishermen those facilities that will indeed support further exploitation and potential prosperity?

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: Honourable senators, first of all, please allow me to thank you for your kind words of welcome. Although I have not read them in Hansard, I am sure Senator Marshall's words were, as usual, kind and gentle, but perceptive. Our old friendship from the other place enables me to say this to him without any kind of afterthoughts.

I appreciate Senator Marshall's support for the bill and the separation of the department, and in fact the highlighting of fisheries as an area of very major concern, which should probably not surprise us, since this goes way back to the decision of the Fathers of Confederation to make fisheries a federal jurisdiction.

I, too, regret that spending restraints do not allow me to have as large a budget as I would sometimes like to have, especially for such things as small craft harbours and infrastructures for fishermen. Although my predecessor started a program that went from an average of $8 to $11 million to over $30 million a year, with the help of Canada Works and other programs we have, in fact, been averaging $38 to $39 million for the last three years in facilities for docking, marinas, and so on.

On licensing, honourable senators will remember that the licensing study is now under way, under the direction of Cliff Levelton, one of my most experienced officials, who has now retired. We hope to have this report by the middle of April. It will then be the subject of consultation with fishermen and their organizations. I recognize that the whole area of licensing is one where greater and greater pressure is being exerted on the resource because of good prices and good returns to fishermen. Our hope is that fishing will not become an occupation of last resort, a sort of catch-all for all economic difficulties, but, in fact, a lifelong search for employment and development.

I might tell the Senate that I was amazed in Prince Rupert, British Columbia, to be told by the school principal that the number of dropouts from high school who are going into fishing was worrying the education authorities. I find there are some consolations in that fact, in spite of my worries about education.

Senator Marshall: With the separation of fisheries and the environment, I think we have to admit that there will still be a relationship. I am concerned about one thing. I wonder if the minister and his officials have considered the fact that we are striving too much towards offshore oil, which could be at the expense of the fishery. For example, off the coast of Labrador many companies are given permits to explore for oil, and with the exploration and greed that is shown one oil spill could destroy all the work we have been doing and all the effort we have been directing towards the fishery. I wonder if consideration is being given to this by the minister's department or by interdepartmental committees. Has he realized this? Is any consideration being given to the problems that could occur?

● (1440)

What action is being taken by way of his interest in preventing oil spills which could destroy a whole industry that could become so prosperous?

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Chairman, a week-and-a-half ago I was present at the official opening of Patricia Bay Institute of Ocean Studies. Bedford Institute, in Halifax, is doing a great deal of work in planning for possible oil disasters. I might say that the licensing of drilling operations offshore are closely watched and monitored by my department and the Department of the Environment.

As honourable senators might know, in the Beaufort Sea it is very much the judgment of environmentalists which indicates at what time drilling should be interrupted in order to leave leeway in case of disaster.

Off the coast of Labrador we have improved our capacity to prevent accidents. We have had to invest a fair amount in improving the hydrography of the zone, and I have every reason to believe that we are as careful as we can humanly be. That being said, in spite of all our efforts, should an oil spill occur, the capacity to deal with it, and the fund to compensate those affected by an oil spill, et cetera, are very much matters of public record.

One element we have which is limiting our efforts is that the International Law of the Sea Conference in areas dealing with marine pollution is not advancing as fast as we would like to see, but even if we were to go beyond the international law régime and promulgate regulations under the 200-mile zone, the fact is that many spills can occur more than 200 miles from the coast and drift in, so it is an ever-present danger, an ever-present problem.

We are not yet satisfied with the weight of international law dealing with these matters, but we are pushing in this direction at the International Law of the Sea Conference.

Senator Marshall: I should move along to another concern across the country, and particularly in Atlantic Canada—the poaching of salmon and lobster. I wonder, now that the minister has his own department, if he could influence the government in providing more funds to protect salmon rivers and to avoid further poaching and deterioration of our salmon stock to the point where it has become almost a calamity. I am sure he recognizes that in his own province of New Brunswick.

It has got to a stage where there does not seem to be any danger to the poachers, and I hope I can impress on him the importance of increasing the protection of those salmon rivers by increasing the number of river guardians, wardens and others.

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Chairman, the problem appears to be less one of money than one of staff—the man-years available to do the work.

We have had discussions with provincial governments. In fact, very recently I had a most productive meeting with the Province of New Brunswick, and we have agreed to combine their personnel in the area of conservation of wildlife and ours. This should go some way. The reality is that we have many tasks to undertake, and in the present mood in which growth of government is constantly challenged, a department such as mine, which is very heavily outside Ottawa, is obviously prone to having its activities limited.

The value of the species mentioned, particularly salmon and lobster, does accentuate the problem because more people want to try to make a fast buck by illegal operations. I might say that legislation passed by Parliament a couple of years ago, which provides for increased penalties and seizure and forfeiture of equipment used in illegal fishing, is beginning to bring some focus on the issue. In fact, the forfeiture of a half-ton truck for what is still basically a fairly minor violation appears as a very severe penalty, and it has been imposed. This has a deterrent effect.

The most promising development, however, has come from the fishermen themselves. To take the subject of lobster, fishermen have now started their own protection scheme, aided and assisted by the department through equipment and money. In Prince Edward Island last year, there was a most productive experiment conducted in which fishermen in every port elected their own protection committee, and made it clear to poachers that the majority wanted to have a clean fishery and that poaching would not be tolerated. The estimate is that some 80 per cent of poaching disappeared. This is a promising development, and I understand other fishermen's organizations in the maritimes are looking at a similar plan.

Senator Molson: I wonder if I could ask a supplementary question respecting salmon? As a matter of fact, I have two questions.

What steps have been taken to establish the degree of damage being done by the interception of maritime salmon—salmon destined for Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Quebec rivers—on the north shore of Newfoundland, and what progress has been made in dealing with the Indians concerning their share of the salmon on our Atlantic seaboard.

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: Mr. Chairman, the figures on what the honourable senator calls “interception” go anywhere from 25 per cent to 40 per cent. I suspect it depends on where the discussion takes place—on one side of the strait or the other. The fact is that it is quite substantial.

There is no doubt that the Newfoundland commercial fishermen who continue the commercial pursuit of salmon would look with great disfavour on any reduction of their effort, just as we, as a nation, looked with great disfavour on what we considered over-fishing by Greenlanders some years ago. It is a matter of finding a balance between competing groups in different provinces, and the question of provincial jurisdiction has to be considered.

On the subject of the fishing of salmon by Indians, honourable senators know that we have in our list of priorities established, as a first requirement, conservation, the replenishing of the resource; secondly, the food fishery of the native people; thirdly, the commercial fishery; and fourthly the sports fishery. I suspect that I should put the third and fourth very close together.

The fact is that we recognize the very important privilege—some would define it as a right—of the Indians, who have traditionally fished for their sustenance, to have access to the resource. The problem arises when the food fishery is interpreted by some to be a semi-commercial fishery, and that is why we have put in stringent regulations respecting the sale of Indian food fish to non-Indians and the amount and level of that catch. We have had difficult negotiations with Indians on both coasts. I think in some cases a more reasonable régime appears possible.

● (1450)

On the west coast, approximately 11 to 15 per cent of fishermen—I would have to look at the latest figures—are native Indians. They are commercial fishermen. On the east coast they are singularly absent from the fishery, and, as such, take one very clear position with regard to food fishery, and are not as vocal in the promotion of conservation as we might like them to be.

I might say that the past couple of years have been very trying, the native people having used as a pressure point the food fishery in order to promote and argue other rights. As Minister of Fisheries I have always refused to become involved in that discussion, my point being that my responsibility is to conserve the fish and to manage the industry as well as possible.

It is an area in which all elements, native and non-native, will have to decide if they want to practise good conservation, and there is no way that one part of the fishery can be unregulated. That point I have made very clear to the Indian leaders with whom I have had meetings.

Senator Marshall: Each year we know for a fact that just as sure as the seal hunt starts there will be ice restricting fishermen from getting to the grounds. We know for certain that there are incidents when fishermen face danger in going offshore to fish. There seems to be a lack of lifeboat bases, particularly in Atlantic Canada. Even though this is partly the responsibility of the Ministry of Transport—the coast guard—are there any plans to try to improve the icebreaker service. The minister knows how many calls we get each year, on the same date at the same time, asking for icebreaker service, and there are not enough ships. Are there any plans to increase the icebreaker capability, and to deploy icebreakers near the area where the incidents occur?

Also, can he advise us of any plans, in consultation with MOT, or the Department of National Defence, for improving their search and rescue capability and the deployment of that capability near the fishing industry; and also of plans regarding the improvement, expansion and deployment of more lifeboat bases in order to avoid the serious incidents that occur?

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Chairman, the problem of moving ice, which constitutes a hazard to fishermen and an interruption of their activity, is one with which we have had to live for many years. We have, as a result of ice reconnaissance, been able to predict ice movement much more accurately. I might say that some of the satellite utilization that I have seen seems to promise that in future we shall have a much better prediction of where ice movement will take place. The fact is that there is no way that we can avoid the problem completely.

Concerning the matter of icebreakers, I am afraid that I am not as knowledgeable on that subject as I would like to be. I know that the cabinet has authorized the replacement of one unit by a modern, very strong unit, and that at present the icebreakers are playing an important role for us in the management of the seal fishery off the northeast coast of Labrador and Newfoundland.

With regard to lifeboats and search and rescue, that area is one where I believe considerable progress has been made. Honourable senators may recall that a few years ago, particularly around the herring roe season which is now on in British Columbia, there was an unusually large number of disasters. As a result, the three main departments involved—the coast guard of the Ministry of Transport, National Defence, and ourselves—pooled all their information, material and the equipment, and got the regions to work together. Since then there has been considerable improvement in our ability to respond, and also in the upgrading of equipment. For example, the on-the-spot location at Gander of helicopters from DND is a considerable improvement.

Obviously there are disasters with which we are unable to cope because they take place in completely uncontrollable circumstances; but in that area, as Minister of Fisheries, I am quite satisfied that our fishermen are better served. The fact is that we have not been able to prevent all disasters. I am thinking of a couple which have occurred during the past couple of years. For example, this year, in the British Columbia herring fishery, there have been 12 incidents so far. One good aspect, however, is that the fishermen are fishing close to each other, and I do not think there has been any loss of life so far—at least, not due, I understand, to marine accidents.

Senator Marshall: With regard to lifeboat bases, there is a chart in the Ministry of Transport showing the deployment and location of those bases. Three or four years ago I pointed out to the then minister, Senator Marchand, that there was a space on the west coast of Newfoundland and the Gulf of St. Lawrence, between Port aux Basques and St. Anthony, a distance of approximately 350 miles, where there was not one lifeboat base. That is a precarious area which should be looked at, and I hope the minister will do so.

In order to avoid dragging out this sitting, because we are dealing with an organization bill rather than one on policy, I shall put my final question. It will be in two parts. It has to do with the difference of opinion between the provincial ministers of fisheries on the Atlantic coast and the federal minister on the build-up and expansion of the fishing fleet. The minister will recall that there was a request for many millions of dollars to provide large trawlers to compete offshore. There is also the question concerning the justification for and the danger of entering into too many joint ventures with foreign nations. I was surprised when, on January 1, 1976, there were headlines in the papers that if we did not extend our fishing limit to 200 miles, the fishing industry was finished, that it would become obsolete. The next day we extended our fishing limit to 200 miles and a few days later we were talking about joint ventures with foreign nations—the very people we chased out.

Can the minister rationalize the seeming increase in the effort toward that end, not forgetting the need to build up our own forces and our own fleet in order to take advantage of the offshore resource that we hope exists plentifully?

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Chairman, the honourable senator is tempting me to repeat some of my speeches. However, I will try to resist that temptation. On the matter of fleet build-up and expansion, I suppose the enthusiasm of the declaration of the 200-mile limit was followed by a period of euphoria, in which, I suspect, a lot of people—and certainly very sincere people—thought that by putting a line on the map we were automatically going to dramatically increase the stocks and level of the catch. The fact is that it was not even a year ago that we completely stopped paying subsidies to fishing enterprises, which had not been economical since 1974. Those enterprises in trouble the longest were the larger elements of the fleet, the larger trawlers.

● (1500)

The 200-mile zone gives us an opportunity to manage carefully. The stock recovery in some areas—and I am thinking specifically of the Gulf of St. Lawrence and the Scotian shelf—is going to be relatively slow. We will see the most dramatic growth on the northeast coast and off Labrador, and it is estimated that by 1985 we will go from the current 170,000 tonnes to some 400,000 tonnes. This gives you a dimension of the possible build-up of expansion. Even at that, we have to be careful not to create large fishing fleets that require fishing inshore or close to shore. That is why we indicated clearly that this was our priority. It was also unwise to allow fleet expansion at a time when the catch rate was still beyond economic profitability. So it is really to give them a chance to catch much more fish that we are holding the line fairly tight on fleet development. That having been said, the time has come to sit down to look at gradual expansion.

Honourable senators, you might be interested to know that the three major companies on the east coast are applying for replacement of older units in their fleets with modern trawlers which would be ice reinforced and which would, in fact, prolong their season. This would enable them to exploit the resource on the northeast coast and off Labrador. If this occurs, and it will as far as I can see, it may mean that the question of freezer trawlers will be much less acute in many people's minds.

I know that in Newfoundland the industry is having some real second thoughts about the wisdom of freezer trawlers, given their expense and given the fact that they need a lot of fish to be economical over a minimum of 300 days a year.

On the subject of foreign presence in the zone, we are now taking almost 85 per cent of all fish in the zone and outside the zone for which we have markets. Senators from Newfoundland know very well that a lot of the Atlantic interest resides on the tail of the Banks and, in fact, outside the 200-mile zone. For this reason, we are not taking a "dog in the manger" attitude with respect to foreign fishing interest. The Law of the Sea Conference states that surplus stocks be made available to other nations. We have attached some conditions, not only on licensing fees but on what we call commensurate benefit in terms of market access, and so forth. However, this is an area in which progress is rather slow.

Dealing with charters, there are species, specifically offshore squid, which were hardly utilized a few years ago and which are now becoming attractive and can only be caught by freezer trawlers. Freezer trawlers under the Canadian flag and owned by Canadians must be kept busy. If they are purchased rather than chartered, or if there is no joint venture, you will end up having a lot of capacity that is underutilized. It is for this reason that we have taken a cautious approach. There have been some joint ventures, some on an experimental basis, in which temporary utilization of freezer trawler was made possible by charters. We have tried to move cautiously in this area, and we think the most desirable route is still for Canadians to catch Canadian fish.

Senator Grosart: Madam Chairman, I have two questions on the clause dealing with the short title. Would the minister inform the Senate the reason the short title is the "Government Organization Act, 1978"? It seems that under the provisions of the bill the reorganization would take place in 1979.

The Chairman: My copy reads: "Government Organization Act, 1979."

Senator Grosart: The copy I have distinctly says 1978.

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: The bill was amended by the House of Commons committee.

Senator Grosart: Has an estimation been made of the total appropriation of public revenue that would be required to implement the provisions of the bill, and, if so, are those amounts provided for either in supplementary estimates (B) or in the main estimates for 1979-80?

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Chairman, for the two departments that will be created, the Department of the Environment and the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, there is no additional amount required. The combined budget for the two departments is being separated. In fact, administratively, it was separate before. There was really only one area, called Central Services, which required separation.

[Hon. Mr. LeBlanc.]

The fisheries program budget as set out in the estimates for 1979-80 is $290 million. That is the part of the Department of Fisheries and the Environment which would be moved over and become a new department. Basically, we are displacing blocks and reorganizing them but not increasing them.

Senator Grosart: I asked the question because of the vice regal recommendation—the ways and means recommendation. Is there an estimated increase in the total appropriations due to the requirements of the bill as it is before us?

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Chairman, without looking to the exact meaning of every word Senator Grosart used, my answer would be that there would be no increase. In fact, I suspect there will be a small decrease, because the subsidy program I mentioned earlier was discontinued in October 1978. That is not reflected in the estimates.

Senator Grosart: Madam Chairman, I was referring to all parts of the bill and not merely to Part I.

• (1510)

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Chairman, I am told by the drafter of the bill that on the other sections, besides the fisheries, the answer is no. On the environment we have just checked very quickly, and there is also a modest decrease in that area.

Senator Rowe: I would like to refer to the question asked by Senator Marshall earlier, regarding the relationship between oil drilling and potential oil spills, and the ecology of the fisheries.

Recently I had a discussion with a scientist who knows a great deal about marine biology. He pointed out something to me that I had never heard mentioned before, and which certainly had not occurred to me. He told me—and I am hoping you may be able to give us the opinion of the scientists in your department on this matter—that in his view the dangers from oil spills and from drilling and related matters has been grossly exaggerated. He pointed out that during the five-year period of World War II hundreds, and perhaps thousands, of oil tankers were torpedoed, many in ecologically sensitive areas of the world. I am familiar with the things that went on on the Grand Banks off Newfoundland. Many scores of tankers were torpedoed, and the oil spilled during that five-year period, and the same thing happened in Icelandic waters and the North Sea and the approaches thereto. These are all very important and sensitive fishing areas.

My question is twofold. First, has any assessment ever been made of the damage done to fisheries as a result of the five-year period of World War II, when there were so many more spills than anything we have experienced in our time, in spite of the difference in the size of the tankers concerned? Secondly, is there any opinion among scientists as to the actuality of the damage to fish? I am not talking now about damage to the tourist trade or sea birds, or in other areas of the ecology, but to the fisheries themselves. Has the damage, or potential damage, been overestimated or exaggerated?

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Chairman, that is a formidable question, because I can see the potential for very negative headlines, whichever way I answer. The fact is that since we are in a world of electronic journalism—and Senator Rowe's point is well taken—I suspect that as a result of being more dramatic and colourful in terms of television the probability is that oil spills and oil tanker disasters have become somewhat exaggerated, though only in comparison, I must say right away, to other things.

If I recall correctly, the title of one of the first books to deal with the question of ecological disasters was Rachel Carson's book, The Silent Spring. The choice of the word "silent" in the title appears to me to be rather significant, since the world of chemicals is probably one which worries scientists in some ways more than the world of petroleum, although in the case of shellfish we have seen, as a result of the Chedabucto Bay disaster, that long lasting damage results, and I would not want to underplay it.

The other point that has to be made in terms of danger to fisheries is with regard to the destruction of habitat and spawning grounds. Here I am thinking of species such as salmon. My own theory is that we have probably been damaging our salmon rivers for over a century as a result of some of our industrial activities, such as the deposit of bark, et cetera, from logging operations. These have probably impoverished the milieux in which the eggs are hatched and the fish feed for a period of time before going to the high seas.

I would probably put the destruction of the habitat by chemicals slightly above destruction by oil spills in terms of long-term damage. In the case of the habitat, the damage is permanent. As far as chemicals are concerned, we only have to look at the number of types of fishing that we no longer pursue, and have not pursued for a number of years, as in the case of swordfish and others, because of the problems arising from the use of chemicals.

Without really taking sides completely, Senator Rowe's point, as I say, is well taken; that is to say, that since they are more dramatic, oil spills have probably tended to take up more space in the news than other problems. Nevertheless, the other problems are also terribly serious.

Senator Phillips: Yesterday I referred to the meeting between the minister and his counterparts in the Atlantic provinces and Quebec, when he was establishing the cod quota for the Atlantic provinces. Could the minister please advise us as to the total quota set, how the original allocation was made, and the allocation that was announced after the meeting?

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Chairman, the quota alluded to by Senator Phillips must be the northern cod quota; that is, the quota of Newfoundland-Labrador, which is set—and I stand to be corrected on this—by a few thousand more or less at 170,000 or 175,000 tonnes, of which 12,000 tonnes would not be taken by Canadian inshore fishermen, or by Canadian offshore vessels. At the moment, roughly 100,000 tonnes are allocated to inshore fishermen, some 25,000 to 30,000 tonnes are allocated to large Canadian trawlers, some 25,000 tonnes are allocated to foreign fishing enterprises, and 12,000 tonnes are there for Canada to take but for which we probably do not have the capacity, and for which amount no one would want to buy a vessel.

We then said that if we could have this fish caught and frozen, and delivered to plants which are short of supplies in other parts of the Atlantic provinces, two things would be achieved: it would help them with the low throughput, and would also test—and this is a very important fact—whether or not the freezing and importing into plants and reprocessing is economical. On this basis, we said that 12,000 tonnes could be made available.

We looked at the applications of many companies, large and small, in the maritimes and Newfoundland, who were asking for some of this supply, and the breakdown came to roughly 5,000 tonnes to Newfoundland, 5,000 to the maritimes, and 2,000 to Quebec. The ministers of these provinces, and the federal minister, met in Halifax. The minister for Newfoundland did not agree that this was a proper sharing of the 12,000 tonnes. He made a very strong statement outside the meeting—and for that reason I can refer to his position in the meeting, which was a closed one—to the effect that Newfoundland had claimed all of the 12,000 tonnes, although he left the door slightly ajar.

● (1520)

Only the Minister of Fisheries for the Province of Newfoundland took a very strong position. One other provincial minister expressed some reservation. The other three provincial ministers neither supported the position I put on the table nor attacked the position taken by Newfoundland's Minister of Fisheries. In the absence of any consensus, I was left with no alternative but to try to make a judgment based on other criteria, and the main criterion was traditional fishing patterns.

That term, by the way, is often used in discussions of concurrent or provincial jurisdiction. On the basis of that criterion, 9,000 tonnes would go to Newfoundland, 2,500 tonnes to the maritimes, and 500 tonnes to Quebec. That seemed to be the wisest course to follow, and that is the course I took.

Senator Phillips: For your information, Mr. Minister, yesterday, in a rare moment of unanimity, I associated myself with the Minister of Fisheries for Prince Edward Island, agreeing with him that he had a certain complaint. In your earlier remarks, you said Canada was taking approximately 80 per cent of the fish within the 200-mile management zone. Could you provide us with a list of those nations which take fish within our management zone and their respective quotas?

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Chairman, I cannot provide those figures from memory. I can certainly provide honourable senators at a later date with a document showing that breakdown. Canada is perfectly entitled to claim 100 per cent of those species within the 200-mile management zone for which we have a market or some utilization. In some cases—and I am thinking particularly of all species of shellfish, and most of the herring, if not all—some 85 or 86 per cent of the fish inside and outside the 200-mile zone is taken by Canadians. There are some species in which the Canadian industry has shown no interest, either because they are expensive to catch or there is no market available.

Even if we were able to take 100 per cent of the fish within the 200-mile zone, I would advise against it. Access to the surplus over and above Canada's needs, assuming there is one, could be a valuable negotiating tool in gaining access to foreign markets and negotiations in respect of other interests we have beyond the 200-mile zone. I need not remind honourable senators that the Atlantic and Pacific salmon range far beyond the 200-mile zone. Any breakdown of international fishing co-operation outside the 200-mile zone could very seriously affect Canada's interests, particularly in respect of these two very precious species.

We will always have to strike a balance as between the quantity of fish within our own zone that should be taken by Canadians and the quantity, if any, that should be allocated to others, and the conditions under which such allocations should take place.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, I apologize for asking these detailed questions of the minister without notice. My purpose in raising them yesterday was to give Senator Riley an opportunity to pass them on to the minister for reply today.

Senator Riley: If I might interject, I was relying on Senate Hansard being available by noon today, which was not the case.

Senator Phillips: I can understand that. I was looking for it myself and found it was not available.

I am interested in the fisheries research programs which have been curtailed, and perhaps this information may be fresh in your mind. I should like to know the reduction in the number of scientists in each of the stations and the programs curtailed.

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Chairman, I would first like to put on the record one or two facts.

First, the research undertaken for stock assessment for the setting of quotas and what we call the general area of research for conservation and management have not been reduced. On the contrary, since the 200-mile limit came into being on January 1, 1977, we have hired 125 additional research staff, and research spending for the fiscal year ending March 31 next was increased by $14 million. In fact, what we have reduced is the technological research into the secondary processing aspect of fisheries. We have not reduced in any way the research for better equipment, better gear, and better vessels. At the primary level, we have reduced nothing. At the secondary level, we have reduced what we thought were programs which the industry itself was able to assume. Also, other levels of government, particularly the provinces, might assume some responsibility in the area of processing.

To answer Senator Phillips' question, in British Columbia eight full-time continuing employees were laid off and three term appointments terminated; in Manitoba, two vacant positions were declared surplus, but no employees were affected; in Nova Scotia, where most of the technological research for the Atlantic region was carried out, 22 full-time continuing employees were laid off and one vacant position eliminated; and in Quebec and Ontario, where there are very minor operations, there were minor program reductions.

We had to make a choice. Given a choice between conservation and management, particularly conservation—the setting of quotas, and so forth—and such questions as to how long to keep fish frozen, we opted for the primary responsibility, the feeling being that the industry itself could undertake the research required to determine how long fish can be kept frozen under ideal conditions, and other questions related to the secondary aspect of fisheries.

Senator Phillips: This bill provides for the establishment of the Fisheries and Oceans Research Advisory Council. During the dominion-provincial conference, the provinces asked for a greater share in the control of fisheries. It appeared to me that this was a golden opportunity for the minister to bring the provinces into planning. I would appreciate being advised why the bill does not provide for provincial representation on the advisory board.

● (1530)

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Chairman, the council is very much a research advisory council. Outside of saying that there would be representatives from some universities and some fishermen, the bill does not spell out who could be appointed to this council. There is obviously no reason why some scientist, in his own right and not representing a province, should not be appointed. There is certainly nothing to preclude somebody from industry, or a fisherman, or some other person being appointed. We simply felt this was not an area in which the management of the fishery would be discussed. What we were doing here was really looking at ocean and fisheries research, and the individuals appointed should be appointed very much on their own merit.

We saw no way of avoiding having some 10 out of 25 members being potentially provincial representatives, just for the sake of having provincial representatives. I think the avenue for consultation and for working with the provinces, pending the final disposition of the jurisdiction matter, is probably the Regional Fisheries Ministers Conference whose first meeting was held some weeks ago. Although there was some disagreement on one modest issue—that is, cod—the fact is that on the other related fisheries issues there was a very large degree of agreement and there was fairly substantial progress.

We could not see how having provincial representation on this advisory board of scientists would contribute very positively unless they were there very much as scientists employed by provincial departments but not representing government.

Senator Phillips: I would refer to Part XI, clause 32.

The Chairman: If you are going to refer to particular clauses, perhaps you would hold your questions until we reach those clauses in the bill.

Senator Macdonald: In relation to what you mentioned about the 22 positions which have been done away with in the area of research in Halifax, has there been any indication that the private fish firms will go into the research business, either together or co-operatively? Do the Nickerson people in the fishing industry in Nova Scotia do any research on their own?

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Chairman, I am informed that there has been no specific interest shown by private companies, although at least one provincial government has looked upon one section as possibly being taken on by one of their technological colleges. At the moment I have no deluge of applications.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, are there further questions of a general nature?

Senator Macdonald: Perhaps I could ask another general question. I was interested, in reading the proceedings of the Commons committee concerning this bill, that there was considerable discussion on the question of catching and marketing squid which is not normally done by Nova Scotia or maritimes people. As I understood it, certain firms in Nova Scotia, for example, were given a licence to catch so much squid, but they did not have the facilities to do that, so they, in turn, leased it or sold it to a Japanese firm. Am I right that a certain percentage of what they caught had to be processed in the fish plants in Nova Scotia?

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Chairman, about three years ago, squid was considered to be under-utilized. In fact, we never bothered very much with it except as an inshore species. The fact, however, is that squid has considerable value. It creates one problem for the fisheries in that it is rather cyclical, and some years it simply does not show up. Mackerel is another fish of that type. People tend not to invest large amounts into gearing up for catching these fish.

However, the value of squid being what it is, and the potential being realized, the inshore fishermen in Newfoundland in particular went after squid very heavily and, in fact, some 30 to 35 tonnes were taken and brought in a very good price. That left about 20 to 25 tonnes available for Canadians and which, if they were not caught by Canadians, would be caught by foreign fishing fleets.

We offered private industry a possibility of chartering to catch this quota, putting in a proviso that 25 per cent processing would have to take place, and if not then a penalty clause would have to be written. If my memory serves me correctly, the penalty was $35 a tonne for what was not processed.

This created a situation where there was some windfall benefit. In fact, a very modest amount of employment was created, and not very many Canadian fishermen were involved. Again, the nature of that fishery makes this problem more acute because offshore squid require freezer-trawler capacity; it has to be frozen very quickly.

We have looked at this on a one-shot basis. We are looking at some proposals for the coming season, and we certainly believe that a better system has to be found.

Whatever happened, the fact is that some Canadian enterprises—and some of them were not large but rather small operations—went into a joint venture on which they reaped considerable benefit. I think, in the long run, a better system can be evolved.

This seems to have been defined mainly as a Newfoundland fishery. Last summer a very interesting experiment was conducted off Cape Breton by a Japanese vessel under charter under an arrangement with the United Maritime Fishermen which, in fact, utilized automatic jigging equipment and immediate freezing. The squid was worth $1,000 a tonne on the Japanese market. That is being looked at in regard to further development, and we may see Cape Breton get some considerable benefit from this fishery.

Senator Macdonald: Was some of that squid processed in fish plants in Cape Breton last year?

• (1540)

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: My impression is that it was, but perhaps when Dr. May is with us he could give us a quick answer to that.

Senator Macdonald: On the same subject, it seemed to be the impression given by some of the members of the House of Commons committee that in order to utilize the squid fishery there would have to be this type of freezer-trawler, if that is what you call it. I believe the department's idea was that there are plenty of fishing vessels now, draggers and so on, that are not used to full capacity. Am I right in assuming that the policy is not to allow the building of these new types of trawlers until a steady market is assured?

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Chairman, that is partly the answer. The fact is that, if applications for freezer-trawler licences were based on species that were not already caught by existing elements of the fleet, they would be looked on favourably. I have made it quite clear, if someone wanted a freezer-trawler licence for only underutilized species, that I would look at the application favourably. The fact is that the list of underutilized species is growing shorter every year, because we are discovering, as we did with squid, that there can be considerable benefit.

If the Cape Breton experiment of last summer could be repeated successfully by boats less than 100 feet in length, I would hesitate to deprive the fishermen of the area where this squid is located—which is only 12 to 15 miles offshore—by having the fish picked up by large, long-distance trawlers. That is why we will probably take a cautious approach.

I might say that no one would invest in that type of vessel for a fish which, as I say, tends to be cyclical. However, we are willing to look at a freezer vessel charter arrangement as a temporary measure until we see if, in fact, the smaller Canadian boats will go after squid.

[Translation]

Senator Langlois: Mr. Minister, since we are speaking about squid, I saw recently—I do not remember exactly in what magazine or newspaper—that squid was an endangered species because it is overfished.

I would also like to know whether the latest invention—I believe that it comes from Japan—which has been put on the market recently for squid fishing is in general use on the Atlantic coast, and if this is one of the reasons for the excessively large increase in catches?

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Chairman, I have not seen any scientific report suggesting that this species has been overfished. Perhaps Dr. May will be able to reply to this question later on, as well as to two or three others. There is no doubt that we have maintained quotas as low as possible because we do not want to repeat our disastrous experiences in other sectors. I have not seen any scientific opinions suggesting reductions in this area. On the contrary, I believe that the Canadian quotas for 1979 have been slightly increased. However, I will have to check if this concerns the total quotas or only Canada's share, but I know that the quota of our fishermen has been increased over last year.

[English]

Senator Macdonald: If I may, Madam Chairman, I will change the subject rather abruptly. In the agreements we have with other countries concerning fishing in our own waters as well as outside them, is there provision to allow these other countries to have their catch processed in plants in Canada, specifically in Nova Scotia?

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Chairman, one of the clauses that we call "commensurate benefits" in our agreements could be interpreted in the way Senator Macdonald has suggested, but we have had to move cautiously because, as honourable senators know, the new international organization covering the zone outside the 200-mile zone just came into being within the last few months. In fact, its first meeting was held only in the last week or two in Montreal.

While we are moving quite cautiously to a management régime both inside and outside the 200 miles, recognizing, of course, that inside the limit the decisions are Canada's, we have had to look at the benefits offered in return for access to the Canadian zone very much in the light of protecting our interests outside. That is why we have tended not to attach too many conditions of the type mentioned by the honourable senator.

It is certainly an interesting proposal. There is one country which, if we had wanted to allocate to it a large amount of fish, was most willing to have some of it processed in Canadian plants. But having weighed the pros and cons and after consulting with the industry—that is, the fishermen and processors—and bearing in mind that it was fish for which we had catching capacity and were interested in, we did not accept the proposal.

There is no doubt that, if canning were desired by foreign nations in some cases, we could certainly offer them an economic advantage. In fact, we could let them return home with the finished product instead of having to carry the fish in freezers, thawing it out and then refreezing it. We are looking at all of these angles.

[Hon. Mr. LeBlanc.]

Senator Macdonald: It was my impression that some Russian trawlers did indeed have their catches processed in some of the plants in Nova Scotia last year. I am certain I saw some Russian vessels in port doing that.

The Chairman: Are there any further questions of general interest, honourable senators? If not, shall we proceed to a consideration of the bill clause by clause?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Senator Rowe: Madam Chairman, what I have to say concerns both clause 2 and subclause 4(2).

The Chairman: I wonder if you have a proper copy of the bill before you, Senator Rowe. There is no subclause 4(2).

Senator Grosart: Are you in the correct part of the bill, senator?

Senator Rowe: Perhaps I have jumped ahead too fast. I think we will come to what I want a bit later. I will withdraw my question for the moment.

The Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

● (1550)

Senator Marshall: Not so fast. I have one question that has to do with the formulation of the Fisheries and Oceans Research Advisory Council. Although I am pleased that the membership has been increased from 18 to 24, and that members of the council shall include fishermen and persons from the general public, as was indicated in the original bill, I am concerned that, as in the past there have always been overtures made to have fishermen included on boards and advisory councils—

The Chairman: Honourable senator, you are referring to Part II. We are still dealing with the very beginning; we are still on Part I.

Senator Marshall: Not Part II?

The Chairman: We have not got that far yet. We are proceeding very slowly and carefully today. We are on Part I, clause 2. Shall clause 2 carry?

Senator Forsey: Before it carries, may I have from the minister some explanation of why this extraordinarily grandiose title of Minister of Fisheries and Oceans was adopted? This seems to me to be taking an enormous amount of extraterritorial jurisdiction.

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: The reality is that with the extension to the 200-mile zone we have added some 650,000 square miles of resources available to Canada. We also have three oceans, and the primary responsibility for the living resources has been married to the department called Fisheries. In fact, the term "oceans" was chosen very consciously, not only for its fisheries connotation but because there are many departments of government that have an interest in oceans, such as Transport, Energy, Mines and Resources, and Environment, obviously, because of atmospheric services and so on. The perception of concern with the oceans has been very much heightened in the last 15 or 20 years, and it was in recognition of this that what might be a slightly grandiose title was chosen. Frankly, I think it is a rather grandiose subject.

Senator Forsey: Surely it is only part of the oceans over which we have extended our jurisdiction. It used to be:

Man marks the earth with ruin—his control stops with the shore.

Now apparently it goes clear off to the 200-mile limit off Japan or somewhere. This is what bothers me about it. It seems to me to take in such an enormous scope, far beyond the considerations the minister has mentioned. I cannot understand why it would not have done just to revive the old and time-honoured title "Marine and Fisheries."

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: I would be the last to contradict Senator Forsey's strongly held view. It was felt that this would in fact translate the consciousness that Canada's oceans are of great importance, not only, as I said earlier, in terms of the living resources, but of minerals and all the other aspects of the oceans. I might say that there are some of us—and I am one of them—who think that the expression "Dominion from sea to sea" is rather restricted.

Senator Forsey: Touché.

The Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 3 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 4 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 5 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 6 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 7 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 8 carry?

Senator McIlraith: That is Part II.

The Chairman: We are now on Part II.

Senator Marshall: So I can repeat my question, if only I can remember it. It has to do with the establishment of the Fisheries and Oceans Research Advisory Council. I repeat, I am pleased that it has been decided to increase the membership to 24, but I am a little leery, as usual, when they mention that the membership of the council shall include fishermen, which shows recognition that has not been shown before. I am a little concerned about the fact that the majority of the council members shall be scientists.

I should like to observe that there are a lot of fishermen in northern Newfoundland who know a great deal more than scientists just by looking at the clouds and the outside weather. I should like to ask for an assurance that there will be a good representation of fishermen from across Atlantic Canada, and that all these positions will not be taken up by others, bearing in mind that the fishermen have been silent for too long. I know the minister agrees they should have a place in the annals of departmental policy, and I know that there is now representation by the union in Newfoundland, but I should like an assurance that the minister will ensure that the people in isolated or remote areas will have some representation and be able to have a say.

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: I certainly can give that assurance, not only because of my penchant but because it is now written in legislation. I think the day when the scientists felt that they were somehow isolated from the fishermen is fast disappearing. In fact, the new breed of fishermen includes many who are college and university graduates, and they will want to move from one to the other sphere of activity. I personally hope that more and more employees of my own department will come from the ranks of fishermen. Certainly some of my most senior people come from fishing families, and from some distinguished Newfoundland fishing families. I can give that assurance to the honourable senator.

Senator Grosart: I have a question on the title, which also relates to the functions of the council as described in clause 10. This is now to be described as an advisory council, whereas its predecessor, as I understand it, was a research board. Clause 10 refers to "the function of the Council to advise the minister," whereas my understanding is that the predecessor board had charge of all federal fishery research stations. Would the minister be good enough to indicate the reason for the change from a board that had charge to an advisory council, and indicate who now has charge of the research stations?

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: While Dr. May is on his way down, I will answer in very general terms. Dr. May may want to answer more technical questions. In a 1971 or 1972 Fisheries Research Board, which had been the research arm of the department, took on a more advisory role, and in fact research became more directly attached to and combined with management. The feeling, perhaps reflected by Senator Marshall's question, was that there had been too much separation between the department managing the fishery and the research arm through the research board. It was really to recognize this new reality that research and management should be very closely associated, that the research capacity of the department would be more directly under the responsibility of the deputy minister, that the reality came into being somewhat before the law was changed. I do not think I could add more to that at the moment.

Senator Grosart: The second part of my question was: Who now has charge of research and research stations?

• (1600)

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Chairman, with respect to research, each region has a research director who is responsible to the Regional Director General in, for example, Halifax for the maritimes, St. John's for Newfoundland, Winnipeg for the prairies, and Nanaïmo for the Pacific coast. Dr. May, as Assistant Deputy Minister, has overall responsibility for the east coast, and Mr. Doug Johnston, who was recently appointed, has overall responsibility for the west coast and inland waters. However, the Regional Director General has very much the responsibility for research and the management of the fishery.

Senator Grosart: I have a supplementary, if I may put it. Who would be responsible for the initiation and innovation for the whole, the entire, research program? This is a matter which we dealt with in another committee, and it was found to be one of the major problems in the whole research and development program of the Government of Canada—this lack of clear responsibility for the overall program.

My understanding is that this was a responsibility of the old research board. Now we are to have an advisory board. Where is that responsibility? Are we going back to what Senator Lamontagne described once in a report as the "research solitudes"?

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Chairman, in Ottawa there is a Director General of Fisheries Research, who has the overall direction and responsibility. Dr. May had this title until his appointment as an assistant deputy minister a couple of months ago.

Senator Marshall: He is a good man.

The Chairman: Shall clause 8 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 9 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 10 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 11 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 12 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 13 carry? It has been pointed out to me that we are now on Part III of the bill.

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 14 carry?

Senator Grosart: Madam Chairman, on clause 14 may I ask the minister a question? It may be inconsequential but, on the other hand, there may be some reason for the change of wording in clause 5(a) to the wording as follows:

[Hon. Mr. LeBlanc.]

—jurisdiction, not by law assigned to any other department, board or agency of the Government of Canada—

In the former act, under section 5, the word was "branch." Is there a distinction between the words "branch" and "board" in the drafting here?

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Chairman, I am informed by Mr. Bertrand, who, I think, was a draftsman of the bill, that the expression now used is "board" rather than "branch".

Senator Grosart: Is there a reason for that? The word "branch" for a long time had a meaning and an understandable meaning, particularly to parliamentarians. Are we to understand that it is drafting policy now that we will never refer to "branches", but we will call them "boards"? Is that a new form of drafting semantics?

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Chairman, I am told that we would be wiser to check and inform Senator Grosart directly before we answer that in substance.

Senator Phillips: Madam Chairman, clause 14 says that the functions of the Department of the Environment extend to and include "renewable resources, including the forest resources of Canada." There has been some dispute already with some of the provinces with regard to forestry permits, especially on provincial crown lands. How are these disputes settled under this clause?

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Chairman, I am informed that there is no change from the previous situation of forests being under provincial jurisdiction. I know of a recent case in which, under the Habitat legislation, some forestry operations were interrupted but, as I say, there is no change. The role of the federal government in forestry has been one of research and no one is challenging the very strongly expressed view of the provinces that forests on provincial lands are very much part of their own responsibility.

Senator Marshall: I have a question on clause 14, having to do with that perennial scourge, the spruce budworm. While I recognize that this is a provincial responsibility in most cases, I am under the impression, through information in the past, that Canada and the United States are co-operating in study and research to try to come up with a solution to the problem of the spruce budworm, which threatens our forests and indeed threatens what is probably the second largest industry in Canada.

It may be unfair to ask this question of the minister, since the Minister of the Environment is not here, but I see the deputy minister here, and I ask if there has been any progress made—and I do not require a long discourse—over the past few months now that the season is over in Newfoundland and New Brunswick—indeed, in all of Canada.

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Chairman, the federal role in the budworm problem is very much one of research. In fact, through our co-operation with the United States we have doubled the research, which is now better co-ordinated in this area.

I might say the controversy which occasionally arises with the use of this or that chemical is very much the concern of the three departments—Environment, Fisheries, and Agriculture which has the responsibility for the use of certain chemicals, especially imported chemicals.

The evaluation of the success of the program is difficult. I do not think I should undertake to answer that. Our research recently has been very much in the area of biological research. Honourable senators may have heard of experiments conducted using a sex attractant which might in fact induce the budworm to have a rather erratic behaviour pattern. That experiment has not been as successful as we had hoped, from the latest reports I have read. I will have to ask Mr. Seaborn to nod. He nods that I am right; that it is not in fact as successful as we had hoped.

● (1610)

Senator Grosart: Turning to page 7 of the bill as printed, and referring to section 6(2) as mentioned in clause 14, it says that authority is given to the minister:

(2) For the purposes of carrying out his duties and functions related to environmental quality . . . with the approval of the Governor in Council . . .

To establish guidelines. The guidelines seem to be limited to:

. . . departments, boards and agencies of the Government of Canada and . . . corporations listed in Schedule D to the Financial Administration Act and regulatory bodies—

The question arises as to why it is necessary for the minister to have the power to issue guidelines—or would they be more than guidelines, in the normal sense of the word? Surely the minister of any department would have the authority to issue guidelines within this fairly limited area.

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: As honourable senators know, there are many activities of other departments. I am thinking, for example, of Transport and the building of airports, of Energy, Mines and Resources in drilling operations, and so on, which could have considerable effect on the environment. So the Minister of the Environment is given the power to issue guidelines to other departments of government.

Senator Grosart: I appreciate that, but why does the minister need authority to issue guidelines? Anyone can issue guidelines to anyone. We are getting into the drafting of bills quite a bit now, and I would be interested in knowing the answer, because the definition of guidelines, if I may use the phrase, has been kicked around a great deal recently. It would be interesting if we could have from the minister, through the draftsmen, a definition of guidelines. What is meant by giving the minister authority to issue guidelines?

I repeat that my understanding would be that he could issue a guideline to any agency, if he felt like it. Why does he need authority in an act of Parliament to issue guidelines?

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: If my understanding of the question is correct, it is really to emphasize the horizontal nature of a department like this one, which by its definition almost—I use the word in quotation marks—"interferes" with other activities. It is to give these guidelines all the authority of Governor in Council.

I might give one example of where at least three departments are involved but where, in the final analysis, one department must make the decision. At what point do we interrupt drilling in a place like the Beaufort Sea, given all the atmospheric and ice conditions, and so on? In the event of a blow-out, at one point there have to be guidelines with regard to the number of days to be allocated, to having a relief well drilled. That is an area where the guidelines could be embodied in an order in council.

Senator Grosart: I am really seeking clarification here. What would be the authority of such guidelines vis-à-vis another department? I see they have the word "board" here and even a Schedule D corporation. Has it any statutory effect at all on those to whom these guidelines would be directed?

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: I am told that the guidelines basically offer to departments that do not have the knowledge and expertise of a department such as the Department of the Environment, directives and advice embodied in these guidelines.

Senator Grosart: In the minister's judgment, would it be correct to say that such guidelines have no statutory, mandatory authority? Would that be a correct statement?

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: I am told that they cannot be imposed on another minister, but by being published as guidelines there is certainly a considerable amount of moral persuasion.

Senator Grosart: I would agree with that.

[Translation]

Senator Langlois: Madam Chairman, I would like to draw the attention of the minister to two expressions that are used a number of times in clause 14, namely:

boards and agencies of the Government of Canada which read in French as follows:
commissions et organismes fédéraux

I believe that there is no equivalence between these two expressions, especially when you compare "organismes fédéraux" to "agencies of the Government of Canada". You can have a federal organization which is not an agency of the Crown.

I simply want to draw the attention of the minister to the fact that the translation seems inaccurate.

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Chairman, in reply to Senator Langlois, Mr. Bertrand informs me that he is willing to consider this suggestion, as he said he would do in another case.

In fact, we have made certain changes to the translation and we thought that we had caught all inaccuracies, but we shall have to check again.

[English]

Senator Marshall: Madam Chairman, we have spent a good deal of time on the fishery, and we may perhaps tend to overlook the vital and serious responsibility under the new Minister of the Environment in connection with the forest industry, the pulp and paper industry. I have pages of studies and everything else, but in today's issue of the Toronto Globe and Mail there is an article by T. J. Bell, Chairman and Chief Executive Officer of Abitibi Paper Company, in which he states, in a succinct manner, what is the status of the industry and the danger involved.

I was struck by two paragraphs. One of the difficulties concerning the pulp and paper industry is the fact that we are getting farther and farther away from the markets as time goes on. The Americans are our biggest customers and they are producing mills day by day. The Export Development Corporation is loaning money and sending equipment to other countries to produce pulp and paper mills, and they will take away our markets. I am again concerned about eastern Canada, because that area is farthest away from the markets. I was impressed by two paragraphs, which I should like to put on the record:

Canadian mills will always be located farther from markets than U.S. competitors are, thus at similar freight rates per mile Canadian shipping will cost more. As matters stand, Canadian rates per mile are also higher—it costs $18.57 more to ship a ton of newsprint 475 miles from a Quebec mill than it does to ship 475 miles from a U.S. mill.

That might be outside the parameters of what we are discussing.

● (1620)

I am struck by the paragraph in which Mr. Bell states:

There must develop in Canada a recognition that obsolescence is inevitable and that modern replacement of capacity may be more viable at new locations more in tune with a changed competitive world. If government, labour and management all address this reality carefully, social consequences will be minimized.

When we are reminded about what the forest industry means to Canada, Mr. Bell states:

Direct employment in forest products represents nearly one in eight jobs in manufacturing in Canada.

He goes on to state:

The direct and indirect federal tax revenue from the forest resource sector is roughly $1-billion. Outbound traffic of forest products comprises an eighth of the railway carloadings in Canada.

I think more than asking a question, I should point out the importance of that department in conserving our forests, which are fast depleting, and the efforts that they are going to extend to forest conservation and replenishment. With regard to the other factors I mentioned, it is vitally important that we reinforce the success that we have had rather than wait until the mills close down or the industries close down.

I don't know whether the minister wishes to comment on that, but I should like to put that on the record. I know it is unfair to put that question, because the Minister of Environment is not here.

[Senator Marshall.]

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: I must say that I have kept a great interest in this aspect of it from the time I became responsible for the whole department. My successor recently announced that, to show the importance of the forest industry, he was, in fact, making it a service at the deputy ministerial level.

The federal government's role has been researched and the provinces have asked us to continue to do that, and the amount being spent now is in the order of $40-$41 million. The dollar advantage at the moment is giving the whole Canadian forest industry quite an advantage. In fact, there are parts of the industry that are suggesting we should not hurry to get the dollar up again. Those are probably the ones who have come back from the south.

In the area of modernization, I believe Senator Marshall's point is well taken. He is obviously aware that the Board of Economic Ministers designated this as an area for great attention when they recently committed $205 million to modernization and to upgrading and removing the stigma of obsolescence on some of our operations. I certainly do not take issue with what Senator Marshall has said.

The Chairman: Shall clause 14 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: We are now dealing with Part IV, Canadian Patents and Development Limited.

Senator Grosart: I have a very general question. Perhaps the minister is able to tell us why the employees of Canadian Patents and Development Limited are now coming under this bill for pension purposes? Were they not, up to the present time, under the Public Service Superannuation Act and receiving the benefits of the Aeronautics Act?

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Chairman, I am very much out of my field at this moment. However, some assistance is coming. The amendments ensure that the coverage for pensions will continue once the employees are transferred out of the National Research Council and formally become employees of the Canadian Patents and Development Limited, in its own right. It is really to protect their pension rights.

Senator Grosart: Is this just a reorganization where these personnel, instead of being employees of the National Research Council, will become employees of a crown corporation?

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: That is correct.

The Chairman: Shall clause 15 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 16 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: We are now on Part V, Representation Commissioner.

Senator Grosart: Madam Chairman, this may at this particular time be an unfair question to the minister, and this, perhaps, points up some remarks I made earlier about this type of omnibus bill. It is difficult to deal with it even in Committee of the Whole. If the minister wishes to take my question as notice, I will not pursue it further. I am interested in knowing the rationale behind repealing the Representation Commissioner Act and, therefore, dispensing with the services of the Representation Commissioner, particularly if any progress has been made in an important duty assigned to him at one time, which was to consider the establishment of a permanent voting list for Canada.

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: I am informed that the work on the permanent voting list, if I understand the question correctly, is now terminated. Dealing with the matter of the Representation Commissioner, it was felt that the work has been sufficiently advanced and the pattern had been sufficiently set that it could be handed over to the Chief Electoral Officer and the position declared vacant.

Senator Grosart: Is the minister able to say whether a decision has been made on the matter of a permanent voters list for Canada?

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: A study has been made but I am told that the cabinet has not made a decision yet. I am not aware of one, in any event.

The Chairman: Shall clause 17 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 18 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 19 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 20 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 21 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 22 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 23 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 24 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 25 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 26 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: We are now dealing with Part VI, Medical Research Council.

Senator Phillips: In Part VI, and the same question would apply to Parts VII, Part VIII, and Part IX, I am curious to know why the various councils can select their own employees, give them their own classification and suggest their salaries. As far as I am concerned, it would be much more equitable if the employees were selected by the Public Service Commission, given their classification and their salary, recommended in line with classifications and salaries in the public service. Can the minister tell us if there is any reason this procedure could not be followed?

● (1630)

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Chairman, the councils are specialized types of agencies requiring specialized expertise. For this reason they were given separate employer status. It would be a major change in the status and operation of the councils to bring them now under the Public Service Commission. In addition, it should be noted that the Public Service Commission does not classify public servants or set salaries. That is done by Treasury Board. For separate employees like those of the councils, Treasury Board or Governor in Council approval is required for salary levels, while classification and staffing usually is vested in the council itself.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, I doubt very much if every employee of these councils is a specialist. I presume that, like everyone else, they hire secretaries, and I fail to see how every person hired can be included as a specialist. I would also point out to the minister that in his own department he has specialists in research, and these people are selected by the Public Service Commission.

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Chairman, it was felt that it would be difficult to have part of the staff under public service regulations and part not. For this reason it was considered to be wiser for them to be part of the same organization, from all points of view.

Senator Marshall: Following up Senator Phillips' question, I find that there is something of a conflict here, if I am reading the legal jargon properly. Under Part II, dealing with the Fisheries and Oceans Research Advisory Council, the chairman is appointed by the Governor in Council, and the other members of the council are appointed by the minister, which, to my mind, is fair. Yet, under Parts V, VI, VII and VIII the council appoints such officers, and, as I had it explained to me in layman's terms, it appears that the chairman of the council can appoint all the officers and members. To my mind, that is straying from the policies we ought to be following. It leaves the minister at a loss to know who is working for him, whether indeed they are responsible, and not appointed by recourse to paths other than the straight and narrow.

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Chairman, I am told that the members of the Fisheries and Oceans Research Advisory Council are appointed by order in council. The Fisheries and Oceans Research Advisory Council is a carry-over from the other system, in terms of which the minister appointed the members, but the chairman was appointed by order in council.

The Chairman: Shall clause 27 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Part VIII, National Research Council. Shall clause 28 carry?

Senator Grosart: Madam Chairman, to carry on the discussion that has just been started by Senator Phillips and Senator Marshall, it is not quite true to say that the appointment conditions are the same in the case of all these councils. The National Research Council, according to the amendment proposed here, has quite a different status from that of the others. I refer to clause 28 of the bill, dealing with paragraph 13(g) of the National Research Council Act, which states:

(g) to appoint such scientific, technical and other officers as are nominated by the President, to fix the tenure of such appointments, to prescribe the several duties of such officers—

And so on. Is this a new development, that officers of the National Research Council are to be given tenure on nomination by the president? Is this a new departure, introducing the academic concept of tenure into the government service?

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Chairman, I am told that the National Research Council is structured somewhat differently, but that there is no change of any substance. The drafter is looking at this matter, and I may have more to add in a moment.

Senator Olson: Madam Chairman, while that information is being sought, may I ask the minister, under the heading of either Part VII or Part VIII, about the technology that is being developed respecting our topography satellite, particularly with respect to the interpretation of the raw data being fed back to Canadian receiving stations from that satellite? I understand some advance has been made in the interpretation of the data from the point of view of identifying crops, for example, and making estimates of their yield, wherever the satellite overflies, whether it be on this continent or any other continent. Canada's contribution to that satellite has been considerably more in the past than it is now. Indeed, we may be falling behind in our capability to interpret the raw data in such a way that it would be useful to the organizations that market our agricultural products, thus leaving us at a disadvantage vis-à-vis the United States, for example. I think the intention at the outset was that we were to be equal insofar as having the technological capability of interpreting the data is concerned.

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Chairman, I am told that with regard to the National Research Council it is a question of a minor technical amendment. We will provide Senator Grosart with the information he seeks.

On Senator Olson's point, I must say that in the area of oceans in particular, with specific reference to ice movement and weather forecasting, which is now under the Department of the Environment, there is no doubt that we are given a great deal of information that is quite dramatic in some cases. I am told by the scientists that we will be able to predict rather accurately the pattern of ice movement once we have established a bank of knowledge of previous patterns over a few years.

I am a member of the cabinet committee that is very much interested in the discussions that the honourable senator mentioned with relation to crops and other information. As a very uneducated layman, I was amazed at the potential that this represented, but I could not pretend to answer the honourable senator's question with any accuracy. For that reason I concede that with regard to the points he has made he is much better informed than I could hope to be in my answers.

Senator Olson: Well, I thank the minister for his comment, but I am really not very well informed at all. What has happened is that I have had raised to me some of the problems without any answers. I wonder if the minister would take notice of the fact that we would like to know where Canada stands in relation to the United States in particular, because in some cases it was a joint project.

I wonder if he could tell us whether or not we are continuing the effort we need. I am particularly interested in some advanced technology that has to do with colour and other factors that are needed to estimate crop yields. I am told that technology of such sophistication has already been developed whereby it is possible to distinguish one crop from another in the early growth stages, which was not possible only a short time ago. Certainly, in our marketing operations of grain, it is necessary for us to have at least as much information as our competitors in this field and as advanced information as our competitors have.

● (1640)

I would be perfectly content if the minister would refer that question to his officials and provide me with a written reply at a later date.

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: I can certainly undertake to do that, Madam Chairman.

If I may go back for a moment to one of Senator Grosart's earlier questions, I am informed that the words "ministerial approval for staff appointment and classification" have been amended to remove "with the approval of the minister." That is the only change.

Senator Grosart: I was asking whether the provision for academic tenure was new.

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: I am informed it is not.

The Chairman: Shall clause 28 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Part VIII, Natural Sciences and Research Council.

Shall clause 29 carry?

Senator Phillips: The proposed section 36(1) reads:

The Council may,

(a) appoint such officers and employees as are necessary for the proper conduct of the work of the Council—

I am wondering whether there is any limitation placed on the number of employees to be selected by these councils arising out of the government's so-called restraint program. I understand various departments are expected to limit the number of people they appoint, and I am wondering whether the same principle applies to these various councils.

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Chairman, Treasury Board approves the number of man-years and the budgets of the councils to be established.

The Chairman: Shall clause 29 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Part IX, Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council. Shall clause 30 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Part X, Parliamentary Secretaries. Shall clause 31 carry?

Senator Grosart: Honourable senators, I have one question by way of clarification. I do not understand the purpose of this amendment to subsection 2(2) of the Parliamentary Secretaries Act. The present wording is:

There shall not be at any one time more Parliamentary Secretaries than the number of Ministers who hold offices for which salaries are provided in section 4 of the Salaries Act.

The amendment reads:

There shall not be appointed more Parliamentary Secretaries than the number of Ministers who hold offices for which salaries are provided—

What is the significance of the change? If there cannot be any more, how can any more be appointed?

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Chairman, the amendment substitutes for the words "at any one time" the word "appointed," thereby specifying that the maximum number of parliamentary secretaries is set at the time of appointment and is not affected by any subsequent ministerial resignation or death.

The Chairman: Shall clause 31 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Part XI, General. Shall clause 32 carry?

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, yesterday I expressed some concern with this clause. I referred to certain activities of the Department of Fisheries and the Environment which the Senate unearthed last year. I should like to know from the minister what transfers will take place within the departments.

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: Do you mean transfers of budgetary items?

Senator Phillips: Yes.

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: Those transfers are spelled out in the blue book which lists the estimates of the Fisheries Program and the Environment Program under one central agency, which was the administration of the two wings of the department. In fact, with Treasury Board supervision and preparation for the adoption of changes, the department is now in fact separated under a deputy minister and an associate deputy minister, each responsible for their respective areas.

I do not know whether I have answered Senator Phillips' question adequately. Mr. Seaborn the deputy minister of the whole department, has now returned, and perhaps he can enlighten me.

Senator Phillips: Clause 32 states, in part:

—shall be applied to such classifications of the public service within the Department of Fisheries and Oceans as the Governor in Council may determine.

I would like to be assured that we are not going to have funds taken from the Small Craft Harbours Branch to be used to provide the bureaucrats with a $6,000 or $7,000 increase in pay, an increase which is more than the fishermen themselves are making.

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Chairman, decisions on salaries are made separate from the decisions with respect to the various departmental programs. I certainly would look with great suspicion at such a proposal if it were made to me, especially this year.

Senator Phillips: I shall take a very good look at it in the coming year.

The Chairman: Shall clause 32 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 33 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 34 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 35 carry?

Senator Grosart: I have a question, Madam Chairman. Would the minister indicate the intention, if in fact an intention has been decided upon, as to the date of proclamation of this act, assuming royal assent takes place.

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Chairman, I have been waiting for this bill for some time. That is not meant as a reflection on the manner in which this chamber dealt with it; rather, it reflects the effect of the summer recess. We intend to proclaim it as soon as possible. As I indicated earlier, the administrative separation is now more or less in place. It would involve only a short time before this could be proceeded with.

Senator Grosart: I would suggest to the minister that, in view of the wording of clause 32, it might not be wise to proclaim it before the end of the present fiscal year. I say that in view of the change from the fiscal year ending March 31, 1979 in the original draft to the fiscal year ending March 31, 1980.

● (1650)

Hon. Mr. LeBlanc: My slight hesitation is due to this—and I am sure Senator Grosart will appreciate it—that I would hate to see a department born on April Fool's Day.

Senator Grosart: I was only suggesting, if it were a possibility, that problems under supplementary estimates (B) for the current fiscal might arise if there were proclamation too soon.

The Chairman: Shall clause 35 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall schedule 1 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall schedule 2 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall the title of the bill carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall I report the bill without amendment?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Minister. We are very grateful to you for coming here this afternoon with your advisers to assist us.

Senator Grosart: I believe it is customary for us in this group to agree with and acknowledge the chairman's compliments to the minister for coming here and giving the excellent answers he has given.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: The sitting is resumed.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Senator Neiman: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole, to which was referred Bill C-35, respecting the organization of the Government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto, has taken the said bill into consideration and has directed me to report the same without amendment.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Riley: Honourable senators, with leave, now.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem informed the Senate that the following communication had been received:

[Hon. Mr. LeBlanc.]

RIDEAU HALL OTTAWA GOVERNMENT HOUSE

March 15, 1979

Madam,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Jean Beetz, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 15th day of March, at 5.30 p.m. for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Madam,
Your obedient servant,
Edmond Joly de Lotbinière
Administrative Secretary to the
Governor General

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate
Ottawa.

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Tuesday, March 13, the debate on the motion of Senator Molgat for the second reading of Bill C-29, to amend the National Housing Act and the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act and to make other related amendments.

Hon. Jack Marshall: Honourable senators, this is quite an afternoon—in fact, quite an omnibus afternoon. We have gone from research councils to fisheries; from environment to parliamentary secretaries; and now we reach the very important subject matter of Bill C-29, an act to amend the National Housing Act and the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act and to make other related amendments.

Honourable senators, after reading the lengthy debates and controversies which arose in the other place, I think we should all recognize, as I indicated yesterday, the necessity to stop looking back and start looking to the future to provide housing for those people in Canada who need it and who do not have the advantage of shelter which everybody seems to promise at election time.

We should look at the changing conditions which have occurred over the past years, and, indeed, there have been some strides made in the area of housing. I think it would be worthwhile to put on the record that when we examine the current age groupings and current trends in Canada, it would appear that after 1980 new housing requirements for Canadians will gradually decline each year at least until the turn of the century at which time it is predicted by the experts that the annual requirement might well be less than 150,000 units.

This projection is based partly on trends which indicate a dramatic downward change in the number of young people during the next two decades, and an even more dramatic upward trend in the number of older people. Both factors would reduce the need for new housing. I hope to be able to stress that point more fully a little later on. The number of children in Canada under the age of 14 has been steadily declining since 1966, and is expected to continue to decline until about 1981. After that there will likely be a resurgence, but the number of children at the turn of the century is not expected to equal the number in 1966.

It is so important to read these figures into the record, because certainly the baby boom was the cause of the great need for housing which we faced over the past few years and are facing now, and which we will reach again some day—probably after our time. During the same period, the number of senior citizens in Canada will continue to increase. In fact, at the end of this century the number of people over 65 in Canada will be twice as high as in 1966.

• (1700)

Keep in mind that most of the dwellings and facilities which were built to house, educate and entertain some 6½ million children in 1966, and on, still exist. Keep in mind, too, that we are adding new housing stock at the rate of about 3 per cent of the total stock every year, which makes us appreciate the fact that we will have to give a great deal of thought to the types of urban settlements we should plan for in the years ahead.

The number of 20- to 24-year-olds will peak around 1981, which emphasizes the need and our striving towards that day. Then it will rapidly decline for 15 years or more. These are the university-going people, the family-forming young adults who will likely be looking for the smaller type of accommodation, such as one-bedroom apartments. I hope we will not see at that day the vast increases in the cost of housing we have experienced in the last few years and which has put housing out of the reach of too many hundreds of thousands of Canadians.

The number of people between the age of 25 and 40—which is the age of most senators in this chamber—

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Marshall: —will grow at an accelerated rate between now and 1986. This is the large group of family-forming, career-pursuing people who are economically powerful and will to a large extent determine the development of the mid-term housing market.

The next group, between ages 45 and 64, will also continue to grow. They are influential as well, but their housing needs are changing as their children grow up and leave home.

We can make the general estimate—or at least CMHC makes the estimate—that the current stock of 7.5 million houses will have to be increased to somewhere between 11 and 12 million by the turn of the century. That quantity of housing will be easily obtainable because most of today's housing, as well as virtually all of the new housing to be produced in the next 20 years, will still exist in the year 2000.

I mention these demographic figures, honourable senators, because the main point I want to make today has to do with the fact that housing will now start to decline, because there are many houses on the market now and because too many of our people today, too many of our low-income people, own their own homes but cannot afford to maintain them. They cannot even afford, in too many cases, enough to eat properly let alone look after their houses.

One of the main features of the housing program which I have watched, and watched closely because it was so important to the district I had the honour to represent, was introduced in 1973. I refer to the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program. That falls within two categories: One under the Neighbourhood Improvement Program and one under the Rural and Native Housing Program.

Under RRAP, as it is now commonly referred to, citizens earning an income of $6,000 or less can borrow up to $10,000 to repair their homes, and have the advantage of a forgiveness factor, or grant, of $3,750. In other words, after borrowing $10,000 they must repay only $6,250. That subsidy is also available to homeowners with incomes up to $11,000, but for each $1,000 above the $6,000 level the forgiveness factor is reduced by $250.

The program was, and is, applicable to landlords under the same conditions with the forgiveness factor applicable to each unit in an apartment building or hostel, for example.

The loans are made available for the express purpose of replacing defective wiring, plumbing and heating, repairing structural faults and ensuring that essential health and fire safety precautions are taken.

In our concern for the poor this could have been the best program ever produced by any government and ever put into place not only to allow the poor, who cannot afford it now, to maintain and repair their homes and to give them a more lasting existence, but to relieve the need for the government to provide low-cost housing at a faster rate.

There were two million housing units constructed in Canada prior to the end of the Second World War, and it has been determined that between 200,000 and one million of those were then deficient in some respect or were substandard. In the light of that, it is not difficult to conclude that the program would serve the very people who need it, allowing them to carry out the maintenance and repairs they could not otherwise afford because of low income or because of increases in the cost of living.

When one considers the number of our citizens who live or exist on fixed incomes—such as those on welfare, those who are widows, those with disabilities and those who are on their own as senior citizens but who nevertheless own their own homes—it is not difficult to reason that such a program could benefit a great many Canadians. Honourables senators, when one considers, for example, the fact that there are widows in Newfoundland owning their own homes, who receive the wonderful amount of $161 a month, one must wonder how they manage. They promptly pay over at least half of that for oil. How will they eat? How will they exist? How will they put in a furnace, for example? How will they close up the draughts? How will they get more oil, which is in such short supply?

Another excellent feature of this is that the payments which would have to be made by those citizens were subsidized to the point where they would not be a burden to the homeowner. In some cases, depending on the amount of the loan, the payments were as low as $4.75 a month. But what happened is what usually happens when the government gets involved in anything: First of all, the funding is always too limited. Secondly, the provinces become involved and agreements have to be negotiated. Areas have to be designated and the bureaucratic disease sets in, and, in turn, provincial and municipal agreements have to be negotiated and more bureaucracy raises its ugly head. Instead of the citizens deriving benefits, too many of them, who build up their hopes when they get these promises, become instead disappointed and discouraged and again lose faith in politicians because they make these false promises.

As a result of the lack of funding under NIP, for example, only certain sectors of a municipality can be given the benefits. This results in neighbouring sectors wondering why some areas are favoured while they cannot qualify. Sometimes boundaries are placed so that people on one side of the street cannot qualify, while people on the other side who are no more in need, and sometimes less in need, do qualify.

Under the Rural and Native Housing Program, which is designed to deliver RRAP to communities with populations of 2,500 or less and in remote and isolated areas, the communities are selected on the basis of some priorities, either political or otherwise, which can leave neighbouring villages or communities which do not receive the benefits wondering why they did not qualify for the RRAP programs.

I have been a very strong advocate of this program since its inception in 1973. That was even before many members of the other place knew what it was all about. I recognized it because it would have helped the part of Newfoundland I come from. I sent out thousands and thousands of these lovely pamphlets. If anyone wants to look at it he will see the Shangri-la on the horizon. It says:

● (1710)

Fix up your home with federal government money. Walls and windows, storm windows and screens, stairs and steps, put on a new porch and veranda, put in new plumbing, put in insulation, put in a new heating system, floor joists, electrical wiring, the foundation and basement.

Think what this program could have done for the many people in the $6,000 or less income range.

The program started, but unfortunately not enough money was provided. This is the answer one always gets, when it could have provided so much help for Canadians.

In essence, honourable senators, the difficulty that resulted was that people in equal or greater need but just outside the boundaries designated could not be aided because of the lack of funds. Different provincial and municipal by-laws restricted delivery to the needy, while in other areas violations were occurring. Municipalities in which no areas had been designated did not develop their capacities, so benefits tended to go to those who had developed the delivery capacity.

[Senator Marshall.]

I indicated that I have been a strong advocate of RRAP. I explained its virtues high and wide before many realized its advantages. I have seen small remote communities literally transformed from a deteriorated state to a state of adequacy. In some areas it has revitalized the community itself; it has injected community pride, and developed an initiative by the citizens in those small communities to provide their own shelter and do their own repairs, besides providing employment to home owners themselves, many of whom were on welfare.

But what happens again? The bureaucracy creeps in. Here is the letter I wanted to read before, that a lady wrote me from one of these remote areas. She wanted to fix up her home; she made an application and the answer she received was that they had checked things out through a credit bureau, and because she owed some money to the T. Eaton Company about 15 years ago, which she did not pay, there was nothing they could do. She told me, "As far as we are concerned, we don't owe any money to this company. It was paid off years ago." This is one of the examples of the lack of flexibility. Everyone in Canada owes money, even people who own million-dollar homes, so why should that woman be denied assistance, while her house continues to deteriorate to the point where she will be a burden on the state? Many other similar problems exist, which are too numerous to mention.

While the minister was telling me, when I was in the other place, about the lack of funds, another minister, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, announced a program of $1.4 billion to insulate homes. They set up this new program, setting up an office in Montreal, although Quebec did not even enter into the program, with a new staff of around 100, accepting phone calls from all over the country from people applying for this insulation money. Yet right before their very eyes they had a program into which they should have put that $1.4 billion, because it provides for insulation. But what is the advantage of insulation to a person in northern Ontario or northern Newfoundland who has no windows in his home, or has broken windows, or has no basement, despite the fact that they don't have the money and have to invest and spend $350 to put in the insulation and then get their money back? This is completely beyond reason.

Let us take, for example, the breakdown under CHIP, the Canadian Home Insulation Program. I have put on the order paper many questions, which Senator Denis objects to. In Newfoundland, for example, 31,600 homes qualified, being built before 1941. In the three-month period from September to November there were only 96 applications. In New Brunswick, where the criterion was a little different, being for homes built prior to 1921, there were 524 applications. In Quebec there were only 147 applications. In Ontario, naturally, there were 3,572 applications, with 493,600 homes needing insulation. In Manitoba there were 374 applications; in Saskatchewan 194, none in Alberta; 919 in British Columbia, and one in the Territories. That is a total across Canada of houses built that would require insulation of 1,223,500. Yet only 5,827 applied. Naturally nobody in Alberta applied because they don't need it; they will get the insulation themselves. In the Territories there was only one. I do not know why that is so. But why in the Atlantic region, where the need is so great, were there so few applications, and why was $1.4 billion put into that program, which is no good for the poor? It is no good having legislation if you are burning oil and haven't got proper shelter or walls intact.

I repeat, it could be the greatest program for the many hundreds of thousands of poor people, the widows and the disabled who are living by themselves, who need it and can't afford it, and any government would be remiss in not advancing that program and really helping Canada for Canadian unity, changing the opinion of those people who have lost faith in politicians.

Most of my remarks will be directed towards that program, because I have faith in it. I was very happy when the government decided in this new bill to make it universal. I thought it would overcome the restriction of having to be designated and having to get involved with the province and the municipality. But the universality will be no good, because there is still no money. In 1979, CMHC tells us, the capital budget is $56 million. They will need $37 million to maintain activity in the existing designated areas for work that has already begun; a further $3 million will be needed to deal with areas already designated but where work has not started. This leaves $16 million of the 1979 budget for new initiatives.

However, 68 areas have submitted final applications for designation under the 1978 rules, and after the new law comes into effect they will not need order in council designation but will warrant some priority attention. These 68 areas will require at least $7 million. That is only $9 million for some 2,250 units remaining under the terms of the new program criteria once the bill is passed. This is a very modest amount, and we should avoid raising expectations that we cannot justify.

I did not know that, and I went on the air at home and blasted high and wide, "Now all you people who wanted to take advantage of the program because you lived in the wrong place can apply anywhere because its universal." But it is no good, because there is no money, so it will still have to be done on a priority basis.

I have to agree with what is recommended now, that it has to be done over a 10-year period. But again I can only say: Why not take that $1.4 billion for insulation and put it into RRAP, so that the people can get the insulation and it will be of some benefit to them, apart from the fact that many people on welfare, living in deteriorated homes, have to go to the provincial government for more welfare to pay for oil, 50 per cent of which is in turn paid for by the federal government? They could be saving money in this time of energy shortage.

I hope Senator Molgat can impress this on the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, as I have tried to do over the years. I did it sincerely; I tried to point out the need, and it looks as though perhaps they are going to respond.

• (1720)

Another program I favour is community services. I have been an advocate of the neighbourhood improvement program, which will be eliminated, but I like the idea that under the community services program there will be discussion with the provincial ministers, and the merging of the federal assistance provided until now for such neighbourhood services as water supply, sewage treatment facilities and the construction of low-rental medium-density housing.

The federal government will continue, of course, to provide help in the form of direct grants for all those services, but from now on it will extend its assistance to a whole list of social, cultural and recreational services. I especially like the feature about recreational facilities, because there are many communities in Newfoundland, for instance, where people would like to be able to skate and participate in track and field activities. Because they have not had training facilities they have envied the residents of Ontario, British Columbia and other provinces who have been able to train for and compete in the Olympic Games and other international and national sports.

I am scared to tell them about it, because the same thing might happen as happened under the RRAP program. There is a suggestion to extend the scope of the community services program because the previous program did not fully meet the needs of all Canadian municipalities; it did not provide the flexibility required to allow communities to have recreational centres, parks, ice-skating rinks, child care centres, libraries; it did not enable them to improve their municipal buildings and to build plants for conversion of garbage into energy power, and to carry out all capital works considered priorities by municipalities.

Bully for them, I say! This is needed in small municipalities. I hope that our people will be able to have these things and not be disappointed again. But I am not going to say anything until it starts.

The other part of the new bill, under non-profit and co-operative housing, is also a reasonable step, and I hope that will come to fruition and that there will be some activity in places where it is needed. But there was always a co-operative housing program. I don't think there ever was one initiated in Newfoundland. Probably it is the fault of the provincial government. The non-profit program operates through corporations, either private corporations or those created by provincial or municipal governments and co-operatives. The sponsors obtain their mortgage loans from private sources, and CMHC provides mortgage insurance to encourage lenders to make such loans available. Loans don't have to be NHA-insured in order to qualify a project for subsidy aid.

Housing is available to anyone at market rents or less than market rents on a rent-to-income basis. The programs with the mortgage insurance and the graduated mortgage payments, which leave some doubt in my mind, can be of benefit to Canadians. However, from what I have seen of such programs in the past, although they have looked good on paper they have failed, because of some administrative jungle, to benefit those who have been promised assistance to obtain a home, a home they deserve.

I will not deal with the graduated payment mortgage, or go into other details—

Senator Langlois: I am indeed very sorry, and I apologize for having to interrupt my honourable friend, but the time has come for me to make the motion to adjourn the Senate to await the arrival of the representative of His Excellency the Governor General for royal assent at 5:30 p.m.

I am very sorry to have to interrupt my honourable friend.

Senator Marshall: I was just about ready to conclude. I was looking for my notes on that wonderful program that the Leader of the Opposition in the other place put out. I cannot find them now, but I hope to be able to remind the minister when he appears before us in Committee of the Whole.

I thank you for your attention, and I hope that we will see this housing program directed towards Canadians who deserve it.

Senator Langlois: Of course, my honourable friend realizes that he can carry on with his speech when we resume at 8 o'clock.

[Debate continued later this day.]

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, I move that the Senate do now adjourn to reassemble at the call of the bell at 5.25 p.m. to await the arrival of the representative of His Excellency the Governor General for royal assent.

Senator Grosart: Before the question is put, I wonder if the Deputy Leader of the Government would care to indicate the program, as he sees it now, for Senate sittings for, shall we say, the balance of the week.

Senator Langlois: My expectation is that we will have to sit this evening in order to finish with this housing bill, and I hope that after second reading we will go into Committee of the Whole and conclude this study tonight.

When we adjourn tonight, I should like to reiterate my motion for leave to adjourn until 11 o'clock tomorrow morning. If I do not get leave, I will have to withdraw my motion and we will automatically come back at 2 o'clock tomorrow afternoon to have royal assent and deal with any other measure that might come from the other place in the meantime.

Senator Grosart: May I ask the deputy leader if it is the intention to suggest royal assent to the Central Housing and Mortgage bill, if passed, say, today? What would the plans be for royal assent in that event?

Senator Langlois: The future of the bill is so uncertain that it is difficult for me to make, at this time, arrangements for royal assent tonight.

[Senator Marshall.]

I am afraid we will have to postpone it until tomorrow afternoon or as early as we can tomorrow.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

● (1730)

At 5.30 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Jean Beetz, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Speaker, the Honourable the Speaker of the Senate said:

Honourable members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

I have the honour to inform you that His Excellency the Governor General has been pleased to cause Letters Patent to be issued under his Sign Manual and Signet constituting the Honourable Jean Beetz, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, his Deputy, to do in His Excellency's name all acts on his part necessary to be done during His Excellency's pleasure.

The Commission was read by the Clerk of the Senate.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the following bills:

An Act respecting the organization of the Government of Canada and matters related or incidental thereto.

An Act to amend the Northwest Territories Act.

An Act to exempt certain shipping conference practices from the provisions of the Combines Investigation Act.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned until 8 p.m.

At 8:15 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

VISITORS IN GALLERY

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE OFFICERS

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, I should like to call your attention to the presence in the south gallery of a group of Royal Canadian Mounted Police officers. I welcome them to the sitting this evening. I should point out to them that this is an unusual sitting of the Senate in that we will be sitting in what is referred to as Committee of the Whole to deal with Bill C-29, an act to amend the National Housing Act and the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act and to make other related amendments.

Senator Grosart: Honourable senators, on behalf of my colleagues, such as are left, I join with the Deputy Leader of the Government in welcoming this distinguished group of gentlemen to the Senate. I am sure they will understand, as their careers develop in the interesting occupation they have chosen, that there may be times when the police forces are greater than those they are policing, which is the situation this evening. This is an unusual situation in the Senate tonight and I hope our guests will not get the impression that this is an indication of the usual attendance in the Senate. Normally our attendance is much better than that in the other house.

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from earlier this day the debate on the motion of Senator Molgat for the second reading of Bill C-29, to amend the National Housing Act and the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act and to make other related amendments.

Senator Marshall: Honourable senators, when we adjourned this afternoon I was dealing with the many aspects of Bill C-29. I understand that if the bill is given second reading it will be committed to a Committee of the Whole. Therefore, in order to provide time for my honourable colleague, Senator Phillips, to participate in this debate, and in order to facilitate the business of the house, I will now yield to Senator Phillips so that he may give the house the benefit of his expertise in this area.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, at the outset I should explain our strategy on this side. This is the second day we have followed it. Senator Marshall leads off and I follow, and it is our hope that eventually we will wear down those of you who support the government, and that you will become so bored and fed up that you will go en masse to the Prime Minister and ask him to call an election.

Senator Argue: That would not mean a thing.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, when Bill C-29 was introduced in the other place, the minister responsible for housing stated that there was no housing crisis in Canada. He then, of course, went on to explain ad nauseam how bill C-29 was going to correct the "non-existent" housing problem.

The major problem with housing today is its cost. The average single dwelling costs in the vicinity of $70,000. Annual interest on this amount equals approximately $6,000 or $6,500 a year. When that is added to a municipal tax assessment of $1,500, and the heating, utilities, insurance and maintenance costs, it can be seen that it costs approximately $1,000 a month to own a home. On top of the cost of $1,000 a month for owning and operating a home, the Department of National Revenue adds approximately $300 per month in income tax.

Honourable senators, most of the general public look upon us as being very well paid, and I am not complaining about that now. I will do that some other time. The average take-home salary for a senator, after income tax is deducted and other deductions are made, is approximately $1,400 a month or, in other words, if one of us attempted to purchase a $70,000 home today, we would be left with approximately $100 a month from our take-home pay.

Home ownership may not be a serious problem to some of the millionaires in the cabinet, but there are many people in this chamber who are paying for homes and who are far from being millionaires. There is a crisis in housing, and the crisis is the cost.

Several years ago the then minister responsible for housing, the Honourable Mr. Danson, appeared before a Committee of the Whole of the Senate and emphasized the wonderful solution we had in the Assisted Home Ownership Plan, or, as it is well known, AHOP. At that time we pointed out that there were several problems built into AHOP that would arise in the future, and as soon as those problems began to surface we found that the government was resorting to its old technique of calling in the advertising boys and saying, "Camouflage the problem a bit and, above all, change the name." This is exactly what we have in this case.

● (2020)

AHOP was enacted by Parliament, but the graduated mortgage payment plan was brought in last year, not by an act of Parliament, but by the issuance of press releases. There seems to be some connection between Christmas and an election. I find that the members of the cabinet are now, like late Christmas shoppers, going around trying to get their last minute Christmas shopping done.

The sponsor of the bill, Senator Molgat, is, I am sure, well aware of the problems created by AHOP. One-half of the homes repossessed by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation were purchased under AHOP. I would be very interested to learn from the sponsor of the bill how many homes have been repossessed in the first, second and third years of the program.

Several of the financial institutions have refused to go along with the graduated mortgage payment scheme, and have recommended to their clients that it is a very unsatisfactory plan. They have advised them not to participate in it. Perhaps we can have some further information on the number of leading chartered banks and trust companies which have refused to participate in the plan.

A few days ago I received this brochure from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, and I draw your attention to it. It shows that for each unit of $1,000 that the individual borrows the amount owed keeps increasing. I am not much of an economist, but it seems to me that after you have paid on a home for six years the amount of the debt should be reduced somewhat; but this is not the case. Just look at the tables. At the end of six years of payments on the mortgage, for each unit of $1,000 the victim now owes $1,068.10. The figure keeps on increasing, and it is not until the eleventh year of a twenty-five year mortgage that we find the amount of the mortgage beginning to reduce. Only one thing can possibly happen. About 50 per cent of those who are sucked in by this program will walk away from the house and say, "Here. Take it back. I can no longer afford to go any further into debt, and you can take full responsibility."

The bill also provides for the construction of modest cost rental projects by non-profit corporations. I was intrigued by the eloquence of the minister in the other place in describing what a wonderful balance of people he was going to get to move into these units. The minister would have us believe that a certain percentage would be made up of those who could afford to pay the market price and more, with the balance being those unfortunate enough not to be able to pay the market price. In fact, one would almost think that the Prime Minister had spoken for one of the units for occupancy after the next election.

I do not think we are going to get that mix of people in these units. They will be considered low-cost housing, and anyone who can afford to pay the market price will live elsewhere rather than face the stigma of living in low-cost housing.

Reference was made to the fact that the provinces and municipalities would participate in absorbing any losses on these units. I would appreciate an explanation as to the percentage of the total loss to be assumed by the provinces and municipalities.

The proposed section 54.4 provides for a termination date of not more than two years after the coming into force of Part VIII.1 of the bill for any application for a grant under community services. I fail to see the urgency for such a termination date, especially when one considers the length of time it takes an applicant to receive approval from the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Unless that termination date is extended, we will have only about a dozen projects approved in the first two years.

The sponsor of the bill did not mention the Neighbourhood Improvement Program. Perhaps that program is being phased out. The budget for NIP in 1979 is listed as $79 million. However, $37 million of that is committed for projects on which work has already commenced. A further $3 million is designated for projects already approved, leaving $16 million for new projects in 1979. Already approved are 68 projects, taking up $7 million, leaving $9 million for approximately 2,250 units for the year. I suspect that those interested in NIP will receive the same response as they would for RRAP, which Senator Marshall very adequately covered this afternoon.

Housing starts declined in February this year by 27 per cent from January. They are down 43 per cent from February

[Senator Phillips.]

1978. The February rate was the lowest since 1975, and the projected rate of housing for the year will be the lowest since 1970.

● (2030)

Senator Steuart: Everybody has one, that's why. Let's face the fact; we are the best-housed people in the world.

Senator Phillips: Everybody may possibly have a home, but I am not too sure that Senator Steuart would want to share them all.

Senator Steuart: I have shared a few of them in my time. I should like to ask the honourable senator a question.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Order.

Senator Grosart: Ask permission first.

Senator Steuart: I know the rules.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Order, please.

Senator Steuart: May I ask the senator a question?

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Yes, you may, but I do not think any senator should interrupt another senator who is speaking. However, if a senator wishes to ask a question, he may do so.

Senator Phillips: You can ask the question, Senator Steuart, when I have finished my remarks.

I do not expect an improvement in the housing situation this year, and in support of that remark, I refer to a comment made by the Honourable Robert Andras who is President of the Board of Economic Development Ministers—in other words, he is the keeper of the purse strings. He said:

The view has been put that there will not be a requirement for the same number of housing starts that prevailed over the last five or ten years.

I think in each of the last five years they exceeded well over 200,000, or closer to 250,000.

It is doubtful there will be a requirement for that level of starts, so the industry is going to move into industrial and commercial enterprises—

There is obviously a divergence of views between that of the Minister of Housing and Urban Affairs and the President of the Board of Economic Ministers. On the one hand, Mr. Ouellet is saying the numbers will increase and, on the other, Mr. Andras is saying they are going to decline. Perhaps at the committee stage we could hear from both ministers and have them explain their different views.

Senator Steuart: Would the honourable senator answer a question?

Senator Phillips: I will do my best.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: The Honourable Senator Steuart.

Senator Steuart: Would you deny that there has been more housing starts per capita in the last five years in Canada than in any of the other western nations of the world?

Senator Phillips: I think that is quite possible, but I would point out that we are also the youngest of the countries in the western world. The number of houses required in, say, Great Britain is not going to be as great as in Canada. Some of their homes were built a long time ago; we are just building our homes now, so it is difficult to make the comparison.

Senator Steuart: Would the honourable senator also admit that we have more single dwellings per capita than any other nation in the western world?

Senator Phillips: We have adequate space for single dwellings, and many of the other countries do not.

Hon. Gildas L. Molgat: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: I wish to inform the Senate that if the Honourable Senator Molgat speaks now, his speech will have the effect of closing the debate on the motion for the second reading of this bill.

Senator Molgat: I want to thank very much the honourable senators who have participated in this debate because I think all of us, regardless of which side of the house we are on, recognize that the question of providing good housing at reasonable prices to Canadians is one of the essential responsibilities that we, in government, accept. What we are trying to do in this debate is to find the best way of serving that need.

Earlier today there were indications that there might be some difficulties in having the minister responsible present when the Senate was ready to proceed with the bill in committee, and I attempted at that time to be in a position to answer in detail the questions posed by honourable senators. Since then, fortunately, the minister has made himself available and is at the present time waiting to appear before a Committee of the Whole, if that should be the decision of the Senate, and will be in a position to answer in detail the various questions that have been posed. So I shall not attempt to cover all of them; I shall touch on some of them as best I can, and if further details are required, then the minister, I am sure, will be more than pleased to give more extended answers.

I want to touch on one item that has been mentioned, and that is the urgency of the debate and the passage of the bill, and I should like to thank my honourable friends for having agreed to this and allowing the debate to go forward as it has. As honourable senators are aware, the other place did co-operate very well in this regard, and there was all-party agreement, following discussions, on a number of amendments put forward and accepted. The bill, I think, received very general approval.

Again on the question of urgency, I can tell you that this afternoon there was a telegram delivered to the Leader of the Government in the Senate, the Honourable Ray Perrault, which reads as follows:

The Real Estate Board of Greater Vancouver, representing some 4,000 members and associates in the Vancouver Metropolitan area, is vitally concerned with the legislation contained in Bill C-29, amendments to the National Housing Act, now before the house. We urgently solicit your support in ensuring a speedy passage of this bill.

Ian G. Dennis, President

This is an example of many of the communications that have come forward.

Senator Marshall: From one end of the country.

Senator Molgat: From one end of the country, but I think the bill does provide for some help as well for another end of the country, that is represented by my honourable colleague Senator Marshall, who spoke eloquently this afternoon. When he asks, "What is the point of spending money on insulation when there are no windows or doors?" I think he puts the case in a most forceful manner. I say to him that I think the bill will provide some help for those houses with no windows or doors, because the intention of the bill is, in fact, to provide more money.

Specifically on the point he was making, first, the bill will remove the designated areas so that now all housing which is considered to fall under the "needs" category can be considered. So "designation" is not going to be a factor. It will no longer be the case, as he was saying, that some areas will not be getting help.

Secondly, there is a question of the amounts of money available. Previously we were depending on government funds, and these, by the very nature of things, are limited. Under the new program it will no longer be a case of depending on government funds; it will be a case of private funds guaranteed by government. Instead of dealing with a limited amount of government dollars, in future we will in fact be dealing with a virtually unlimited private source insured by government, guaranteed by government. So we should be able to provide under the new act much more help to areas such as the one Senator Marshall speaks of. I think, therefore, that this bill will be of great assistance to the kinds of areas Senator Marshall is concerned with.

● (2040)

Senator Phillips has touched on a number of points. I will not cover all of them, but briefly, if I may, I will answer his question regarding NIP. That program is cancelled. That is true. However, it is being replaced by a new program which is better because it is broader. It is a program he will find in the bill under Part VIII.1, Community Services. Far from being a reduction, he will find, I think, that it is an improvement and a better service to the areas involved.

Senator Phillips also mentioned the inventory of housing under AHOP and how much of that had been turned back to the government. The information that I have is that the unsold AHOP houses have gone down by half, from 28,000 units at the end of 1977 to 14,000 units at the end of 1978. It is true that some have been turned back, but I think it is inevitable that there will be some cases like that. When we go into programs to assist people on marginal incomes, we have to accept that risk. But the totals are encouraging. At the moment only 3 per cent of the total are in default; 97 per cent are up to date. I think it is unlikely that half of those would turn out to be in default in the future. I accept, though, that, when you are dealing with marginal areas, the risk is greater.

Nevertheless, it is a risk we have to accept when taking the proper social role of helping those people who are in the greatest need.

I should like to close on a question Senator Grosart put to me in the first instance when I introduced the bill. I regret that I did not reply to him at that point, because I could have in part, at least, if not in full.

One of the purposes of the bill is to move towards privatization. That is the use of private funds rather than public funds, but private funds encouraged by a government guarantee or government insurance. That enables us to tap the enormous resource of private capital in this country and use the government resource of insurability, the government guarantee, to bring that private capital into that social area, that housing area where there is a need. Rather than calling on more government money, therefore, this bill in fact reduces the demands on the public purse.

Last year the overall demand on capital budget by CMHC was in the order of $1.3 billion. That was the rough CMHC capital budget. The current budget provisions under this bill are down to $450 million—in other words, one-third of the previous capital requirements. When you consider that it was $1.3 billion one year ago, and then take into consideration inflation and the increase in demands we could have expected had there not been a new bill, the demands this year for capital purposes would have gone substantially beyond $1.3 billion. This bill will cause a very substantial reduction so far as public funds are concerned. There will, of course, be a public guarantee for private funds that will be used, but I think this is a very major step forward.

Honourable senators, I hope I have in general terms answered the questions asked. If there are further details, and if it is the wish of the Senate, we may hear them directly from the minister himself.

I commend the bill for second reading.

Senator Grosart: I wonder if Senator Molgat would agree that an adequate answer to the somewhat frenetic intervention by Senator Steuart might be found in the words of the minister when he introduced this bill in the other place on February 21:

Our present housing programs, which are undertaken in conjunction with the provincial governments, hardly provide at the moment 19,000 units a year; it is not enough to meet the needs of the country. It is obvious that we must build each year a greater number of units for old and low income people.

Senator Steuart: Honourable senators—

Senator Grosart: I was not asking Senator Steuart.

Senator Steuart: You referred to my “frenetic intervention.”

Senator Grosart: I was asking a question of the sponsor of the bill, Senator Molgat. We do have rules here, you know. Perhaps the sponsor of the bill would like to answer, and then perhaps His Honour will permit an intervention by Senator Steuart.

[Senator Molgat.]

Senator Molgat: I think the minister stated the position directly. He did say that 19,000 units for people in the low income brackets, an particularly older people, were insufficient. I think the number he proposed was 30,000 units annually, and one of the purposes of this bill is to enable this to happen. The use of private funds to encourage this is, I think, a good thing, and I believe the government can do a better job by guarantee rather than doing it directly itself.

Senator Grosart: Those were not my questions. I was asking about the intervention of Senator Steuart.

Senator Molgat: I am replying to the question Senator Grosart posed to me, not the question of Senator Steuart.

Senator Steuart: Honourable senators, might I add something?

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: In all fairness, since Senator Steuart's name was mentioned by Senator Grosart, I think I should allow him to clarify the situation.

Senator Steuart: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Honourable senators, I was not talking about whether we need more housing or not. There is no question but that we need more housing. That is why the government has brought in this bill. The Liberal government recognizes that we need more housing for the poor and the old. My question was: Is it not a fact that in Canada in the last five years we have produced more houses per capita than any other nation in the western world; and is it not also a fact that we have more single-family dwellings in Canada per capita than any other nation in the western world? The point I am trying to make is that we have achieved tremendous success in housing in this country, but being a Liberal government, of course, the government is not satisfied and wants to do more.

Senator Molgat: In answer to Senator Steuart's question, I think I have to agree with him that the total production has in fact been very substantial. We are probably the best housed nation in the world. I believe we have done tremendous things, and all of us who have been to housing project openings, particularly those for senior citizens, recognize what has been done. However, there is still more to do—and the bill attempts to do that very thing—to provide even better housing. That is no criticism of what has been done. It is an ambition to do even better.

Senator Grosart: A good answer to a question that was not asked.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

● (2050)

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read a third time?

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, I move, seconded by the Honourable Senator Hastings, that the bill be committed to a Committee of the Whole presently.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate was accordingly adjourned during pleasure and put into a Committee of the Whole on the bill, the Honourable Senator Neiman, in the Chair.

Pursuant to rule 18 of the Rules of the Senate, the Honourable André Ouellet, P.C., Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Urban Affairs, was escorted to a seat in the Senate Chamber.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, the Senate is in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-29, intituled: "An Act to amend the National Housing Act and the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act and to make other related amendments."

Shall discussion of the title of the bill be postponed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Senator Marshall: Madam Chairman, I presume that clause 1 is broad enough to deal with many aspects, and I am sure the minister will be able to determine what my interest was in the House of Commons and indeed still is—the provision of help in the form of financial assistance to those in substandard housing.

The minister has indicated the need, and I think in his own words he used a figure of 155,000 who required "RRAPing" under NIP or Rural and Native Housing. I have advocated that program for many years, and my only quarrel is the lack of funds for that purpose.

In my speech today on second reading, I tried to relate the fact that there was not enough money directed into RRAP programs, in whatever area, whether under NIP or Rural and Native Housing, yet the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources can provide $1.4 billion for the Canadian Home Insulation Program.

According to the records, from answers I have received in reply to questions on the order paper, the amount of money that had to be directed to that end has been negligible. I can only ask for the minister's comments. Insulation is of no use to the widows, senior citizens and poor people who cannot make their houses tight, in order to take advantage of insulation. They cannot even use it, even if they could afford to spend the $350. There should be consultation with this interdepartmental task force, or whatever is the committee that will deal with the matter, with a view to providing more funds from the insulation program, which is not being used, toward the RRAP which, in my opinion, is probably the greatest program with which to help Canadians face life and to encourage national unity.

Another point—and this is something that I wanted—is the universality aspect that is included in this bill. But unfortunately we are faced with the problem we had before, where areas had to be designated, and where there was not enough money for municipalities to include the overall municipality, city, or town with a population of over 2,500 people or to deliver the RRAP to those people in the city who needed it.

I hesitate to use the letter that was tabled in the House of Commons, but it indicated that of the $56 million that is going to be allocated next year, with all the commitments that have been made there will be only enough to provide 2,250 units in Canada—which, in my opinion, is unfortunate and does not meet the needs of those people whom we could serve. It would be such a boost to this country if we were able to help the poverty stricken lengthen the existing life of their homes by 15 or 20 years.

I am wondering whether this is a matter of concern to the minister. Perhaps he will tell us how he can overcome this lack of funding which will delay the deliverance of RRAP to so many people who deserve it?

Hon. Mr. Ouellet: Honourable senators, I appreciate the opportunity that I have been given to appear before you to explain some of the elements of this legislation and to answer questions. I appreciate the intervention of the honourable senator. I share his belief that there is indeed a substantial lack of public funds to meet the needs of those who are living in substandard accommodation, or those who are looking forward to taking advantage of the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program.

The reason for this legislation is to try to get the private sector to become more involved, to do its share. The two levels of government, federal and provincial, quickly realized that in order to put in the market the appropriate number of social housing units required they would have to rely more heavily on the private sector, on the financial institutions, to support the government's initiative.

● (2100)

We believe that through the arrangement permissible under this legislation the production of social housing units will be tripled in the coming years. Surely, our level of production of social housing units that was around 14,000 to 16,000 units a year will definitely, within a year or 18 months, jump to 30,000 units a year. We hope it will increase as the new mechanisms of co-operation between the federal and provincial government are in place. We hope to substantially increase the production of social housing units.

In relation to your remark regarding Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Programs, I want to say that we are, indeed, making sure that by asking the private sector to make loans available we will retain our cash requirement that is necessary to pay the subsidies. The owner will be in a position then to go to a bank, credit union or other financial institution to borrow the money rather than go to the federal government. We will insure the loan and have all the cash requirements available to subsidize a portion of the program. We believe that we will be able to extend considerably, therefore, our effort and our involvement in the rehabilitation of homes.

As you will notice in the bill, we are doing away with the designated areas. This means that anybody living anywhere in Canada will be eligible for the program. It was felt unjust that some people, because they were living in a designated area, were eligible for the program, and somebody else living across the street or in another village was not eligible because the village or the street in the city was not designated as being part of the program.

In closing my remarks, I wish to refer to a letter which was prepared by the President of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, because the honourable senator mentioned it. Many members of the other place in their remarks also referred to this letter. I must say that they have given a wrong interpretation to that letter. The letter, if read thoroughly from the first line to the last line, talks about a 10-year plan. No one, in all seriousness, could contemplate to do overnight the extremely important task of rehabilitation of homes in Canada. The honourable senator is quite right in saying that we are putting forward this program to assist Canadians accustomed to living in homes in certain sections of the city to continue to live there rather than be expatriated to the suburbs. We hope that they take advantage of this program because they would rehabilitate their home and permit it to be a good home for another 10, 15 or 20 years.

Therefore, the intent of the letter that has been prepared by the President of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation was to make sure that nobody could say that we would do the job overnight. It is a 10-year program. Indeed, this letter was written before the legislation was introduced and before we opened up the possibility of the provision of resource funds by private sector financial institutions. It is now a new ball game. That letter has a minor significance because now we have a new environment.

We do believe that we could have a universal program that will be implemented in a certain period of years. It cannot be done overnight. We will have more money available via the private sector, and the funds from the federal government will then be available for the subsidies portion which is extremely important in such a program, particularly in areas where people have modest incomes.

Senator Marshall: Madam Chairman, I do not think the minister and I are in conflict. I recognize that in order to satisfy every need the amount would become exorbitant. However, I still disagree with the fact that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has $1.4 billion to spend over seven years when that money could be better placed in the hands of those who require RRAP grants.

I agree also that it has to be a 10-year plan, and I am glad to see it is happening that way. It might have happened better in 1973 when the program came into place. The other fault I see is the—and I hate to use the word—bureaucracy, but, as I mentioned in my speech earlier this day, one of my constituents wrote to me indicating that she was refused a RRAP grant because she owed money to the T. Eaton Company 15 years ago.

As I further indicated, I can own a $100,000 home and would still owe money. Anyone owning a $1 million home would still owe money. I point that out to show that there is such a jungle of different interpretations of what the deliverance is supposed to be, and what the objectives are supposed to be. I agree with the minister, and I hope the private sector will provide the money, but when people go to look for that loan I hope that the government will have people in place in the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation's offices to be able to stop the difficulties which a poor person has to face and be able to deliver the RRAP grant. I have to say that the RRAP is a marvelous program. That is more of an observation than a question.

I wonder if I could move on to the non-profit and co-operative housing aspects of the bill. Again, the co-operative housing program could be a great asset to the many low-income earners if they get together and build homes. They are now getting more benefits than they ever got before. I am a little stymied by the definition of a non-profit organization. I wonder if the minister could, in a few short words, define that, because I will receive many more letters and will be trying to help these non-profit organizations get into this, and to help other people get into public housing, or meet whatever the need is.

• (2110)

Hon. Mr. Ouellet: Madam Chairman, I think the easiest explanation I could give is that there are two types of non-profit organization. First of all, these are the public non-profit projects, sponsored by the provinces, for social housing for the aged or low-income families. These are the normal, conventional programs put forward by the provincial non-profit organizations.

We have made provision, in this piece of legislation, for the possibility of municipalities with the appropriate infrastructure to sponsor such projects, and therefore financial institutions will be financing quite heavily the municipal non-profit organizations.

Then there is a third group, which I will call the private non-profit group. Here we have in mind church organizations—various charitable or social clubs—that create non-profit corporations for the purpose of building old age homes or residences for families, or another group, the co-operative movement, that is becoming more and more active. They are also private non-profit organizations.

The delivery of units, therefore, for social housing purposes, will take these various avenues, whether through the public, provincial or municipal non-profit organizations, or via the private non-profit organizations, be they the co-operative movements or the social club movements.

Senator Marshall: A veterans housing program was introduced a few years ago, and it seems that the veterans are becoming more and more involved, or should be, in the provision of housing for veterans and senior citizens. I think the legislation states that they can provide shelter for senior citizens, but 50 per cent has to go to the outside. I am a little alarmed by the fact that there is nothing included in this bill along those lines, although it could involve the veterans affairs legislation, in the sense that I have been hearing rumours that part of the legislation might be cut off. Could the minister clarify whether this is so or not?

Hon. Mr. Ouellet: Madam Chairman, I can indeed reassure the honourable senator that there is no mention in this piece of legislation of that matter, because what we are dealing with is a series of amendments to the National Housing Act, and there is no mention here of the veterans program. This does not mean that we do not consider that to be an important program on its own merits. It has its own funding, and is indeed still very much alive.

Senator Marshall: The other part that I liked about the program, if I can believe it, is the community services. I think the NIP has been a good program. Unfortunately, a lot of municipalities could not take advantage of it because they could not repay the federal loans. There was a perfect example of this in my district, in the town of Stephenville. They had to give up a $400,000 loan, or grant, because they did not think they could keep up the payments.

I am interested in the wide scope of the community services program. Indeed, I almost cannot believe that municipalities can do almost anything to improve their town halls, and put up rinks and recreation centres, and I am wondering if the minister may not be a little too ambitious in thinking that private lenders are going to place those many millions of dollars. I am sure the minister must have checked, but could he give us some idea of what is actually going to happen, apart from the words that are so inviting in the legislation?

Hon. Mr. Ouellet: The section of the bill dealing with the community services program permits Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to administer such a program. The honourable senator was referring before to the neighbourhood improvement program, or the sewage treatment programs that existed before, and which were rather sectorial and limited in their approach. Through discussions with the provinces and municipalities across Canada, it came to our attention that we ought to design a program that would provide much more flexibility to the municipalities in the selection of their own priorities, and enable them to provide the kind of infrastructure work that they felt was important.

What the federal government used to do under the previous program was merely to force the hand of municipalities by saying, "Here are some resources that are available if you will carry out some neighbourhood improvement projects." Many municipalities were interested in this and were happy to take advantage of the program; but a number of others felt that they had another set of priorities. Substantially, by making almost any type of local infrastructure work eligible under this umbrella known as the community services program, we let the municipalities, with the concurrence of the provinces, decide how they would spend the money. What we do is to make a grant that is applicable to the reimbursement of municipal expenditures. What this means in reality is that the municipalities have their own budget, and their budget is approved by the province after consultations between the provincial and municipal authorities. In producing their budget, and in allocating funds for their various programs, they know that some funds will come from the federal government which are to be used to reimburse certain expenditures incurred by municipalities for certain types of projects that have been approved by their provincial government and the federal government.

The financing aspects in these situations are no different from the ones that normally occur within a municipality. As far as the federal government is concerned there are no strings attached and no specific conditions. The fund is there, and goes directly to the municipalities via the province, to reimburse the cost of some of their projects. It is therefore an indirect method of helping municipalities that are encountering the financial difficulties. We do believe that it will have a tremendous effect, not only in terms of allowing municipalities to undertake certain projects that they would otherwise have put aside for a period of time, but will also have the advantage of creating a number of jobs at the local level in a variety of small municipal work projects.

Senator Marshall: Would any municipality that drew up a plan for municipal improvements along the lines we mentioned have to apply to the province, and would the province have to apply to the federal government on a priority basis, as before, or would the municipality concerned, if it wanted to take on a project next year, for example, have to wait because the province decided that some other community had a higher priority? Can they be assured that their efforts will be recognized without having to go through the priority system of the province in dealing with the federal government?

● (2120)

Hon. Mr. Ouellet: For example, Newfoundland is eligible for $4.2 million in 1979—

Senator Marshall: Not enough.

Hon. Mr. Ouellet:—and for $7 million in 1980.

Senator Marshall: Better.

Hon. Mr. Ouellet: The municipalities in Newfoundland would prepare their budgets and plans in the normal course. They would then discuss the planned projects with the appropriate provincial authority. The provincial authority would, in turn, negotiate with the federal government the distribution of the funds allocated to that province. The federal government will enter into an agreement with each province under which the provinces will designate a certain number of municipalities for specific projects. Once the projects are completed, the municipalities so designated will receive, through their provincial government, a cheque from the federal government.

Senator Steuart: If I might ask a supplementary question, isn't it true that the priority still lies with the provincial authority? Your department will not deal directly with the municipalities. If a province wishes to squeeze a given municipality out, it will be able to do so. Isn't that true?

Hon. Mr. Ouellet: Madam Chairman, in reply to the honourable senator's question, the answer is yes. The first priority lies with the municipalities. However, municipalities, under our federal system, are creatures of the provinces, and we must respect that jurisdiction. We will not deal directly with the municipalities. We will only entertain those proposals coming through the respective provincial authorities. If the provincial authority does not wish to put forth a given proposal for consideration, that will end it. That is a decision that will be made at the level of the provincial government, not the federal government.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, I listened with interest to the explanation of the minister respecting the community services aspect of the bill. The proposed section 54.4 has a cut-off date two years after the coming into force of the act. Why is the period in which this provision will operate so short?

Hon. Mr. Ouellet: Madam Chairman, the cut-off date in question is not in relation to this new program as such. Rather, it is in relation to the old program. We felt that a period of two years would allow projects entertained under previous programs to meet the eligibility standards for any extra funds that could be required as a result of unexpected costs. If, for example, a project under the previous program was estimated to cost $1 million and had escalated to $1.5 million, this would allow an adjustment to be made. We felt there had to be a certain period in which such adjustments could be made, and this was the one we chose.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, I would suggest that we deal with questions of a general nature at this stage and leave questions on specifics to our clause-by-clause consideration.

Senator Phillips: Madam Chairman, I should like to follow up on a question raised by Senator Marshall in relation to the co-operative or non-profit housing ventures. I had some difficulty following the explanation made in the other place as to who would be responsible for losses incurred in projects of this nature, and I am wondering whether the minister might now explain that to us.

Hon. Mr. Ouellet: Madam Chairman, any project entertained by a province will obviously come under the responsibility of the provincial authority. In the case of private non-profit organizations receiving funds from the private sector, the federal government will guarantee the loan. If the project went sour, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation would take up the slack.

Under the new program, the intention is to try to promote a multiplicity of projects smaller in nature than was the case under previous programs. We believe that the huge projects of the past sponsored by private non-profit organizations were not really appropriate. In terms of the social environment, such projects created all kinds of problems. In effect, they created ghettos in the sense that you then had a number of people in the same income range crowded into a given project. We do not believe that is necessary. To avoid that, the policy is to support the initiatives of church and other private group organizations who would like to form a non-profit group. We will encourage them to buy in a small village or build projects with not more than 30 or 35 units. These smaller projects are easier to manage and are less risky than are the huge projects that we have seen attempted in the past. If there have to be large projects, we believe they should come under the responsibility of the public non-profit organization, the province or municipality.

[Hon. Mr. Ouellet.]

Senator Phillips: Would the municipality be treated in the same respect as the provinces in absorbing the losses on a municipal-sponsored project?

Hon. Mr. Ouellet: Yes, except we have indicated that, in terms of guarantees, we will accept debentures of municipalities. Indeed, by and large, any municipality that is permitted to proceed with a municipally sponsored project under the provincial authority will not be in the position to freely manoeuvre without having the prior approval of the province. So to that degree, at any rate, there is some control exercised by the provinces in relation to municipal initiatives.

● (2130)

Senator Phillips: If I might change the subject, I am sure we have all read, in the newspapers, criticism of the graduated mortgage payment plan. I have particular criticisms of that, Mr. Minister. I notice that various banks and trust companies have criticized it, and even bankers, who sometimes consider the best interests of their clients, have advised their clients not to participate in this program. Have you received formal notification from any of the chartered institutions of the banks and major trust companies that they will not participate?

Hon. Mr. Ouellet: Madam Chairman, I should like to answer the honourable senator by saying that, indeed, we did receive, at the early stages of the proposition for this new graduated payment mortgage plan, some reservation and some opposition by some financial institutions. Some banks expressed their concern about the scheme.

Since the program has been implemented, over 5,000 units have already been financed via the graduated payment mortgage plan. We know that a number of trust companies, credit unions, caisses populaires, and some financial institutions have decided to offer this option to their clients. We believe that the program has experienced some success in some states of the United States of America.

By and large the initial reaction of the financial institutions has been rather prudent, and that is natural, and I am not scandalized by it. However, I do believe that pretty soon you will see almost every financial institution introducing a type of graduated mortgage payment scheme.

I read in the paper, no less than 10 days ago, that one very large banking institution in Canada was putting forward its own version of a graduated payment mortgage program. It was not called that, but when you look at the detail you see that it amounts to exactly the same thing.

Senator Grosart: I would just ask one general question of the minister, and it relates again to the non-profit housing program. The minister has been very emphatic in assuring those who participate that their interest rate obligation will be held down indefinitely to 2 per cent. He said:

—no doubt that we will grant you an annual subsidy to reduce that rate of interest, which may be 10 or 9 per cent, as I said, to 2 per cent. The difference between that

2 per cent and the 10 or 11 per cent the market may be asking, you will receive each year in federal government grants.

To my mind, this raises two questions. One, of course, is: Are these to be "grants" in the technical sense or are they to be subsidies? If they are grants, of course, they are not subject to audit. Perhaps the minister can tell us whether these are actual grants in the technical sense under the Financial Administration Act and other acts.

My second question, which is more important, is: What is the time guarantee on these promises of the federal government? We are all aware that it has been the recent practice of the federal government to unilaterally terminate some of its obligations in this general area. We have recently had the federal government unilaterally say, in the hospital and medicare field, "We are just terminating our obligation unilaterally; you have nothing to say. We are not going to consult you in advance. We are terminating this." What is the nature of the guarantee to these non-profit housing entities which may enter into this that the federal government will not at any time unilaterally terminate its obligation to them and, therefore, leave them at the mercy of the market mortgage rate?

Hon. Mr. Ouellet: Madam Chairman, in answering the question of the honourable senator, I would say to the first question that these funds are going directly to the various non-profit organizations, that is, a provincial, municipal or a private organization, in the nature of a subsidy. Depending on the income of the people who live in the projects, the portion of the federal government contribution will vary according to the income generated in the projects. We will not be obliged to pay if the revenue of the people living there escalates to a point where the rate of the rent in the projects make them profitable. Being a non-profit organization, we will cover only the portion that is necessary to pay the difference in the operation.

In relation to the second question, I want to assure the honourable senator that, indeed, the projects as they will be approved, would have to be approved according to the funds voted annually by Parliament to the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. There is a sort of ongoing fund that will enable every project to be financed. We know every year in advance what funds have to be attributed to certain types of projects. I would be appalled to see these types of obligations not fulfilled in the future.

Senator Grosart: As a supplementary question, could I ask what the nature of the covenant or agreement will be. Will it be one which is enforceable in law by someone who has entered into one of these agreements in good faith? Will they have a document that they can enforce in law?

Hon. Mr. Ouellet: Madam Chairman, the answer is yes. Indeed, they will be true contracts duly executed and signed.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1.1 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 3 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 4 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 5 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 6 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 6.1 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 6.2 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 7 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 8 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 9 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 10 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 11 carry?

Senator Grosart: Perhaps the minister would explain the purpose and the effect of the change in paragraph (d) from what was contained in section 34.13. The present paragraph (a) reads:

(a) prescribing the maximum aggregate amount the payment of which may be forgiven in any year by the Corporation under section 34.11—

Whereas in the bill the amendment is:

(c) prescribing the maximum aggregate amount of contributions that may be made in any year by the Corporation—

Could he just explain why there is a radical difference in the wording there? This is found on page 8.

● (2140)

Hon. Mr. Ouellet: Are you referring to clause 11, Senator Grosart?

Senator Grosart: I am actually using the bill as introduced on first reading. I think the present version has exactly the same wording, and that it is still clause 11.

Hon. Mr. Ouellet: There is a slight problem here because I think the honourable senator is referring to the old version of the bill. Clauses 10, 11 and 12, as they appeared in the old version, have been dropped completely from the new version.

The Chairman: Shall clause 11 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 12 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 13 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 14 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall the title of the bill carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall I report the bill without amendment?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

[Translation]

Senator Langlois: Madam Chairman, before you leave the Chair and on behalf of my colleagues, I should like to extend our sincere thanks to the minister for coming here tonight and explaining this bill to us. We want him to know that we are proud of him and that we should be very happy to see him again.

[English]

Senator Grosart: Madam Chairman, may I offer the same congratulations to the minister from the opposition group in English.

Senator Molgat: Does the honourable senator extend that to mean for many occasions in the future and for a long time?

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: The sitting is resumed.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Senator Neiman: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole, to which was referred Bill C-29, to amend the National Housing Act and the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act and to make other related amendments, has considered this bill and has the honour to report the same without amendment.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator Molgat: Honourable senators, with leave, I move third reading now.

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

ADJOURNMENT

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Before the question is put I would like to inform the honourable senators that arrangements have been made for royal assent to be given this bill which we have just passed at 2.15 tomorrow afternoon.

Senator Grosart: Before the question is put, would the Deputy Leader of the Government indicate the effect on our sitting time of the motion he has just made?

Senator Langlois: I am sorry, I did not quite understand the question.

Senator Grosart: At what time will we sit tomorrow if the motion you have just moved is adopted.

Senator Langlois: It all depends on whether we get something else from the other place. I never enjoy trying to be a prophet in respect to the legislative progress in the other place, but there is a possibility that we might be getting some other legislation from them. If that is the case then, after royal assent, we will deal with it.

Senator Grosart: The purpose of my question was to ask if automatically under our rules the Senate would sit at 2 o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

Senator Langlois: Yes.

Senator Grosart: Would the deputy leader care to indicate why he believes it is necessary for us to sit tomorrow? Has he any knowledge or information about a possible impending announcement that might make our presence here tomorrow not merely useful but absolutely necessary?

Senator Langlois: I thought I had replied in anticipation to the first part of the question. As to the second part, I would like to tell my honourable friend that I am not privy to the secrets of the gods so I cannot answer it. I still hope that we might have some measures coming to us from the other place, and I hope that that situation will materialize.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

APPENDIX

(See page 774)

STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

REPORT ON THE SUBJECT MATTER OF BILL C-15

"AN ACT

TO REVISE THE BANK ACT,

TO AMEND THE QUEBEC SAVINGS BANKS ACT
AND THE BANK OF CANADA ACT,

TO ESTABLISH THE CANADIAN PAYMENTS ASSOCIATION AND TO AMEND OTHER ACTS IN CONSEQUENCE THEREOF"

March 7, 1979

INDEX TO REPORT

	Sec. No. Bill C-15	Report Page No.
GENERAL INTRODUCTION
DIVISION I
THE BANK ACT
I. FOREIGN BANKS
General	294	7
(i) Limit on Growth in Size Market Share and Indexing	173(2)(e)	14
(ii) Limiting the Total of Commercial Financing of All Foreign Bank Subsidiaries Instead of Limiting Assets of all Foreign Bank Sub- sidiaries to 15% of Total Commercial Financing in Canada	294(5)	14
(iii) Grandfathering of Transitional Provision Relation to Assets and Investments		16
(iv) Limit on Number of Branches and Grandfathering of such Limits	172(2)	18
(v) Ministerial Discretions to Permit the Establishment of new Foreign Bank Subsidiaries notwithstanding result- ing Temporary Exceeding of 15% Limit	294(5)	19

INDEX TO REPORT

	Sec. No. Bill C-15	Report Page No.
(vi) Prohibition of affiliate borrowing on guarantee of parent	298	20
(vii) Competitiveness & Reciprocity	8(d)	20
(viii) Licensing	8(d)	21
(ix) Application of FIRA	299	22
2. RESERVES
(i) Proposed changes	204	23
(ii) Phasing in reductions in rates of primary reserve	204(2)	23
(iii) Foreign currency deposits used domestically	204(1)(g)	26
(iv) Exemption for term deposits	204(8)(d)	29
(v) Reduction in the primary requirement of 1% on the first $500 million of C$ notice deposits	204(1)(e)	31
(vi) Exclusion of RRSP and RHOSP deposits from reserve requirement	204(8)(a)	31
(vii) Exclusion of deposits from other banks for purpose of calculating primary reserve	204(8)(b)	31
(viii) Payment of interest on primary cash reserve	204(1)	32

INDEX TO REPORT

	Sec. No. Bill C-15	Report Page No.
3. ENTRY INTO BANKING
(i) Method of incorporation of new banks and form of review	7	33
(ii) Ownership of bank shares by provincial governments	114(2)	33
(iii) Limit on the holding of banks shares by co-operative corporations	110(4)	34
4. BUSINESS POWERS OF BANKS
(i) Financial leasing of equipment	172(1)(i)	36
(ii) Factoring	172(1)(h)	39
(iii) Data processing	172(1)(k)	40
5. LOANS AND SECURITY
(i) Residential mortgage lending	175	42
(ii) Security for loans	177	46
6. BANK DIRECTORS	59 & 35(1)(2)	46
7. INVESTMENTS
(i) Ownership by banks in Canadian companies	192(2)	48
(ii) Venture Capital Corporations	192(6)	49
(iii) Dealing in Securities	189	50
8. FOREIGN STORAGE OF BANK RECORDS	156(4)	51

INDEX TO REPORT

	Sec. No. Bill C-15	Report Page No.
9. FINANCIAL DISCLOSURE
(i) Appropriations for losses	Schedule M	53
(ii) Filing of financial statements and returns	213	53
(iii) Regulations on Cost of Borrowing	198(4)	53
10. CANADA BUSINESS CORPORATIONS ACT	Various sections	54
11. MISCELLANEOUS TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS	Various sections	55
DIVISION II
QUEBEC SAVINGS BANKS ACT
Part II of Bill C-15 (Clauses 4 to 39 inclusive)		56
DIVISION III
BANK OF CANADA ACT
Part III of Bill C-15 (Clauses 40 to 48 inclusive)		60
DIVISION IV
CANADIAN PAYMENTS ASSOCIATION ACT
Part IV of Bill C-15 (Clauses 49 to 83 inclusive)		61

SUMMARY

The following is a summary of some of the recommendations reported upon by the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce in respect of Bill C-15 "An Act to revise the Bank Act, to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act and the Bank of Canada Act, to establish the Canadian Payments Association and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof", March 1979.

FOREIGN BANKS

- * The Committee approves the concept of admission to full bank status of foreign banks through the incorporation of foreign bank subsidiaries under the control of the Bank Act.
- * The Committee approves of the principle of the imposition of some limit upon the growth of individual foreign bank subsidiaries and specifically approves of a limit of 20 times authorized capital. The Committee also approves of the absence from the Bill of any statutory limit on authorized capital.
- * The Committee recommends a system of indexing of the asset size to which a foreign bank subsidiary might grow as tied to the rate of growth of Canadian owned chartered banks.
- * The Committee recommends the adoption of criteria for growth of the total foreign bank subsidiary presence in Canada as related to a comparison of the size of the total commercial financing of all foreign bank subsidiaries with the total commercial financing of all banks.
- * The Committee recommends that the definition of commercial financing for the purposes of determining foreign bank subsidiary market share should include lease financing receivables, loans to and investments in federal, provincial and municipal governments, and loans to investment dealers.
- * The Committee recommends that existing direct investments in Canadian corporations held by a foreign bank in Canada be permitted to continue on a grandfathering basis, notwithstanding the incorporation of a foreign bank subsidiary, for a period of up to ten years in the discretion of the Minister.
- * The Committee recommends that existing indirect investments in Canadian corporations held by a foreign bank be permitted to continue to be held for a period of up to ten years in the discretion of the Minister at the end of which time the Governor in Council may direct divestiture if the continued maintenance of such investment is not regarded to be in the public interest of Canada.
- * The Committee recommends that the number of branches of a foreign bank subsidiary permitted by the legislation be extended to a head office and a branch office in each Province and the Territory with a discretion in the Minister to permit the opening of further branches if the public interest so dictates.
- * The Committee recommends that, in respect of existing financial institutions which may become foreign bank subsidiaries under the legislation, the branch network which they presently have in place should be permitted to continue indefinitely, notwithstanding the limit on the number of branches set out in the legislation.

* The Committee recommends that the Minister have a discretion in appropriate circumstances to permit the incorporation of new foreign bank subsidiaries or permit the issuance of supplementary letters patent increasing the authorized capital of existing foreign bank subsidiaries notwithstanding that in so doing there may be a temporary exceeding by foreign bank subsidiaries of their commercial lending limit of 15% of the total commercial lending of all banks.

* The Committee recommends that, in order to ensure that reasonable reciprocity as between Canada and foreign jurisdictions continues to exist after incorporation of a foreign bank subsidiary, a system of licensing be developed which would involve annual renewable licenses for foreign bank subsidiaries, the grant of which would permit such subsidiaries to continue their banking operations in Canada from year to year.

RESERVES

- * The Committee recommends that the period of 4½ years, which Bill C-15 provides for the purpose of effectively reducing the primary cash reserves from 12% of demand deposits to 10% and 4% of notice deposits to 3%, be reduced to a period of 12 months.
- * The Committee recommends that the provisions of Bill C-15 which require the payment of reserves for foreign currency deposits used domestically should be deleted. As an alternative the Committee recommends that certain specified types of foreign currency deposits and funds advanced in foreign currency should be exempt from the reserve requirements.
- * The Committee recommends that Bill C-15 be amended to require banks to continue to maintain primary reserves on the amount of their deposit liabilities of a term of one year and over which are not encashable which are payable in Canadian currency.

ENTRY INTO BANKING

- * The Committee recommends that the concept of incorporation of banks by Letters Patent be accepted subject to the requirement that there shall be a public hearing associated with applications to incorporate banks in circumstances which would permit interested members of the public to make representations in connection with such applications. The Committee also recommends that applicants be given the alternative, even after refusal of an application for Letters Patent of incorporation, to proceed by Act of Parliament to incorporate a new bank.
- * The Committee recommends that provincial governments be prohibited from ownership of bank shares.

* The Committee recommends that the provisions of Bill C-15 which would establish a relationship between otherwise unassociated cooperative corporations be amended to limit such presumption of association. The Committee also recommends that cooperative corporations be permitted to own shares in the capital stock of a bank to a limit of 25% for a period of up to ten years, the same to be reduced to 10% within that time frame.

BUSINESS POWERS—LEASING

* The Committee recommends that banks be permitted to engage in financial leasing of equipment with the proviso that they be prohibited from entering into the business of leasing passenger automobiles and on-road truck vehicles except for fleet leasing where the value of the lease is at least $100,000.

* The Committee recommends that Bill C-15 be amended to permit a bank to conduct its financial leasing operations through a wholly owned subsidiary.

* The Committee recommends that, with respect to the residual value of leased equipment, there shall be a requirement of an unconditional guarantee from a third party for purchase of the leased equipment at the end of the term in order to recapture residual value.

* The Committee recommends that banks be permitted to lease equipment which they have seized through default in a loan transaction; or equipment which they purchased for their own use and which subsequently became surplus; and that banks should be permitted to re-lease property covered by an expired equipment lease.

BUSINESS POWERS—FACTORING

* The Committee recommends the approval of the provisions of Bill C-15 which would empower a bank to engage in the business of factoring subject to the proviso, as in the case of leasing, that the bank should be permitted to conduct its factoring operations through a wholly owned subsidiary.

BUSINESS POWERS—DATA PROCESSING

* The Committee recommends that the provisions of Bill C-15 which would permit a bank to offer data processing services of a limited variety be approved. The Committee recommends, in passing, that a statutory system of parliamentary review of proposed regulations to alter or amend the powers of the banks to engage in data processing be developed and implemented.

* The Committee recommends that the Data Processing Regulations should be amended to limit those types of institutions to whom banks could provide data processing services of a broad kind, being services developed in-house at the bank for the bank's own use and which are an integral part of the banking operations, to institutions which accept deposits transferable by order; and further that the categories of such services listed in the Regulations be amended to deny to the banks, in this context, the right to provide general ledger accounting services.

LOANS AND SECURITY—RESIDENTIAL MORTGAGE LENDING

* The Committee recommends against the unqualified lifting of the ceiling on residential mortgage lending by banks and specifically recommends that the ceiling be modified to increase it from 10% to 15% of the bank's deposit liabilities and debentures.

* The Committee recommends that if its recommendation to the effect that the reserve on term deposits one year and over which are not encashable be maintained is not accepted, then the Liquidity and Adequacy of Capital Regulations ought to provide for matching the flow of term deposit money into the banks mortgage portfolio.

BANK DIRECTORS

* The Committee recommends against the provisions of Bill C-15 which would disqualify persons associated with cooperative credit societies (except in certain circumstances), members of the Investment Dealers Association and Canadian stock exchanges, and directors or officers of Crown Corporations from being elected or appointed as directors of banks.

* The Committee recommends that the provisions of the Bill which would prohibit a requirement for qualifying shares as a condition precedent to election or appointment as a bank director be deleted.

* The Committee recommends that officers, directors and employees of banks continue to be free to act as directors of other corporations.

INVESTMENTS—VENTURE CAPITAL CORPORATIONS

* The Committee recommends that the provisions of the regulations which would permit a bank to own more than one venture capital corporation not be approved subject to the proviso that, provided each is a wholly owned subsidiary of the bank's single venture capital corporation, a bank ought to be permitted to incorporate a wholly owned subsidiary venture capital corporation in each province.

* The Committee recommends that while venture capital corporations should be wholly owned by the bank in each case, the legislation should not prohibit the bank's wholly owned venture capital corporation from holding less than 100 per cent equity and voting shares in Canadian corporations and limited partnerships acquired through the provisions of financing and loans to Canadian corporations within the framework of the venture capital provisions of Bill C-15.

FOREIGN STORAGE OF BANK RECORDS

* The Committee recommends that the prohibition against storage and processing of bank records abroad be deleted, subject to the proviso that, if this provision of the Bill is to remain, banks ought to be permitted to store and process data in computer banks abroad provided those persons or institutions can retrieve it from a location in Canada and with information and facilities available in Canada and further provided that a detailed record of the same information is stored and similarly available in Canada.

FINANCIAL DISCLOSURE—ACCUMULATED APPROPRIATIONS FOR LOSSES

* The Committee recommends that Bill C-15 be amended to provide that the tax paid portion of accumulated appropriations for losses be included as part of shareholders' equity on the balance sheet of banks.

FINANCIAL DISCLOSURE—FILING OF FINANCIAL STATEMENTS AND RETURNS

* The Committee recommends that the Bill be amended to extend the statutory time limits within which financial statements must be prepared, submitted and published.

FINANCIAL DISCLOSURE—REGULATIONS OF COST OF BORROWING

* The Committee recommends that the definition of cost of borrowing should be incorporated in the legislation and payments to third parties unrelated to the bank and not a nominee of the bank, and necessary to the completion of a loan or advance, should be excluded from the cost of borrowing.

* The Committee recommends that where the terms of the loans are such that there is a difference between the "nominal annual percentage rate" and the "effective annual rate", the effective annual rate should be disclosed.

* The Committee recommends that the statement of disclosure of information under subsection 198(4) of Bill C-15 should include the effective dates of the loans and the terminal balance on the amount of payment required on termination.

* The Committee recommends that the disclosure requirement for loans secured by real property should include the cost of borrowing if such amount must be determined to obtain the nominal annual percentage rate.

* The Committee recommends that the disclosure requirements for variable credit should include a statement of the cardholder's maximum liability for unauthorized credit use.

QUEBEC SAVINGS BANKS ACT

* The Committee recommends that Bill C-15 be amended so as to disqualify from directorship of a Quebec Savings Bank a person who is a director or officer of a bank or of a cooperative corporation or of a corporation controlled by a bank or a cooperative corporation.

* The Committee recommends that the total number of shares held together by all cooperative associations in a Quebec Savings Bank be limited to 25%; further that the total number of shares held by cooperative corporations which are deemed to be associated be limited to 10% and further that for a temporary initial period during the incorporation phase of a new Quebec Savings Bank, such shareholdings be permitted to reach a limit of 25%.

* The Committee recommends that the authorized capital of the Montreal City and District Savings Bank be increased to $5 million.

* The Committee recommends the suspension of pre-emptive rights in the case of new issues of treasury shares upon a special resolution of the directors of a Quebec Savings Bank ratified by at least two-thirds of the votes cast in favour at a meeting of the shareholders.

* The Committee recommends that the Bill be amended to permit the issuance of debentures by a Quebec Savings Bank subject to a limit in amount not exceeding the bank's shareholders' equity.

* The Committee recommends that the powers of a bank incorporated under the Quebec Savings Banks Act be extended to include a power to borrow money generally; to issue credit cards; to provide banking related data processing services; to sell RRSPs and RHOSPs; to hypothecate the assets of the bank as security for moneys borrowed by it; and to lend money on the security of shares of the bank or of a chartered bank or on debentures of the bank where the loan is $50,000 or less.

* The Committee recommends that the lending powers of a bank incorporated under the Quebec Savings Banks Act be increased from $10,000 to $20,000 in the case of an unsecured loan to an individual; from $50,000 to $100,000 in the case of a secured loan to an individual or a corporation, and from $100,000 to $300,000, the amount of a mortgage loan in excess of which the approval of the Directors is required.

CANADIAN PAYMENTS ASSOCIATION ACT

* The Committee recommends that in addition to those minimal requirements for membership in the Canadian Payments Association which are set out in Bill C-15, there should be a requirement that applicants for membership meet minimum standards of liquidity and financial soundness; such standards are to be set initially by those institutions which by statute are required to be members of the CPA and thereafter to be incorporated in the by-laws of the Canadian Payments Association.

* The Committee recommends that all members of the Canadian Payments Association be required to maintain an account with the Bank of Canada for clearing settlement purposes; that those institutions which by statute are required to be members of the Canadian Payments Association develop an initial formula for fixing such clearing settlement cash reserves, the same thereafter to be incorporated in by-laws of the Association and that institutions which are required by the terms of the Bank Act to deposit cash reserves with the Bank of Canada may utilize such reserves for settlement purposes.

* The Committee recommends the adoption of a variety of provisions to ensure that information as to the financial integrity, from time to time, of members of the CPA is brought to the attention of the directors of the Association.

* The Committee recommends that the Board of Directors of the Canadian Payments Association be empowered to suspend or expel members of the Association who fail to meet the requirements of the statute, the regulations or the by-laws, subject to an appropriate right of appeal.

* The Committee recommends that provisions be incorporated in the legislation or the regulations governing the Canadian Payments Associations to ensure adequate backing by clearing agents for items drawn on their client institutions and by centrals for items drawn on their member credit unions.

* The Committee recommends the approval of the representation of the various institutions on the board of directors of the Canadian Payments Association and further recommends that there be an appropriate provision for a quorum of directors at a meeting of the board of directors having regard to the various interest groups represented on the board.

* The Committee recommends that for a two-year transitional period after the commencement of operations of the Canadian Payments Association the current administrative control policies and procedures utilized for the clearing and settlement system by the Canadian Bankers' Association remain in place subject to alteration thereof by regulation.

REPORT OF THE STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON BANKING, TRADE AND COMMERCE

Relating to the Subject Matter of Bill C-15 of the Fourth Session Thirtieth Parliament (and also the predecessor Bill C-57 of the Third Session) An Act to revise the Bank Act, to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act and the Bank of Canada Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof.

Wednesday, March 7, 1979

I. GENERAL INTRODUCTION

On May 18, 1978 the Minister of Finance presented to the House of Commons for first reading Bill C-57, "An Act to revise the Bank Act, to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act and the Bank of Canada Act, to establish the Canadian Payments Association and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof." This Act is cited as the "Banks and Banking Law Revision Act, 1978". The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce was authorized by the Senate to examine and report on this document and the subject matter of any bill arising therefrom, in advance of such bill coming before the Senate or any other matter relating thereto.

In accordance with the Order of Reference, your Committee gave careful consideration to Bill C-57 and in connection therewith had the benefit of the services and expert assistance to Mr. John F. Lewis, C. A., retired partner of and consultant to Thorne Riddell & Co., Chartered Accountants as advisor to the Committee and retained its legal Counsel, Mr. David W. Scott, Q.C., of Scott & Aylen.

After the summer recess of Parliament, the Honourable Jean Chrétien, Minister of Finance on November 2, 1978 re-introduced this banking legislation as Bill C-15 of the Fourth Session of Parliament. The Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce was again authorized on November 7, 1978 to examine and report on the new legislation, and re-appointed the same advisors.

Your Committee has carefully studied the contents of Bill C-15 and has in the course of such studies received representations from various organizations and other interested parties. In addition to the representations and submissions made during the hearings, your Committee received a considerable number of letters and other communications from companies and associations which did not appear before it. Copies of many submissions (pertinent to the Bill), made to the Minister of Finance were also made available to and were studied by your Committee.

The Inspector General of Banks, Mr. W. A. Kennett, in his appearance as a witness before your Committee, stated that the new Bill C-15 corresponds section for section, word for word with the earlier Bill C-57. Accordingly, your Committee carried forward into its record and its discussions all the evidence which had been gathered in relation to the earlier Bill C-57.

The Canadian Bankers' Association made submissions to your Committee on a number of suggested changes to Bill C-15 some of which were substantive in nature which would involve policy decisions by the Minister. Your advisors met with representatives of the Inspector General of Banks and the Canadian Bankers' Association, on more than one occasion, at which time various proposed amendments were discussed. Your Committee is of the opinion that those proposed amendments which are of a technical nature are appropriate, and the Minister is bringing forward concurrently a number of draft proposed amendments to Bill C-15 concerning the Bank Act which are said to fall into this category.

Your Committee devoted several meetings to a study of the subject matter and held other meetings at which witnesses appeared before your Committee as follows:

June 28, 1978:	Montreal City & District Savings Bank (La Banque d'Épargne de la Cité du District de Montréal)
November 1, 1978:	Canadian Bankers' Association
November 2, 1978:	Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants
November 8, 1978:	The Office of the Inspector General of Banks
November 9, 1978:	The Canadian Federation of Agriculture, Citicorp Canada Limited—Association of Canadian Financial Corporations
November 14, 1978:	Montreal Trust Company, Royal Trust Company and Victoria & Grey Trust Company Northland Bank Office of the Inspector General of Banks
November 16, 1978:	BankAmerica Corporation
November 22, 1978:	Barclays Canada Limited Association of Canadian Financial Corporations The Banking Federation of the European Economic Community
November 23, 1978:	Hong Kong Bank Group
November 29, 1978:	Royal Bank of Canada J. P. Morgan of Canada Limited Federation of Automobile Dealer Associations of Canada
November 30, 1978:	Canadian Bankers' Association
December 6, 1978:	The Canadian Co-Operative Credit Society Limited Fédération de Québec des Caisses Populaires Desjardins
December 6, 1978:	Canadian Association of Data Processing Service Organizations
December 7, 1978:	Investment Dealers Association and the Stock Exchanges of Montreal, Toronto, Alberta and Vancouver
December 12, 1978:	Office of the Inspector General of Banks

January 24, 1979: Mr. Gerald K. Bouey, Governor of the Bank of Canada

January 31, 1979: Canadian Cattlemen's Association
Canadian General Electric Company Limited
The Hamilton Group Limited
Office of the Inspector General of Banks

February 7, 1979: Consumers' Association of Canada

In addition briefs were received from the following organizations which did not appear:

Chase Manhattan Canada
Midland Financial Services
SB Capital Corporation
O'Grady, Fraser and Beatty
Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce
Norcen Energy Resources Ltd.
Dai-Ichi Kangyo Bank, Ltd.
Bank of Nova Scotia
Swiss Bankers Association
State of New York, Banking Department

It will be remembered that previous to the tabling of Bills C-57 and C-15 the Minister of Finance in August 1976 issued a White Paper on the Revision of Canadian Banking Legislation. Your Committee examined that document, heard witnesses and submitted its report to the Senate in June, 1977. Many of the recommendations of your Committee have been implemented in the proposed legislation and the extent to which your Committee's recommendations have been given effect to either fully, in part, or not at all, have been studied and noted.

Bill C-15 contains not only an amended Bank Act and the new Canadian Payments Association Act, but also important amendments to other related acts, as follows:

PART I	The Bank Act, (pages 1 to 304 of Bill C-15)
PART II	Amendments to the Quebec Savings Banks Act (pages 305-354 of Bill C-15)
PART III	Amendments to the Bank of Canada Act (pages 355-360 of Bill C-15)
PART IV	An Act to establish the Canadian Payments Association (pages 361-377 of Bill C-15)
PART V	Related and Consequential Amendments to other legislation (pages 377-392 of Bill C-15)

It should also be noted that Part I of Bill C-15, being the new Bank Act contains approximately four hundred provisions which are based on equivalent provisions of the Canadian Business Corporations Act.

In addition, a number of draft proposed regulations have been issued which are provided for in various sections of Bill C-15, constituting the new Bank Act, as follows:

Financial Leasing Regulations (S. 172(1)(i))
Data Processing Regulations (S. 172(1)(k))
Options Regulations (S. 123(3))
Proxy Regulations (S. 161(1) and 162(1))
Insider Reports Regulations (S. 168)
Registration of Security Fees Regulations (S. 177(f) (g))
Venture Capital Corporation Regulations (S. 192(6))
Real Estate Investment Trust and Mortgage Investment Company Regulations (S. 192(6)(b))
Financial Corporations Regulations (S.193(1))
Form of Notes to Annual Statement Regulations (S. 214(1) of Part I and S. 53(4) of Part II)
Foreign Bank Representative Offices Regulations (S. 294(2)(a))
Circulation and Disclosure of Cost of Borrowing Regulations (S. 198(4) of Part I and S. 80 of Part II)
Preliminary Prospectus and Prospectus Regulations (Sec. 307)

The changes in existing legislation proposed in Part I of Bill C-15, being the new Bank Act, are generally consistent with the thrust of the proposals in the 1976 White Paper. While important deviations in Part I of Bill C-15 from the stated intentions of the White Paper are few in number, most of such changes are in line with the recommendations of your Committee in its report on the White Paper. These deviations from the White Paper proposals will be dealt with later in this report.

The main changes contemplated in this decennial review of the banking system might be summarized as follows:

- (1) changes in primary cash reserves required to be provided by Canadian banks;
- (2) entry by new banks into the banking system in Canada either by Special Act of Parliament or Letters Patent;
- (3) entry and control of and conditions for the operation in Canada of foreign bank subsidiaries incorporated under the new Bank Act;
- (4) further delineation of specific business powers of banks;
- (5) changes in the corporate structure of banks;
- (6) establishment by a Special Act of Parliament of the Canadian Payments Association which would include banks and near-banks in the evolving national electronic payments system for clearing and settlement purposes;
- (7) amendments to the Quebec Savings Banks Act, the Bank of Canada Act and other related legislation.

2. COMMITTEE'S RECOMMENDATIONS CONCERNING THE WHITE PAPER PROPOSALS ON THE CANADIAN BANKING LEGISLATION

(i) Bank Act

In connection with the Bank Act your Committee made approximately forty-five recommendations in its report on the White Paper. Of these recommendations twenty-four were given effect to in Bill C-15, of which five represent instances where your Committee's opinion did not agree with the White Paper proposals. In five additional instances your Committee's recommendations on the White Paper proposals have been partly implemented. Approximately fifteen of your Committee's recommendations made in its report on the White Paper have not been incorporated in Bill C-15.

(ii) Canadian Payments Association

Your Committee made a number of recommendations in connection with the White Paper proposals for a Canadian Payments Association Act. All of the substantive recommendations appear to have been either given effect to in Bill C-15 and the Regulations, or are intended to be provided for in By-laws to be adopted by the Association's Board of Directors.

(iii) Quebec Savings Banks Act

In its report on the White Paper your Committee made recommendations that the reserve requirements of banks governed by the Quebec Savings Banks Act remain unchanged. While a number of amendments are made to this Act in Bill C-15, no changes have been made in the reserve requirements as recommended by your Committee.

3. COMPARISON OF BILL C-15 WITH THE WHITE PAPER AND THE SENATE COMMITTEE PROPOSALS THEREUPON

(i) Reserves for Chartered Banks

The White Paper proposed that all members of the Canadian Payments Association including banks and near-banks, be required to maintain cash reserves as follows:

- (a) 12% of Canadian dollar demand deposits;
- (b) 2% on first $500 million and 4% on remainder of Canadian dollar notice deposits and term deposits with a term of one year or less (or longer if encashable);
- (c) 4% of foreign currency deposits used domestically.

Your Committee recommended that mandatory primary cash reserves required of chartered banks under the new Bank Act be reduced from the present 12% of demand deposits and 4% of notice deposits payable in Canadian currency to 10% and 3% respectively; that the secondary reserve rate be maintained unchanged within a range of 0% to 12% of Canadian dollar deposit liabilities as at present.

It is pleasing to your Committee to see that the important thrust of its recommendations have been accepted and are incorporated in Bill C-15, in that the primary reserve requirement has been reduced from 12% to 10% of Canadian dollar demand deposits and from 4% to 3% of notice deposits. This would result in a substantial reduction in the amount of non-interest bearing cash reserves required of banks which decision appears to be based on the conclusion that they are not required for monetary control purposes. However, the phasing-in of such reductions over a period of 4½ years is objectionable and such objections and recommendations are developed later in this Report.

The White Paper proposed that reserve requirements with respect to foreign currency deposits used in Canada be at the 4 per cent rate. The Committee was of the opinion that this would put Canadian chartered banks at a rate disadvantage in competing with foreign bank controlled financial institutions and near-bank affiliates of foreign banks operating in Canada which are not subject to reserve requirements under the Bank Act. The Committee recommended that this proposal not be implemented unless the Bank of Canada pays interest to the banks on such reserves.

This recommendation of your Committee was not given effect to in Bill C-15, which would require banks to maintain non-interest cash reserves of 3% of foreign currency deposits used domestically. Indeed, while not proposed in the White Paper, Bill C-15 even goes farther and, as presently drafted, would also require secondary reserves on such foreign currency deposits.

Your Committee recommended that the Bank of Canada pay interest to the chartered banks on the primary cash reserve required by the Bank Act (exclusive of the amount of cash required for clearing settlement purposes and subject to a deduction for expenses in connection with the handling of such reserve and the investment thereof).

However this recommendation to pay interest on net cash reserves has not been given effect to in Bill C-15.

The White Paper proposed to relieve banks of the requirement to maintain primary cash reserves against notice deposits of a term in excess of one year which are encashable. In its report on the White Paper your Committee recommended that banks not be relieved of such reserve requirement unless there are provisions requiring banks to match the maturity of the increased amount of term deposits with investments in residential mortgage loans in order to maintain an adequate cash flow of funds into residential mortgages.

Bill C-15 follows the White Paper proposals and exempts such term deposits from primary cash reserve requirements.

The White Paper proposed that the legislative requirement for the equivalent of the present primary reserves required by chartered banks under the Bank Act be transferred to the Canadian Payments Association Act. The Committee, however, recommended that the statutory requirements for the primary and secondary reserves required from chartered banks remain in their present general form under the Bank Act and the Bank of Canada Act.

This recommendation of your Committee has been included in Bill C-15 in the treatment of primary and secondary reserves required by chartered banks.

Your Committee recommends that near-banks not be required to provide primary cash and secondary reserves as outlined in the White Paper but that near-banks becoming members of the Canadian Payments Association be required to provide settlement reserves as more particularly outlined in its Report.

(ii) Entry into Banking

Your Committee agreed with the White Paper proposals to permit incorporation of new banks by Letters Patent with some qualifications where incorporation by Letters Patent is sought. However, the new legislation does not provide for a review of applications by way of Letters Patent by an appropriate body which would make recommendations to the Minister whether or not incorporation by way of Letters Patent should be granted. Your Committee recommended that the new legislation provide for a review by an appropriate body of applications for incorporation by Letters Patent and an opportunity for interested parties to appear. This was not provided for in the legislation and the position of your Committee on this point will be discussed later within the Report.

(iii) Foreign Banks

The proposed legislation follows very closely upon your Committee's recommendation and the White Paper proposals to permit competition from foreign banks, subject to certain limitations and conditions from foreign banks, subject to certain limitations and conditions under which they may formally and legally enter the Canadian banking system by incorporating "foreign bank subsidiaries" under the new Bank Act.

(iv) Specific Business Powers of Banks

Part I of Bill C-15 outlines the parameters of certain specific business operations which banks may engage in, which under the present Bank Act are covered by the general powers of a bank.

These operations relate to:

- Financial Leasing
- Factoring
- Residential Mortgage Lending
- Data Processing
- Dealing in Securities

The legislation, in the above areas, is generally in line with the White Paper proposals and with your Committee's recommendations thereon. However, some important recommendations of your Committee have not been adopted to the legislation and will be dealt with in detail later in this report. They include:

a) Financial Leasing

The Committee recommended the approval of the White Paper proposal to permit banks specifically to engage in financial leasing of equipment on a non-operating full pay-out basis, but recommended that dependence on a residual value of the equipment should be limited to 10% of the acquisition cost and not 20% as proposed in the White Paper, and further that banks be permitted to engage in financial leasing operations through separate wholly-owned subsidiary companies. This qualification was not accepted.

b) Factoring

Your Committee recommended that banks be permitted to conduct factoring through separate wholly-owned subsidiaries.

Part I of Bill C-15, requires such operations to be carried on directly by a bank. See the recommendation of your Committee on this subject.

c) Residential Mortgages

The Committee recommended that the present limit on a bank's mortgage portfolio be raised from 10% of its Canadian dollar liabilities and debentures to 15%, instead of the limit being removed altogether as proposed in the White Paper.

Your Committee also stated in its report on the White Paper that it was not in favour of the proposal to relieve banks of the requirement to maintain primary cash reserves against notice deposits of a term in excess of one year which are not encashable, unless there is some requirement for banks to match maturity of term deposits with mortgage loans up to a proposed ceiling for mortgage loans of 15% of deposits and debentures.

Bill C-15 does not accept these recommendations but imposes no percentage limitation on the amount of money invested by a bank in conventional residential mortgages.

d) Changes in Organization Structure and Corporate Powers

The changes contemplated in Part I of Bill C-15 are generally along the lines as proposed in the White Paper and met with approval in principle by your Committee in its report on the White Paper.

The changes to the Bank Act set out in Part I of Bill C-15 arising out of the decision to incorporate in the Act the intent of the pertinent provisions of the Canadian Business Corporations Act have, of course, resulted in a separate study by your Committee and its advisors of this aspect of the Bill. Because of the specific position of banks in the Canadian business community and the special responsibility to depositors, many of the amendments included in Bill C-15 result in a number of the legal requirements of banks being made more restrictive than the legal requirements imposed on other business corporations by the Canada Business Corporations Act. This report deals with some of the more important instances of this problem.

e) Canadian Payments Association

One of the most important proposals of the White Paper was the establishment of the Canadian Payments Association which was to act as the clearing and settlement system for all banks and for all near-banks which accept "chequable deposits". This requirement that near-banks accepting transferrable deposits must join the new Canadian Payments Association and be required to be subjected to federal control and maintain cash reserves at the Bank of Canada generally of the same order as chartered banks met with considerable opposition both from the near-banks and trust companies, loan and mortgage companies, caisses populaires and credit unions, as well as the provincial authorities.

While in favour of the general principle of forming a Canadian Payments Association in order to give near-banks direct access to the national clearing system, your Committee was not in agreement that such institutions be required to provide cash reserves, as banks are required under existing law in order that monetary control may be effectively exercised, and recommended that clearing members be required to maintain cash reserves based on chequable deposits only (deposits transferrable by order) by way of settlement balances in an amount reasonably necessary for clearing settlement purposes. The cash and investments for the above recommended reserves would be deposited by clearing members with the proposed Canadian Payments Association and directed by it to be paid to the Bank of Canada. The Bank of Canada would act as the depository for the said cash and investments held as reserves of members of the proposed Association.

Your Committee welcomes the acceptance of this recommendation in the proposed draft legislation (Bill C-15).

This report will deal with the various Parts of Bill C-15 including the Bank Act and other pertinent legislation.

Perhaps an introduction to Bill C-15, can be summarized best by quoting from a statement made by Mr. Gerald K. Bouey, Governor of the Bank of Canada, when he appeared before your Committee on January 24, 1979. (Committee Proceedings 18:5)

"The first and most important point to make is that the proposals in Bill C-15 would not impair in any way the Bank of Canada's ability to discharge its responsibilities in the field of monetary policy through the exercise of its existing powers; the essential nature of its operations would remain substantially unchanged.

"The main way in which the operations of the Bank of Canada have an impact on economic behaviour in this country is through their influence on the level of interest rates. And the main way in which the operations of the Bank of Canada exert their influence on interest rate levels is by affecting the behaviour of the chartered banking system in such a way as to speed up or slow down the process of monetary expansion. These operations alter the marginal amount by which the cash reserves available to the banks as a group exceed their minimum statutory requirements. The response of the chartered banks to the resulting changes in their reserve position causes changes in interest rates which spread through financial markets in response to competitive forces. (The Bank of Canada also uses bank rate changes from time to time to help speed up the interest rate responses that it is seeking.) The proposed reduction in the required level of these minimum cash reserves does not have significant implications for monetary management since the Bank of Canada will still be able to determine the size of the cash reserve margin available to the banking system in excess of the new minimum required levels.

"A second important point to note is that the so-called near-banks—trust and mortgage loan companies, credit unions and caisses populaires—are affected by monetary policy even though they are not required to hold cash reserves at the Bank of Canada. They respond to central bank actions because they must keep the interest rates which they charge and pay in line with those which prevail throughout Canadian financial market generally.

"Although in present circumstances reserve requirements on near-banks are not required for monetary policy purposes, such requirements represent a cost which applies to the banks, but not to other deposit-taking institutions. Thus issues of equity and efficiency would seem to be involved. But cash reserve requirements are not the only difference of this kind. Many of the provisions in the complex framework of federal and provincial laws governing deposit-taking institutions—including capital requirements, liquidity reserves, powers regarding loans and investments, and tax treatment—raise similar issues. Thus it is difficult to look at differences in cash reserve requirements in isolation.

"I turn now for a moment to the proposals with respect to the operation of foreign banks in Canada. Foreign banks already have a significant presence in Canada, albeit on a basis that is outside existing banking legislation. The thrust of the proposals is to regularize this situation and to regulate its future evolution. I believe that foreign banks do have a useful role to play in Canada and I regard it as desirable that all banks operating here should be part of the same system operating under the same basic rules and regulations. At the same time I feel that the principle of applying some limits to the growth of foreign banks in Canada is not unreasonable, and is indeed desirable in view of the risks and uncertainties we would invite by opening the door too widely. The proposals with respect to foreign banks do not in my view have significant implications for the implementation of monetary policy."

4. OUTLINE OF THE CONTENTS OF THIS REPORT

In this report your Committee deals with the provisions of Bill C-15 in a broad treatment which divides the subject matter into five general categories.

DIVISION I

Those provisions of the Bill which involve major and substantive changes from the present Bank Act. (Part I, Bill C-15)

DIVISION II

Review of the proposed amendments to the Quebec Savings Banks Act (Part II, Bill C-15)

DIVISION III

Review of the proposed amendments to the Bank of Canada Act (Part III, Bill C-15)

DIVISION IV

Review of the proposed new Canadian Payments Association Act (Part IV, Bill C-15)

DIVISION V

Review of consequential proposed amendments to other legislation (Part V, Bill C-15)

In dealing with the various divisions referred to in this report, your Committee makes references to Section and Subsection numbers as they appear in each Part of the Bill without specifying any repeating on each occasion the particular Part of the Bill under consideration.

THE BANK ACT
(Part I of Bill C-15)

DIVISION I

I. FOREIGN BANKS

General

The objective of opening up the Canadian banking field to foreign competition was explained in the White Paper as follows:

“to provide for more equitable and effective competition between Canadian and foreign-owned institutions, to provide opportunity for Canadian affiliates of foreign banks to operate under Canadian banking legislation, to provide economic and financial surveillance by Canadian authorities and to provide a basis for reciprocal treatment for Canadian financial institutions abroad, while ensuring that Canada’s banking system remain predominately in Canadian hands.”*

The new banking legislation provides for the first time for foreign banks to participate formally and legally in the Canadian banking system by permitting them to form “foreign bank subsidiaries” to be incorporated under the Bank Act.

There would appear to be a reasonably general consensus that it is in the public interest to permit entry to foreign bank subsidiaries as full scale banks subject to the provisions of the Bank Act. Your Committee’s report on the White Paper dealt at some length with this philosophical question. From the standpoint of the Canadian public there also appears to be a consensus that the legislation should include some reasonable restrictions on the size and extent of growth of these foreign-owned banks. To meet this consensus the legislation contemplates that there should be a limit on an individual bank’s total assets expressed as being twenty times its authorized capital (Subs. 173(2)(e)). Further the Bill contemplates that there shall be a limit on the aggregate size of the total assets of all foreign bank subsidiaries expressed as 15% of total bank commercial financing in Canada (Subs. 294 (5)). An ancillary restriction which is also to be found in the Bill, is a limit on the number of branches specifically four branches apart from the main office of each foreign bank subsidiary (Subs. 172(2)). The $500 million limit on assets is not specifically mentioned in the Bill, and further the Bill contemplates the controlling of the growth of foreign bank subsidiaries through the Governor in Council’s approval of successive increases in authorized capital for each bank.

The focus of public interest on the subject of the entry of foreign banks into the Canadian banking system has been on the question of limitations in size and growth as above described. Your Committee’s study of the Bill has dealt in detail with these areas as well as a number of unrelated areas. Your Committee proposes to make recommendations under the following heads:

- (i) Limit on Growth in Size, Market Share and Indexing;

- (ii) Limiting the Total Commercial Financing of all Foreign Bank Subsidiaries instead of Limiting Assets of all Foreign Bank Subsidiaries to 15% of Total Commercial Financing in Canada;
- (iii) Grandfathering and Transitional Provisions Relating to Assets and Investments;
- (iv) Limit on Number of Branches and Grandfathering of such Limitation;
- (v) Ministerial Discretion to Permit the Establishment of New Foreign Bank Subsidiaries Notwithstanding a Resulting Temporary Exceeding of the 15% Limit set out in Subs. 294(5)

Your Committee also noted the following provisions in Part I of the Bill affecting foreign banks which have been studied and generally meet with your Committee’s approval:

- (vi) Prohibition Against Borrowing by a Non-Banking Affiliate on the Guarantee of its Foreign Parent;
- (vii) Competitiveness and Reciprocity;
- (viii) Licensing
- (ix) Application of FIRA

The “Summary of Banking Legislation 1978” issued by the Department of Finance Canada commented on the legislation as follows:

“The White Paper proposed specific provisions to bring foreign bank operations in Canada within domestic banking legislation. They would be permitted to operate as banks, but only in the form of Canadian bank subsidiaries. To strike a balance between the additional competition this would provide within the banking industry and the maintenance of a banking system primarily controlled by Canadians, it was proposed to limit the size and growth of foreign bank subsidiaries individually and as a group. The proposals are generally welcomed by foreign banks, their criticisms focusing primarily on the size and growth restrictions. It is proposed to implement the White Paper proposals in the following manner:

a) Size Limitation

The White Paper proposed to limit total assets of foreign bank subsidiaries to 15% of total commercial lending in Canada. In addition, the White Paper proposed to limit the size of a foreign bank subsidiary to $500 million by:

- limiting its total assets to 20 times authorized capital,
 - limiting its maximum authorized capital to $25 million.
- The White Paper also proposed that the Governor in Council be empowered to increase the $25 million limit for authorized capital by regulation.

The provision of statutory size limitations for total assets as well as for assets of individual bank subsidiaries, even if they are subject to adjustment by regulation, has been criticized by some foreign banks as discriminatory.

Notwithstanding some views to the contrary, the government continues to regard the principle of total as well as individual size restrictions for foreign bank subsidiaries as sound. The new legislation limits the size of total assets of foreign bank subsidiaries to 15% of total bank commercial financing as determined by Schedule Q of the Act. Commercial financing as set out in that schedule will be the aggregate of: agricultural, industrial and commercial loans in Canadian currency; foreign currency loans to Canadian residents; residential mortgages on multiple dwelling structures; floating rate income debenture bonds; and floating rate term preferred shares issued. Based on year-end 1977 figures, it is estimated that the maximum permitted size for all foreign bank subsidiaries would be about $7 billion."

*White Paper, page 26

"This limit would grow in conjunction with the growth in the banking system. The $500 million limitation for individual foreign bank subsidiaries is not unreasonable. The new legislation contains no specific limit on the authorized capital of an individual institution. Like the present Act, it requires that the Governor in Council approve the initial authorized capital of a bank, including a foreign bank subsidiary, and any subsequent increase to such authorized capital.

b) Branch limitation

The White Paper proposed that foreign bank subsidiaries be limited to five branches. These proposals have been adopted in the new legislation with the added provision that none of the five branches may be located outside Canada."

(i) Limit on Growth in Size, Market Share and Indexing

Representations have been made to your Committee that the limit in size expressed as 20 times authorized capital and the limit in market share expressed as 15% of total commercial financing are much too restrictive to permit foreign bank subsidiaries to provide the kind of competition which the legislation is intended to attract and that they would not permit a foreign bank to attract and retain the high calibre of staff required for successful banking.

These reactions were expressed in many briefs and in the testimony of witnesses largely, although not exclusively, from the foreign banking community. Notwithstanding these submissions your Committee has concluded, as it did during its study of the White Paper, that the basic restrictions on size and market share are both sound and fair.

Your Committee does feel, again as it did at the time of the White Paper, that there should be a provision for the indexing of the limit of growth of the assets of a foreign bank subsidiary tied to the rate of growth of total aggregate assets of all Canadian chartered banks, the adjustment to be effected annually based on the previous fiscal period.

RECOMMENDATIONS:

1. YOUR COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS THE APPROVAL OF THE LIMIT OF GROWTH OF INDIVIDUAL FOREIGN BANK SUBSIDIARIES TO 20 TIMES AUTHORIZED CAPITAL BASED ON APPROVED INCREASES IN AUTHORIZED CAPITAL.

2. YOUR COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS THAT BILL C-15 BE AMENDED TO PROVIDE FOR INDEXING SO THAT ANY LIMIT IN AMOUNT OF ASSETS TO WHICH A FOREIGN BANK SUBSIDIARY MIGHT GROW WILL BE INDEXED TO PERMIT IT TO GROW AT A RATE GOVERNED BY THE RATE OF GROWTH OF COMBINED ASSETS IN CANADA OF ALL CANADIAN OWNED CHARTERED BANKS.

(ii) Limiting the Total Commercial Financing of All Foreign Bank Subsidiaries instead of Limiting Assets of all Foreign Bank Subsidiaries to 15% of Total Commercial Financing in Canada

As mentioned earlier in this report, the total share of the Canadian market to be allocated to foreign bank subsidiaries is 15% of total commercial financing in Canada by all banks. Control of this share is to be exercised by not approving the issue of letters patent for any additional new foreign bank subsidiaries, or supplementary letters patent increasing the authorized capital of a foreign bank subsidiary:

"where the effect thereof would be to increase the average outstanding total assets authorized under paragraph 173(2)(e) for all foreign bank subsidiaries to an amount that exceeds fifteen per cent of the total commercial financing in Canada by all banks as shown in the computation of Schedule Q most recently published pursuant to paragraph 229(b)". (Subs. 294(5))

A cursory study of the relation of fifteen per cent of total commercial financing in Canada with total assets of all foreign bank subsidiaries indicates that there is a perhaps unwitting comparison of "apples and oranges". This contradiction merits careful study.

When representatives of the Banking Federation of the European Economic Community appeared before your Committee on November 22, 1978, this anomaly was referred to by M. Paul Fabre, Deputy Managing Director, French Bankers Association, in the following manner: (Committee Proceedings 5:50)

"Indeed, this Bill considers granting foreign banks a ratio, that is 15% of the market. The Bill explains the method which will be used to calculate that percentage. However, we also noticed—at least, I don't think it was denied last night in the House and I think our analysis is correct—as I was saying, we noticed an anomaly in this 15% ratio when calculated along the lines described in the legislation."

"In fact, with regard to the operations of foreign banks, the Bill provides for the use of the total balance sheet for the numerator of the fraction, that is the total balance sheet of foreign banks. And for the denominator, that is the basis for comparison with Canadian institutions, you intend to use only the commercial assets of Canadian banks as listed in a document which is called, I believe, Schedule Q. We would especially like to draw your attention to that fact as it seems to be an unintentional step.

Indeed, those who draft the laws in my country sometimes overlook this type of detail, especially in such complex legislation. This is an anomaly, and we tend to believe that, with a fraction of this type, the basis for the calculation of both numerator and denominator should be the same. You could take, in both cases, either the total of the balance sheet or else, calculate commercial loans granted in Canada by foreign banks, that is the penetration of foreign banks on the Canadian market. We would very much like to ask you to examine that technical point, which, if it could be corrected, would make that ratio, if not more acceptable, at least not worse than it is. Furthermore, I believe that if this could be done, it would bring about three obvious advantages, and I will conclude by describing them briefly."

"The first would be, obviously, a greater equity, since both terms would be exactly the same and consistent.

"The second would be to give foreign banks more freedom in their operations, and I would like to add in that respect that, as it happens we are not competing with the Canadian banking system. I mean interbank loans and deposits, both domestic and international, as well as exchange operations with non-residents. These are, I believe, operations which cannot be placed on the same level as commercial assets from Canadian institutions.

"The last point, the last advantage, I believe, concerning this method of operation, especially if we use, in both cases, commercial credit in Canada as a base of reference as indicated in Schedule Q, this would at least allow foreign banks not to take into consideration the calculation of these ratios, of the loans they could make to either the Canadian government or Canadian provinces. I believe these loans should not be referred to as commercial loans. This harmonization of both terms of the fraction would have many advantages for all of us, be it the foreign banks or Canadian banks whose fundamental interests would not be affected, and that is why we would like to draw your very particular attention to that point."

This lack of harmony in method of comparing total assets of foreign bank subsidiaries with 15% of total commercial financing in Canada by all banks was commented on in almost all of the representations made on behalf of foreign banks to your Committee. Suggestions have been presented to your Committee concerning the various ways in which Subs. 294(5) might be amended including the submission of the Bankers Federation of the European Community that Subs. 294(5) be deleted in its entirety.

However your Committee is of the opinion that the general objective in the Act of limiting the growth of foreign bank subsidiaries to 15% of the market is a reasonable one at this time.

The Minister of Finance, since Bill C-15 was tabled, has presented certain proposed amendments which include a proposed amendment to Schedule Q by adding as an additional category to Commercial Financing "Lease Financing Receivables". Schedule Q, "Return of Commercial Financing in Canada" would then include:

1. Agricultural, industrial and commercial loans in Canadian currency.
2. Residential mortgages on multiple dwellings.
3. Lease financing receivables.
4. Foreign currency loans to Canadian residents.
5. Investments in income debentures.
6. Investments in floating rate term preferred shares.

The limited categories of assets listed in Schedule Q have the effect of providing a disincentive for foreign banking subsidiaries to engage in the many other important areas of banking activities. In this connection, Chase Manhattan Canada Limited, in its brief, described the probable situation as follows:

"It also appears to us that the proposed legislation by means of its definition of "commercial finance", has the effect, whether intended or not, of influencing the direction of further FBS growth. Schedule Q (page 304) outlines the five categories of "commercial finance" in Canada. It is only as these five limited categories grow that FBS would be permitted to grow. Therefore, there is an inducement for FBS to engage in the businesses outlined in the five categories as "commercial finance" and a disincentive for FBSs' to engage in the many other activities that are included in "total assets" outlined in Schedule J (page 294). For example, foreign banks would not be encouraged to lend to investment dealers and brokers, provinces, municipal or school corporations in Canada, or to finance single family homes, since these types of finance are excluded from Schedule Q. The practical result of this exclusion is that the foreign banking community would lack an incentive to participate actively in the financing of a significant amount of Canada's future growth in important areas. We believe that such a provision in the Bank Act will prove counter-productive and should be reconsidered. Further, FBSs' would not be" encouraged to engage in lease financing unless the Bank Act is interpreted to include lease receivables in "industrial and commercial loans". At the very least, this is unclear and we believe that further clarifications would be helpful in order that the intent of the law is openly staged."

C. Contingent Liability on Letters of Credit

"We would also like to draw your attention to a category in Schedule J, which apparently is unique to Canada. Customer liabilities under guarantees and letters of credit are shown as an asset even though the claims against the customers are contingent. It has been our experience in the United States and elsewhere that contingent claims and contingent liabilities are not shown as balance sheet items, although certain contingent items may be required to be disclosed in footnotes. We would ask that the treatment to be given such contingent items be reviewed in light of practice elsewhere."

Your Committee has noted that the Minister has issued a proposed draft amendment to Bill C-15 whereby Schedule Q would specifically include lease financing receivables. Further, when the Inspector General of Banks appeared before your Committee on the 31st of January 1979, he acknowledged that loans by banks to Government owned utilities such as Hydro Quebec and Ontario Hydro, and to Crown Corporations would be considered to be within the definition of commercial loans. Loans to municipalities and provinces would not be so included. Thus at the date of this report the impact of the contradiction herein described has been lessened somewhat but continues as a defect in the philosophy underlying the Bill.

It is quite clear that Subs. 172(1) is intended to outline the business powers of all banks both Canadian controlled Schedule A banks and foreign controlled Schedule B banks. The only limitation in these powers is in subsection 172(2) which limits the number of branches that may be opened by a Schedule B bank. If there is to be a limitation upon the extent to which any of the business powers may be exercised such limitation should be included in Section 172. While it is obvious from the White Paper that the intention of the Government was to limit foreign bank subsidiaries to 15% of the commercial lending market, if that mark of 15% is reached and foreign bank subsidiaries cannot expand further in the commercial lending field, their only way to effect normal growth through expansion would be to expand in directions other than commercial financing. It is doubtful that this is what was intended by the legislation.

Your Committee is of the opinion that the combination of the individual limit on assets of 20 times authorized capital and the total limit of 15% of total commercial financing should provide a reasonable basis for controlling the share of the market to be acquired by foreign bank subsidiaries. However, your Committee is of the opinion that this limit on total commercial financing should not restrict foreign bank subsidiaries from competing rigorously in other areas such as loans to governments and investments in federal, provincial and municipal securities.

If, however, it is the intention of the Government to restrict foreign bank subsidiaries in other areas of financing, such as residential mortgages, government financing, and personal loans, a separate section of the Bill should be provided to give effect to this restriction.

RECOMMENDATIONS:

1. YOUR COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS THAT SUBS. 294(5) BE AMENDED SO AS TO LIMIT THE OUTSTANDING TOTAL COMMERCIAL FINANCING FOR ALL FOREIGN BANK SUBSIDIARIES TO 15 PER CENT OF TOTAL OUTSTANDING COMMERCIAL FINANCING OF ALL BANKS.

2. FOR THE PURPOSES OF THE ACT AND IN THE INTEREST OF PROMOTING COMPETITION YOUR COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS THAT SCHEDULE Q—RETURN OF COMMERCIAL FINANCING IN CANA-DA—BE EXPANDED TO INCLUDE LEASE FINANCING RECEIVABLES, LOANS TO AND INVESTMENTS IN FEDERAL, PROVINCIAL AND MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENTS, AND LOANS TO INVESTMENT DEALERS.

3. YOUR COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS THAT IN CALCULATING THE TOTAL AMOUNT OF ASSETS OF A FOREIGN BANK SUBSIDIARY, CONTINGENT CLAIMS (CUSTOMERS' LIABILITY UNDER ACCEPTANCES, GUARANTEES AND LETTERS OF CREDIT) NOT BE INCLUDED.

(iii) Grandfathering and Transitional Provisions Relating to Assets and Investments

There are three areas where foreign banks have been operating in the financial sector in Canada through affiliated and subsidiary companies whose assets and operations may well exceed the limits proposed in the new legislation at the time that it comes into force. These areas are:

- (1) Asset Limitation; (Subs. 173(2)(e) and 294(5))
- (2) Investments in financial corporations; Section 297
- (3) Investments in non-financial corporations; (Subs. 192(2) and 297(1))

(a) Direct Investment

While the legislation is not dissimilar in its treatment of direct and indirect investments your Committee's views on the treatment to be afforded these modes differs somewhat in each case and accordingly they will be treated separately.

The Bill itself affords no relief in these situations. Recently, however, the Minister of Finance has issued proposed draft amendments which would provide that a Schedule B bank would be given transitional periods within which to regularize its holdings so as to avoid offending any of the above three limitations at the date of incorporation. Thus by the proposed amendments to Section 297 by Order of the Governor in Council upon the recommendation of the Minister a foreign bank may be permitted to hold ineligible assets for a period not exceeding two years. Your Committee here speaks of interests in Canadian corporations held directly by the foreign parent.

The proposed amendments contemplate extending this two-year period to a period not to exceed ten years where the offending assets or investments are transferred to the foreign bank subsidiary pursuant to the provisions of proposed amendments to Section 28.

The relationship between these two proposed amendments requires careful study. Your Committee has reviewed the matter during its hearings with the Inspector General of Banks and his staff who confirm (Committee Proceedings Jan. 31, 1979, Page 19:81) that the intended effect of the proposed amendments would be to enable the foreign bank, by transferring its ineligible assets to its foreign bank subsidiary, to extend a period of grace of two years to a period not to exceed ten years. Putting it another way the foreign bank would have a two-year period within which to either divest itself entirely of ineligible direct investments, or to transfer the same to its foreign bank subsidiary, in which case the latter would have a period of up to ten years in which to affect divestiture.

The proposed amendments find favour with your Committee but we have concerns as to whether they go far enough. By way of illustration the Hamilton Group Limited, a Canadian company which owns a 40% interest in Citicorp Leasing Canada Limited, expressed concern in its brief to your Committee that the divestiture requirement would have the effect of eliminating a Canadian presence in an important international leasing organization. It is observed at page 14 of its brief:

"... Hamilton Group Ltd. would be required to sell its interest in Citicorp Leasing Ltd. pursuant to its agreement with Citicorp Leasing (US), Citicorp Leasing Canada Limited would become a division of a foreign banking subsidiary and the Canadian participation in this major leasing company would cease."

The anomaly inherent in this affect was highlighted by the Hamilton Group (Committee Proceedings, Jan. 31, 1979, page 19:46) arising out of the fact that its significant expansion in the Canadian market over the last few years has been as a result of directives issued by the Foreign Investment Review Agency with which it was obliged to comply as part of conditions associated with the approval of the Citicorp Investment.

In addition many representations were made to your Committee that a strict application of the asset and investment limitations would prevent many foreign banks, which could make a significant contribution to competitive banking in Canada, from incorporating a foreign bank subsidiary. Notwithstanding these views your Committee is of the opinion that a period of up to 10 years within which a foreign bank subsidiary must divest itself of such direct investment is fair, adequate and consistent with the limitations imposed on domestic banks in respect of similar investments. Further the proposed period of grace is no less generous than contemplated by the terms of Section 8 of the United States International Banking Act of 1978 (Public Law 95-369 95th Congress—92 Stat. 607)

"(b) Until December 31, 1985, a foreign bank or other company to which subsection (a) applies on the date of enactment of this Act may retain direct or indirect ownership or control of any voting shares of any nonbanking company in the United States that it owned, controlled, or held with power to vote on the date of enactment of this Act or engage in any nonbanking activities in the United States in which it was engaged on such date."

RECOMMENDATION:

1. THAT THE TIME LIMITS FOR DIVESTITURE OF EXCESS DIRECT INVESTMENTS BY A SCHEDULE B BANK OR ITS FOREIGN PARENT AS SET OUT IN THE PROPOSED DRAFT AMENDMENTS HEREIN-BEFORE REFERRED TO BE APPROVED.

(b) Indirect Investments

In many cases foreign banks have indirect interests in Canadian corporations. These interests are owned by holding companies, associates, affiliates or partly owned subsidiaries of a foreign bank. Any large successful international bank, whether Canadian or foreign, must be prepared to engage in, from time to time, associations with other banks or financial institutions in order to extend their usefulness in countries and industries which require funds for development. In establishing these associations a foreign bank often becomes, through its holding company, indirectly associated with other corporations.

This problem was outlined in some detail in the brief of the Banking Federation of the European Economic Community as follows: (Supplementary Brief of the Banking Federation of the European Economic Community, Dec. 15, 1978, Pg. 1)

"Section 297 would have the effect of preventing a substantial number of foreign banks in the European Economic Community from establishing and, ultimately, from maintaining foreign bank subsidiaries in Canada, since these foreign banks presently have voting and equity interests in commercial or industrial companies in Europe which latter, coincidentally, have or may come to have subsidiaries and/or affiliates in Canada.

"In addition, the same problem arises in the case of foreign banks which, while not holding direct or indirect interests themselves in Canadian companies (including subsidiaries of foreign industrial or commercial companies) are controlled by foreign bank holding companies which themselves hold such interests directly or indirectly.

"... many of these ownership positions of foreign banks in European commercial or industrial companies are of long standing, deriving, in many instances, from the requirements of local law or policy and often from the wishes of the home governments of foreign banks. The quantum and nature of these interests vary substantially from relatively minor interests to controlling interests, and are not merely static interests, but often changing interests due to economic reasons and questions of government support in the home country.

"... in those instances where the foreign bank has only a minority interest, there is no way that it can or should properly attempt to control the actions of such commercial or industrial company so as to prevent it from establishing or enlarging a business position in Canada."

"The Federation has felt that in the interest of its members it must attempt to suggest some form of acceptable solution, since if it cannot, a very substantial portion of the major banks of Europe would be unable to establish foreign bank subsidiaries otherwise permitted by Bill C-15.

"The Federation accordingly proposes the following as a possible solution to the problem enunciated above:

1. That the application of Section 297 be limited, in respect of foreign banks, to existing or future direct holdings by a foreign bank or foreign bank subsidiary, excluding existing or future direct or indirect holdings by a foreign bank holding company. This latter exclusion is necessary in view of the fact that the definition of a foreign bank under Subsection 2(1) of the Bill includes a foreign bank holding company.

2. That control over existing indirect holdings by a foreign bank and existing direct or indirect holdings by a foreign bank holding company be provided by an amendment to the Bill which would permit the Minister, when exercising his discretion to issue letters patent to a foreign bank subsidiary, to consider specifically such indirect holdings by a foreign bank holding company in Canadian companies.

3. Once the foreign bank subsidiary was incorporated, any future indirect acquisition of control of a Canadian business enterprise by the foreign bank holding company or any establishment of a new Canadian business enterprise which was indirectly controlled by the foreign bank or directly by a foreign banking holding company, would be subject to the ordinary rules of the Foreign Investment Review Act, which, the Federation believes, provide the Canadian government with an adequate control mechanism.

While the Federation appreciates and respects the design of Canada that there be symmetrical treatment of foreign banks and Canadian banks with respect to non-banking investments in Canada, it believes that the relative positions of foreign bank subsidiaries and non-bank affiliates are sufficiently different from that of anticipated economic activity between such foreign bank subsidiaries and their parents and affiliates on the one hand and Schedule A and B banks on the other hand which justifies different treatment in respect of non-bank holdings.

As the Federation understands it, the limitations on investments by Canadian banks were designed on the one hand to ensure the liquidity and viability of Canadian banks and on the other to prevent conflicts of interest and/or the limitations of competition within the Canadian industrial and commercial sector through bank domination. The Federation submits that since the question here only relates to investments by other than a foreign bank or foreign bank subsidiary itself and that since, in any case, the extent of the activities of foreign bank subsidiaries and non-bank affiliates are limited by their very nature, the same concerns do not apply, or at least not to the same extent."

Your Committee has studied these suggestions by the Banking Federation of the European Economic Community and is of the opinion that these concerns should be received sympathetically, in as much as if accepted they would avoid a tremendous loss of many potential new E.E.C. foreign bank subsidiaries which could provide a reasonable competitive balance to offset influx of applications from U.S. banks and also maintain the important pipeline for European and U.K. bank financing which is so important to meet Canada's future development needs. Your Committee does not, however, agree that the solutions proposed meet Canadian requirements.

Bill C-15 does not contain reasonable provisions for either phasing-out excess holdings or for grandfathering present holdings. Your Committee has received representations in this matter and is of the opinion that more damage can be done to the economy and, to Canada's ability to maintain a reasonable balance of reciprocity by not providing reasonable grandfathering and phasing-out provisions in the Bill than can be gained by disrupting present business arrangements which have been operating legally in Canada and which have been instrumental in providing a constructive and competitive contribution to the Canadian economy.

RECOMMENDATIONS:

YOUR COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS THAT THE LEGISLATION BE AMENDED TO PROVIDE FOR GRANDFATHERING WHICH WOULD PERMIT PRESENT INDIRECT INVESTMENTS IN CANADIAN CORPORATIONS TO CONTINUE TO BE HELD BY AN AFFILIATE OF A FOREIGN BANK PARENT WHICH APPLIES FOR INCORPORATION AS A FOREIGN BANK SUBSIDIARY IN CANADA, WITH THE PROviso THAT AT THE END OF A PERIOD OF 10 YEARS THE MINISTER MAY IN HIS DISCRETION AND SUBJECT TO THE APPROVAL OF THE GOVERNOR IN COUNCIL REQUIRE DIVESTITURE OF ALL OR A PORTION OF SUCH INDIRECT INVESTMENT ON THE BASIS THAT SUCH INDIRECT INVESTMENT IS CONTRARY TO SOUND BANKING PRACTICE AND NOT IN THE PUBLIC INTEREST OF CANADA.

(iv) Limit on Number of Branches and Grandfathering of Such Limitations

Under Subs. 172(2) a Schedule B bank may not open branches outside Canada and may establish in Canada only its head office and its initial branch, and subsequently, with the approval of the Minister, four additional branches.

Based upon its studies and the evidence of witnesses, your Committee wishes to point out some of the arguments in favour of and against such limitations:

The arguments in favour of the limitations include:

- (a) Foreign banks should be restricted to one office initially until the banking authorities have gained some experience as to the nature and size of the proposed operations of a new foreign bank's subsidiary;
- (b) Most foreign banks coming into Canada would only compete for the more profitable commercial loans, and more easily accessible major corporate banking business in such cities as Halifax, Montreal, Toronto, Vancouver, Winnipeg, Edmonton and Calgary, and thus the limitations on the number of branches would have no practical negative effect on foreign bank subsidiaries.

Those against the limitations include:

(a) While most foreign controlled banks in Canada would not be interested in establishing a large branch system across Canada, it is possible that the proposed restrictions might deprive some Canadian centres of improved services on a more competitive basis. Such limitations might result in reciprocal limitations in other countries including some individual states in the United States of America;

(b) The limitations might tend to promote one city as the main banking centre for such new banks if they believed that they might be restricted to one location for all time. This might be to the detriment of efficiency and development, because foreign banks would tend to choose such location having regard to long-term growth, location of the main money-market activity or other reasons if they were to be restricted to one location. However, they might choose another location which would be more logical for their first office from the point of view of geography, efficiency and client orientation if they were not to be so restricted in the future.

(c) The restriction on the number of branches would seriously impair a foreign bank subsidiary's ability to be competitive in the retail banking field and to provide a broad or complete range of banking services.

(d) The degree of penetration by foreign banks into the Canadian financial system would not be determined by the number of branches but by financial criteria.

After due consideration of the problems involved in the proposed limitation in the number of branches of a foreign bank subsidiary your Committee is of the opinion that any such limitation should remain flexible so as not to prevent the achievement of reasonable reciprocity. An alternative to a statutory limitation on the number of branches would be specific guidelines established to approve additional branches as benefit to Canada is demonstrated.

Your Committee is certainly of the opinion that the geographical and political structure of Canada dictates that a more reasonable approach would be to have legislation permit at least one branch in each province.

Many foreign bank affiliates presently carrying on business in Canada operate a network of branches which would offend the numerical limitation contemplated by the legislation. These organizations have been carrying on business for some years in Canada and have established a modified branch system which is sufficiently extensive to cause serious disruption to the institutions concerned if they were required, as a condition of entry into the banking community, to unravel it. There does not appear to be any practical purpose in requiring such institutions to divest themselves of their branches, particularly where they are in a relatively established state and where, at the time of establishment, there was no impediment to the creation of a branch network.

Bill C-15 requires a grandfathering provision to protect these institutions. The Minister's proposed draft amendments to Clause 28 of the Bill contemplate that organizations which have branches which exceed the statutory number may be permitted to continue to maintain these branches for periods of time authorized by the Minister not to exceed 10 years. In the opinion of your Committee it is not rational to require any of these pre-existing branches to close and thus the grandfathering provision ought not to be expressed in terms of time. It would be sufficient to provide that branch networks established prior to the coming into force of the Act should be permitted to continue indefinitely subject to the remaining provisions of the Bill as they relate to foreign bank subsidiaries.

RECOMMENDATIONS:

1. YOUR COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS THAT THE BILL BE AMENDED TO PROVIDE THAT A FOREIGN BANK SUBSIDIARY SHALL HAVE ONE PLACE OF BUSINESS AND IN ADDITION THERETO MAY HAVE ONE BRANCH IN EACH PROVINCE AND TERRITORY OF CANADA, AND FURTHER NOTWITHSTANDING ANY SUCH LIMITATION WITH THE APPROVAL OF THE MINISTER ADDITIONAL BRANCHES MAY BE AUTHORIZED FROM TIME TO TIME AS CIRCUMSTANCES WARRANT AND THE PUBLIC INTEREST DICTATES HAVING IN MIND RECIPROCITY COMMITMENTS TO OTHER COUNTRIES.

2. YOUR COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS THAT THE PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO SECTION 28 TO PERMIT GRANDFATHERING OF EXISTING BRANCH NETWORKS OF FOREIGN BANK AFFILIATES SEEKING TO BECOME FOREIGN BANK SUBSIDIARIES SHOULD BE APPROVED SUBJECT TO REMOVAL OF THE 10 YEAR TIME LIMITATION IN RESPECT OF THE CONTINUED OPERATION OF SUCH BRANCHES.

(v) Ministerial Discretion to Permit the Establishment of new Foreign Bank Subsidiaries Notwithstanding a Resulting temporary exceeding of the 15% Limit set out in Subs. 294(5)

Your Committee can envisage situations developing under the new Bank Act to which, the grant of letters patent for incorporation of a new foreign bank subsidiary might well result in a temporary infringement of the 15% limit on total commercial lending established by Subs. 294(5). Your Committee is of the view that practical considerations dictate the establishment of a discretion in the Minister to exceed the limit for a confined period of time in order to prevent inequities in treatment of competing institutions which may enjoy equal entitlement to gain entry. A ministerial discretion of this kind will also be required to insure that the principle of grandfathering of asset size, which is implicit in the removal of the $500 million limit which was originally imposed in the White Paper, will not be justified by a combination of the presence of the 15% limit and a desire to treat applicants of equal right equally. It goes without saying that such a discretion will also be of real significance in insuring reciprocity as between Canada and other countries whose banks would otherwise face a closed door.

RECOMMENDATION:

YOUR COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS THAT BILL C-15 BE AMENDED TO PERMIT THE MINISTER IN APPROPRIATE CIRCUMSTANCES TO EXERCISE HIS DISCRETION TO GRANT LETTERS PATENT OF INCORPORATION OR SUPPLEMENTARY LETTERS PATENT TO A FOREIGN BANK SUBSIDIARY NOTWITHSTANDING THAT THE EFFECT OF SUCH GRANT WOULD RESULT IN A TEMPORARY BREACH OF THE PROVISIONS OF SUBS. 294(5) OF BILL C-15 WITH RESPECT TO THE LIMIT OF 15% OF TOTAL COMMERCIAL LENDING.

(vi) Prohibition Against Borrowing by a Non-Banking Affiliate on the Guarantee of its Foreign Parent

In its report on the White Paper your Committee was not completely in favour of the proposal to deny an affiliate of a foreign bank, which decides not to be incorporated as a bank and so conduct its financial activities outside the operation of the Bank Act, the right to attract funds through the issue of notes payable which are guaranteed by its parent.

The main reasons for your Committee's opinion at that time was that it was not clear how this restriction could be enforced, and also your Committee believed and still believes, that a foreign bank parent of any Canadian affiliate should be responsible for its debts in Canada.

Your Committee considers that the removal of the guarantee of a well-known foreign bank would not have a material effect on the Canadian affiliate's ability to attract funds, other things such as interest rates being equal; the parent would feel obliged to support the position of its Canadian affiliate in order to protect its own good name.

Your Committee in its report on the White Paper, suggested the following alternative:

"Rather than prohibiting the possibility of borrowing with the guarantee of a foreign parent, your Committee suggests that a more reasonable approach would be to limit the ratio of the foreign affiliate's guaranteed borrowing to total borrowing liabilities and capital. A limit of this nature would encourage the Canadian affiliate or subsidiary of a foreign bank to import more capital funds either as foreign borrowing from the parent or others or as an infusion into new capital stock.

"If the limit was set at 50% of total borrowing liabilities and shareholders' equity, when borrowings on the guarantee of the parent reached the 50% level, new capital funds would be imported into Canada. In the opinion of your Committee this would encourage a reasonable balancing of imported funds consisting of loans and shareholders' equity with borrowings on the Canadian market on the guarantee of the parent."

Notwithstanding the above, your Committee has studied Section 298 of the Bill and is satisfied that the all-embracing nature of this provision is sufficient to make the prohibition effective in as much as it includes "any person" in the prohibition against participating in any arrangement under which a foreign bank guarantees any securities. Not only are non-bank affiliates of a foreign bank included but also the potential lenders or "depositors".

While your Committee is still of the opinion that the foreign parent will continue to be and should be morally responsible for the debts of its affiliates and subsidiaries in Canada, nevertheless your Committee agrees with the important thrust of this legislation which is to encourage foreign banks to conduct their "banking operations" in Canada formally and legally under the umbrella provided by the Bank Act.

(vii) Competitiveness and Reciprocity

The provisions of the Bill which deal with incorporation of foreign bank subsidiaries as banks thereunder which is of the greatest significance is set out in subsection 8(d) which reads as follows:

"Notwithstanding subsection 7(2) Letters Patent to incorporate a bank shall not be issued... where the bank thereby incorporated would be a foreign bank subsidiary, unless the Minister is satisfied that it has the potential to make a contribution to competitive banking in Canada, and that treatment as favourable for banks to which this Act applies exists or will be arranged in the jurisdiction or jurisdictions in which the foreign bank or foreign banks applying for Letters Patent or on whose behalf the application for Letters Patent has been made principally carry on the business of banking."

This provision is of course new under the present Bill and sets up two criteria for foreign bank subsidiaries, namely, the potential to make a contribution to competitive banking in Canada and relative reciprocity for Canadian banks in the foreign bank's jurisdiction of origin. Apparently it is not intended that there will be any regulatory provisions associated with this aspect of the Bill and in the circumstances it can be seen that the requirements are broad indeed.

Your Committee in its report with respect to the White Paper accepted the concepts of reciprocity and significant benefit to Canada as being appropriate criteria. In that report the difficulty with the concept of mutual non-discrimination in the light of Canada's peculiar position with respect to the United States was noted. As will appear hereunder many organizations which appeared before your Committee made a plea for full mutual non-discrimination but as was noted in your Committee's earlier report, by reason of the relatively greater size and financial strength of United States banks in particular, and foreign banks generally, both collectively and individually, it is quite obvious that Canadian interests dictate that it would be necessary to interpret and limit the concept of mutual non-discrimination.

Dealing first of all with the provision of the Bill as a whole, it will be seen that it is cast in very broad language and is not supported by specifics in the way of regulations. Your Committee agrees that this is the proper approach. It would quite obviously be impossible to encapsule in statutory language all of the considerations that the Minister and the Governor in Council would have before them in particular cases, and in the circumstances it is best to provide a broad power in order to guarantee the requisite of flexibility. On the other hand such a broad discretionary power demands meaningful public accountability and your Committee reaffirms, in this connection, the need for a public review of applications to incorporate banks particularly in the case of foreign banks. This latter consideration emerges from the fact that there is a limitation upon the participation by foreign banks in the Canadian banking system and simple justice will demand that there be fair and equal treatment of applications for incorporation, particularly in the initial stages. Such treatment cannot be guaranteed without public accountability and it is for this reason that your Committee feels so strongly about public review.

With respect to the criteria of potential to make a contribution to competitive banking in Canada it can be anticipated that after the legislation has been in place for a period and the limit of participation by foreign bank subsidiaries in the Canadian banking system is approached, there will be a very real need to ensure that the disposition of applications for incorporation of foreign bank subsidiaries is dealt with in an even-handed way. Even in the earlier stages there will be questions of priority of applicants and no doubt those institutions which have had a presence in the Canadian financial community heretofore, would assert an entrenched position. These are issues which should be given a high public profile, in the examination process.

The greater area of difficulty it seems to your Committee will lie in the so-called reciprocity provision. Depending on one's point of view the term "reciprocity" is a misnomer. If one looks at it from the standpoint of foreign banks their view is that Canadian banks are permitted unrestricted entry into their jurisdictions of origin and thus, on the present restrictions in the Bill, reciprocity does not exist. It was obviously the intention of the drafters of the Bill that the reciprocity be flowing the other way, that is to say that Canadian banking institutions be afforded equivalent opportunity in foreign jurisdictions as is afforded to foreign banks in Canada. Many of the groups that appeared before your Committee complained of this aspect of the Bill. Thus, Barclays Canada Limited point out that all of the major limitations on the right of foreign bank subsidiaries to conduct business in Canada untrammelled are unique to Canada and are unknown both in Britain and the European Economic Community. Citicorp points out that the aggregate limit of the total assets of all foreign banks which could come into Canada under the limitations imposed in the Bill represent a substantially smaller proportion than that of Canadian banks in New York State alone. Nonetheless, it is implicit in all of the briefs and submissions which your Committee has entertained that there would appear to be a consensus in the foreign banking community as expressed by The Banking Federation of the European Economic Community in its brief, that it is "fully aware of the specific situation in Canada, and therefore, does not expect strict reciprocity in all respects." The situation which is spoken of is of course the dominance of foreign business interests in this country and the vulnerability of the banking community to foreign control. There has been evidence from a number of witnesses on this point and specifically the Governor of the Bank of Canada observed as follows: (Committee Proceedings Jan. 24, 1979 Page 18:12)

"There is no doubt that the presence of foreign banks increases competition and that this will affect anyone in the business. Generally speaking, we tend to favour more competition in this country. I am not too concerned about that. If it is unfair competition, that is a different thing. That is one reason I favour some limitation. I would not want to see a situation in which foreign banks automatically got a great deal of business because they were dealing with subsidiaries of foreign parent companies. That is one reason for having a limitation."

The other aspect of reciprocity which must be borne in mind is that its application may be complex in countries with multiple banking jurisdictions such as the United States. In the opinion of your Committee the wording of the Bill is sufficient to cover this situation in that the test will be reciprocity in terms of that jurisdiction in which the foreign bank carries on its principal business.

In sum therefore, your Committee is satisfied that the objects of flexibility and equality of treatment are best met by the wording in subsection 8(d) as it presently appears and that any attempt to establish a framework of rules for determining reciprocity or competitiveness would be counter productive.

(vii) Licensing

Concomitant with the grant of entry to foreign bank subsidiaries into the Canadian banking system, reciprocal treatment for Canadian financial institutions in the respective foreign jurisdiction must be assured in order to achieve one of the main objectives of the Act. Your Committee takes note that once approval has been given by the Governor in Council for a foreign bank subsidiary to commence the business of banking in Canada, the Act is unclear on the course of action that should be followed to require the continued existence of reciprocal treatment should changes occur in the foreign jurisdiction. The matters of reciprocity and the operation of the foreign bank subsidiaries in accordance with the intent and purpose of the Bank Act were discussed in Committee with representatives of various foreign banks. In particular, the matter of the issuance of an annual license and the purpose for which a requirement might be established were discussed.

Your Committee is of the opinion that an appropriate method for controlling the activities of foreign bank subsidiaries would be through the creation of a system of licensing. This would be a vehicle for ensuring that foreign bank subsidiaries make a contribution to competitive banking in Canada and further it would be an appropriate method of ensuring reciprocity for Canadian banks in foreign jurisdictions. It is the view of your Committee that once the Government of Canada satisfies itself that it is in the public interest that foreign banks be permitted to carry on business in this country in competition with domestic banks, it is both appropriate and consistent to ensure that the public interest continues to be served. Therefore in the opinion of your Committee this can best be accomplished by the establishment of a system of annual licensing.

RECOMMENDATION:

YOUR COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS THAT ALL FOREIGN BANK SUBSIDIARIES, WHICH HAVE OBTAINED THE APPROVAL OF THE GOVERNOR IN COUNCIL TO COMMENCE THE BUSINESS OF BANKING, THEREAFTER SHALL APPLY ANNUALLY TO THE INSPECTOR GENERAL OF BANKS FOR A LICENSE TO CONTINUE THE BUSINESS OF BANKING. SUCH LICENSE SHALL BE GRANTED BY THE INSPECTOR GENERAL OF BANKS UPON HIS BEING SATISFIED THAT THE BUSINESS OF SUCH FOREIGN BANK SUBSIDIARY IS BEING CONDUCTED IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE INTENT AND PROVISIONS OF THE BANK ACT. IN THE EVENT OF A REFUSAL TO GRANT SUCH A LICENSE THERE SHALL BE AN APPROPRIATE RIGHT OF APPEAL, PURSUANT TO THE PROVISIONS OF THE FEDERAL COURT ACT, TO THE FEDERAL COURT OF CANADA.

(ix) Application of FIRA

It is at the root of the concept of permitting entry of foreign bank subsidiaries that there shall be a statutory definition of the circumstances which would permit entry and which would govern the activities of such foreign bank subsidiaries as banks in Canada. Thus Section 8 of the Bill contemplates a definition of the circumstances in which incorporation of a foreign bank subsidiary will be permitted. These provisions are not unlike the provisions which permit foreign investment in Canada under the Foreign Investment Review Act. It is for this reason that the legislation contemplates that the Foreign Investment Review legislation will have no application to the incorporation of foreign bank subsidiaries under the Bank Act. This concept makes good sense, and your Committee is of the view that it is appropriate for foreign bank subsidiaries to be tested by the statutory requirements of the Bank Act, and not other legislation which has no special reference to the business of banking.

DIVISION I
PART I—THE BANK ACT

2. RESERVES

(i) Proposed Changes

(a) The present rates are 12% of demand deposits and 4% notice deposits. Bill C-15 proposes that these rates be reduced to 10% and 3% respectively.

(b) The above changes in rates of reserve requirements are to be phased in gradually over a 4½ year period as follows:

Demand deposits—12% reducing by ¼ of 1% every six months starting on the anniversary of the coming into force of the new Bank Act.

Notice Deposits—4% on the amount over $500 million, reducing by ½ of 1% every six months, also commencing one year after the coming into force of the new Bank Act.

(c) A reduction in the primary reserve requirement from 4% to 3% of the first $500 million of Canadian currency notice deposits, effective on the coming into force of the new Bank Act.

(d) The following types of deposits are to be excluded from the amounts of deposits on which the primary and secondary reserve requirements are to be calculated.

—certain deposits having a term of one year and over as defined by subsection 204(8)(d)

—RRSP and RHOSP deposits

—interbank deposits

—non-interest bearing demand deposits from non-bank members of CPA

—Canadian dollar deposits used outside Canada

—deposit liabilities of a bank's wholly owned Canadian subsidiaries.

(e) Assets eligible as cash reserves include Canadian coin except gold coin, (coin is not eligible in present Act).

The general effect of the above reduction in percentage rates for calculation of primary cash reserves when fully effective and based on the present amount of such deposits results in an aggregate reduction of approximately $1 billion of cash reserves. This will be phased-in over a 4½ year period. The effect of the proposed exemptions of various deposits from the reserve requirements might be summarized as follows:

	Exempted Deposits (Millions)
Section 204(8)
(a) Deposits under RRSP and RHOSP Plans	($1,519)
(b) Deposits with other banks	($39)
(c) Non-interest bearing demand deposits from members of the Canadian Payments Association that are other than banks	NIL
(d) Canadian currency demand deposits from residents of Canada with an original term to maturity of one year or more if such deposits are not encashable, and encashable Canadian currency deposits from residents of Canada that are not encashable until after one year from the date of issue	($67)
	($2,230)
In addition Subsection 204(1)(g) requires a new reserve of 3% on foreign currency deposits used to finance domestic transactions, estimated to amount to	$4,359
NET INCREASE IN RESERVABLE DEPOSITS BASED ON DEC. 31, 1977 DEPOSITS	$2,129

Source: Canadian Bankers' Association, based on reports of all chartered banks as at December 31, 1977.

The following schedule shows the net effect of the new reserve rates proposed in Bill C-15 compared with the rates in the present Bank Act, and also the effect of the reduction caused by the exemption of certain deposits such as RRSP and RHOSP deposits and the increase resulting from the new reserve requirement for foreign currency deposits used domestically.

(as at December 31, 1977)

	Present Bank Act Requirement (Millions)	Proposed Increase (Decrease)	Bill C-15 Proposal
Demand Deposits
Amount or Reservable Deposits	$17,573	($39)	$17,534
Rate	12%		10%
Reserve requirement	$2,109		$1,753
Notice Deposits
Amount of reservable deposits	$67,507	($2,191)	$65,316
Rate	4%		2% on 1st 500 3% on excess
Reserve requirement	$2,700		$1,899
Foreign Currency Deposits
Used Domestically
Amount of reservable deposits		$4,359	$4,359
Rate			3%
Reserve requirement			$131
Total Deposits
Amount of Reservable Deposits	$85,080	$2,129	$87,209
Rate	12% and 4%		10% and 3%
Reserve requirement	$4,809		$3,783

This might be summarized further as follows:

(as at December 31, 1977)

	Demand	Notice (Millions)	Foreign	Total
Present Requirement
Eligible Deposits	$17,573	$67,507		$85,080
Reserve Requirement	$2,109	$2,700		$4,809
Proposed Requirement
Eligible Deposits	$17,534	$65,316	$4,359	$87,209
Reserve Requirement	$1,953	$1,899	$131	$3,983
Increase (decrease) in reserve requirement based on Dec. 31, 1977 deposits	($356)	($801)	$131	($1,026)

The above amount of reservable foreign currency deposits used domestically at December 31, 1977 ($4,359 millions) has been supplied by the Canadian Bankers' Association; this is a net amount after making allowance for non-reservable deposits.

The comparable figures at December 31, 1978 are as follows: Canadian dollar statutory deposits—demand deposits $20,009 million, reserve requirement $2,401 million; notice deposits $79,003 million, reserve requirement $3,160 million, total reserve requirement $6,061 million.

Apart from the effect of the proposed changes in the types of deposits which are proposed to be excluded from reservable deposits, based on figures as at February 28, 1979, the proposed reductions in reserve rates would have the following result:

RESERVABLE DEPOSITS (millions)
	Present		Proposed		Reduction
Demands	$ 21,732	12%	$2,608	10%	$ 435
Notice	$ 79,593	4%	$3,184	3%	$ 796
	$101,325		$5,792		$1,231

(Source: Bank of Canada Weekly Financial Statistics, March 1, 1979)

Following are the proposed changes in Part I of Bill C-15 the new Bank Bill, on which your Committee makes recommendations in this report:

1. The phasing-in of the reductions in the rates of the primary cash reserve requirements.
2. The requirement for a 3% primary cash reserve and also a secondary reserve requirement on foreign currency deposits used domestically.
3. The exemption from the primary reserve requirement of Canadian currency deposits of a term one year and over which are not encashable.

Your Committee also noted the following changes in reserve requirements proposed by Part I of Bill C-15.

Reduction by 1% of the primary cash reserve requirement on the first $500 million of notice deposits.

Exclusion of other banks' deposits from reserve requirements.

Exclusion of RHOSP and RRSP deposits from reserve requirements.

(ii) Phasing in of Reductions in Rates of Primary Reserve

As noted above, the reductions of the rates of the primary reserve requirement (demand deposits reduced from 12% to 10%, and notice deposits reduced from 4% to 3%) are to be phased-in over a 4½ year period.

Your Committee, as a result of its hearing of witnesses and its study of the matter has concluded that while the government has agreed with your Committee's finding that the amount of the reserve requirement was higher than necessary and has agreed with your Committee's recommendation in its Report on the White Paper on Banking that the reserve requirement should be reduced as above, the government is concerned that a sudden drop in the reserve would disturb its fiscal borrowing requirement and disrupt the treasury bill market if effect were given to such reductions in percentage rates within a shorter period of time than what is proposed.

While your Committee agrees that such changes should be phased-in over a reasonable period, it is of the opinion that the following aspect of the phasing-in should be studied and considered:

What is a reasonable phasing-in period taking into account the various factors involved including the experience during the 1967 reduction in reserves?

Appearing before the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce on November 11, 1978, Mr. W. A. Kennett, Inspector General of Banks stated,

"The government has recognized that the primary reserve requirement imposed on the bank is higher than it needs to be. The government has proposed following the Committee's recommendation, that this requirement should be lowered; but having in mind the high fiscal borrowing requirements of the government in fiscal years 1978, 1979 and even in fiscal year 1980, the government has sought a way to reduce this reserve requirement with a minimum of impact on its full fiscal program." (Committee Proceedings, November 11, 1978)

The Canadian Bankers' Association on pages 9 and 10 of its brief states:

"as to the reductions in the reserve ratio in our view the 'phasing-in' period is far too long."

"... In the 1967 revision the main changes, some of them more important than those now proposed (e.g. the removal of the interest ceiling and substantial reductions in reserve requirements), were operative in a matter of months. We are convinced that the transitional period this time could be reduced well below that now provided in the bill."

On January 24, 1979 when he appeared before your Committee, Mr. Gerald K. Bouey, Governor of the Bank of Canada, outlined his attitude towards the amount and the period proposed for phasing-in of the primary cash reserve as follows:

"From the point of view of monetary policy, you do want a reserve requirement that would be somewhat higher than the banks would keep automatically because you want a sensitive response to any changes you bring about in cash reserves. When we put more cash reserves into the system we want the banks to want to employ those funds to acquire securities or make loans. Otherwise there is no response. If their cash is so low that when we increase it they say, 'That is the range we want to keep anyway,' nothing results. So, having a minimum reserve requirement—and it has to be a non-interest bearing requirement.

(Committee Proceedings, Jan. 24, 1979 pages 18:18 and 18:19)

"So the question of what cash reserves should be is not an easy one to answer. You could reduce the non-interest bearing cash reserves, aside from the notes, to zero. You could have a system whereby the Bank of Canada would lend enough money to the banks to cover their overdraft at the close of business every day. That is theoretically possible. On the other hand, if we withdraw all these other facilities it might be that they would have to keep fairly high cash reserves. This is why I say that the amount they are asked to keep is a pretty arbitrary one."

...

"When you look at it you try to ensure that they are not being penalized compared to other countries and that they are reasonably competitive. But whenever you reduce the cash reserves you reduce the tax, and you must remember you are shifting that so-called tax from the users of banking services on to the public generally."

(Committee Proceedings, Jan. 24, 1979 pages 18:16 and 18:17)

"This proposal, as I said, would benefit the banks, and I do not see any reason why it should be done in any way that would cause disruption elsewhere. As honourable senators are aware, the borrowing requirements of the government are quite high these days. When this change takes place, the government will have to find a home for the securities which the Bank of Canada now holds as a counterpart to these cash reserves. To put it another way, the cash reserves of the banks are in the form of Bank of Canada notes and deposit balances with the Bank of Canada, and the counterpart to that on our balance sheet are Government of Canada securities. Any reduction in cash reserve requirements will have to be accompanied by a reduction in the amount of Government of Canada securities held by the Bank of Canada. As this reduction takes place, another home will have to be found for those securities.

In present-day terms, that amount is about $1 billion. In addition to placing outside the Bank of Canada whatever amount of government debt is required at that time, there will be another $1 billion. So, I think it should be done gradually and in a way that is not disruptive to security markets or to the government's debt management. I would not argue that it has to be exactly in accordance with some formula, but it certainly should be done over a period of time to ensure that it is not disruptive."

"The major difference between the situation now and the situation which prevailed 10 years ago is that government cash requirements today are much higher and the amount of government debt that has to be placed much larger."

(Committee Proceedings Jan. 24, 1979 pages 18:14 and 18:15)

The 1967 reduction in reserve requirements was phased in monthly over an eight month-period without any apparent disturbance of monetary policy or of the treasury bill market. The changes at that time were an increase in reserves on demand deposits (from 8% to 12%) and a more than off-setting reduction in reserves on notice deposits (from 8% to 4%). The changes were phased in at the rate of ½ of one percentage point each month over eight months. Based on the deposits in the banking system in 1967 there was a reduction in the cash reserve requirement from approximately $1,750 million to $1,550 million, a reduction of approximately $25 million per month. This was an average reduction of 1½% of the reserve per month.

This compares with a proposed average monthly reduction of 16 million dollars per month or an average rate of considerably less than ½ of 1% of the reserve per month (.0031% or about 1.86% semi-annually.)

On a basis comparable to the 1967 phasing-in period the proposed reductions in Bill C-15 your Committee estimates, could be accomplished over a 12 month period. (This observation is made on a purely mathematical basis without taking into account other factors such as inflation, interest rates, growth of money supply, monetary policy, etc.). An increase in the amount of deposits in the Canadian banking system at a growth rate in excess of 5% per annum could therefore increase the amount of reservable deposits and also the amount of the reserves held by the Bank of Canada for the chartered banks. This would result, therefore, in an actual increase in the amount of revenue which would be earned by the Bank of Canada from the use of the primary reserve. The growth of deposits held by the chartered banks recorded the following growth rate over the past six years:

	Total Canadian $ Deposits (millions)	Annual Rate of Increase
Dec. 31, 1972	$40,728
1973	48,565	19.24%
1974	58,797	21.07%
1975	66,893	13.73%
1976	76,773	14.80%
1977	88,670	15.50%
1978	103,144	16.32%

(Source: Bank of Canada Monthly Review)

While it is expected that the amount of deposit liabilities, caused by the growth in the money supply and other factors, will continue to increase, the intention of the government to moderate the rate of monetary expansion in Canada will probably result in a slower annual growth rate than the above trend over the past several years. However, the following statement by R. W. Lawson, Senior Deputy Governor of the Bank of Canada to the Swiss-Canadian Chamber of Commerce, Montreal, 21 September 1978 does indicate that the growth rate will be in excess of 5% per annum:

"As you know, we in the Bank of Canada have been pursuing this policy of moderating gradually the rate of monetary expansion in Canada by the practice of publishing a target range for future growth of the money supply narrowly defined (M1), and then each year or so lowering the target range. Last week we published the fourth target range in this series. The new target range is from 6 to 10 per cent annually, and it replaced a range of 7 to 11 per cent chosen last year, 8 to 12 per cent the year before and 10 to less than 15 per cent announced in the fall of 1975". (Bank of Canada Review, October 1978)

Your Committee has concluded that based on a growth in the supply of money held in bank deposits at the rate of 5% per annum compounded semi-annually, the proposed phasing-in of the reserve reduction semi-annually would result in the dollar amount of cash reserves remaining steady. That is to say, there would be no loss in actual dollar revenue to the Bank of Canada nor would there be any material change in the amount of constant or absolute dollar revenue to the chartered banks. A growth rate in the money supply of 5% would result in additional absolute dollar revenue to the Bank of Canada in spite of the proposed reduction in the reserve ratios.

The effect of inflation on the future value of the cash reserves in terms of purchasing power has not been taken into account in the above observations.

Since the amount of deposits in the chartered bank system has been increasing at a considerably greater average rate than 5% per annum, there would in fact be a net increase in the amount of the cash reserves at the Bank of Canada based on absolute amounts of money. In addition there would also be increased cash reserves provided by the new banks entering the system. Overall, therefore it appears probable that there should be no loss of revenue to the Bank of Canada by phasing-in the reduction in primary cash reserve rates over a twelve month period. On the contrary, there should be a steady increase in dollar amounts of cash revenue.

Based on its studies and the evidence submitted, your Committee is of the opinion that the phasing-in period could be reduced from 4½ years to 12 months without causing any disruption to the fiscal requirements of the government or the ability of the Bank of Canada to maintain an even control over the monetary and banking system. As noted above a 12 month phasing-in period would be comparable to the 1967 period of 8 months.

RECOMMENDATION:

YOUR COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS THAT THE TRANSITION OR PHASING-IN PERIOD FOR THE REDUCTION IN RATES OF CASH RESERVE REQUIREMENTS BE REDUCED FROM 4½ YEARS TO 12 MONTHS.

(iii) Foreign Currency Deposits Used Domestically

The present Bank Act does not require the chartered banks to provide either primary cash reserves or secondary reserves on foreign currency deposits. The intention to require primary cash reserves on foreign currency deposits used domestically was first broached in the White Paper on the Revision of Canadian Banking Legislation 1976 which blandly stated, without giving any reasons therefore, "Reserve requirements with respect to foreign currency deposits used domestically will be at the 4% rate."

In accordance with your Committee's recommendations in its report on the White Paper, the primary reserve rate in Bill C-15 has been reduced from 4% to 3%. Section 204(1)(g) states "three percent of such of its deposits as are foreign currency deposit liabilities used to finance domestic transactions."

Bill C-15 however, has gone even farther than the declared intention of the White Paper, by requiring the additional secondary reserve (presently 5%) on such foreign currency deposits used domestically. Subsection 204(7) states:

"A bank, if required by the Bank of Canada shall maintain a secondary reserve, in addition to its primary reserve... and such reserve shall not be less on the average during any month than such percentage as may be fixed under subsection 18(2) of the Bank of Canada Act of an amount equal to such of its deposit liabilities as are deposit liabilities used to finance domestic transactions."

Whether this was the intention of the Minister or not, foreign currency deposits used domestically are swept into the net of the secondary reserve requirement in addition to the primary reserve requirement.

In its report on the White Paper, page 15, your Committee reported as follows:

"It has been pointed out to your Committee that a considerable amount of competition for this type of deposit comes from foreign-controlled financial institutions which are not subject to the control of the Bank Act and are not required to provide reserves with the Bank of Canada. The banking community has pointed out to your Committee that the imposition of this proposed reserve requirement on Canadian chartered banks would put them at a rate differential disadvantage of almost $\frac{1}{2}$ of 1% (38 basis points) in the interest rate they would have to charge when competing with foreign-controlled near-banks (assuming the current interest was 9% per annum.)

This means, for example, that a Canadian chartered bank which receives a foreign currency deposit of U.S. $100,000 would have only U.S. $96,000 to lend after deducting the proposed 4% reserve. To obtain the same net earnings as a competing near-bank, a chartered bank would have to charge an interest rate of 9.38% (38 basis points or 0.38% more) compared with 9% charged by a near-bank. As can be seen, the bank would be at a distinct disadvantage in competing with institutions which would not be required to maintain non-interest bearing cash reserves.

It has also been pointed out in representations made to your Committee that such a reserve requirement could create difficulties for the smaller banks because all deposits, whether in domestic or foreign currencies, are essential to growth.

A part of the reserves required of Canadian banks are based on Canadian currency deposits employed abroad which are received from non-residents. Your Committee, in the light of this requirement and based on the concerns of the banking community in representations made to your Committee, finds it difficult to assess the reasons for adding this new reserve requirement in respect of foreign currency deposits used domestically.

In the opinion of your Committee, based on its studies, and the evidence submitted, it does not appear to be fair to place Canadian banks at a legislated disadvantage when competing with foreign-controlled competitors. The disadvantage results from the loss of revenue to the banks having to put up a non-interest earning cash reserve of 4% on foreign currency deposits used domestically. Your Committee suggests that if such a reserve is required, this rate differential might be overcome in large part by having the Bank of Canada pay over to the chartered banks the interest which would be earned by the central bank on the investment of such cash; an alternative, in your Committee's opinion, would be to exempt from reserves the following classes of foreign currency deposits used in Canada:

- (a) Foreign currency deposits with an original term in excess of one year which are not encashable. This would be in line with the White Paper's proposal to exempt similar Canadian dollar deposits.
- (b) Funds advanced in foreign currency to the federal, provincial and municipal governments. This would equalize competition from foreign banks because the latter can lend to governments in Canada without reserves and without withholding tax cost.
- (c) Funds advanced in foreign currency where the term loan agreement calls for not more than 25% to be repaid in the first five years. This also would equalize competition from foreign banks who can lend to Canadian corporations without the reserve burden and without withholding tax cost."

The concerns and recommendations of your Committee were not heeded in the drafting of Bill C-15. Your Committee heard the testimony of witnesses representing the Canadian Bankers' Association and of individual Canadian chartered banks concerning these new requirements of Bill C-15 as well as in connection with the Committee's study of the White Paper.

As a result of its hearings and study, your Committee is further strengthened in its views that the imposition in Bill C-15 of the Primary Reserve requirement for foreign currency deposits used domestically will put Canadian chartered banks at a competitive disadvantage and will mean considerable business and revenue being lost by Canadian banks to foreign banks, and a loss in revenue to the Canadian Government.

The brief of the Canadian Bankers' Association covers this subject as follows:

"Of the specific proposals put forward in Bill C-57 our principal objection is to the new 3% reserve on foreign currency deposits used domestically. We find it very difficult to understand the purpose of this provision. No official explanation has been given in the White Paper, the Bill or in remarks by the Minister. We have had to assume that it reflects a fear that the absence of a reserve requirement will lead the Canadian banks to become over-dependent on foreign currency resources, a fear which in our view is groundless.

"We have represented to the Department that this proposal runs counter to the whole spirit of the revision, which we take to be the fostering of even greater competition in Canadian financial markets. Non-resident banks may make such loans in Canada free of reserve requirements for the funding thereof, and there is nothing in Bill C-57 that will prevent them from continuing to do so. For the Canadian banks however the Bill imposes a restriction in the form of the new 3% reserve which will seriously curtail their ability to compete."

"The inhibition that is assumed to prevent the foreign banks from lending here is the imposition of withholding tax on the interest on such loans. This in fact is not a real barrier. In many forms of lending there is no withholding tax at all, and furthermore in the main countries involved this tax can usually be offset against other tax liabilities, so that it is not an effective deterrent. By contrast the new reserve will be a very potent barrier for the Canadian banks. Competition is extremely keen in this type of lending, and differences in margins of $\frac{1}{16}$ th, $\frac{1}{8}$ th or $\frac{1}{4}$ of a per cent are crucial. The cost of keeping a 3% reserve is roughly equal to $\frac{1}{4}$ % at current interest rate levels. The reserve could therefore easily prevent the Canadian banks from continuing a line of activity that has been beneficial both to themselves and their customers while making it easier for foreign banks to take over this business.

"It also seems anomalous that Canada is proposing to introduce this form of reserve at the very time that the United States has abandoned a comparable measure. American provisions having similar effect were recently withdrawn entirely.

"A difficulty with the proposal also is that among the banks it will have a very unequal effect, depending on the extent of their foreign currency business. For the banks so affected the result will be to deny any immediate reduction in reserve requirements as provided in the Bill, or at least to make them minimal."

The arguments of the Canadian chartered banks on this point, in the opinion of your Committee, contain considerable substance, and strengthen your Committee's view expressed in its report on the White Paper that there should not be any primary reserve requirements nor, indeed, any secondary reserve requirement on foreign currency deposits used for domestic transactions.

If the Canadian government is seeking a means to monitor the amount, source, location or trend of such deposits, such information is presently provided to the Bank of Canada. The amount of foreign currency business with Canadian residents (booked at chartered banks in Canada) is reported in the Bank of Canada "Weekly Financial Statistics" and in the Bank of Canada Monthly Review.

The trend of foreign currency deposits used domestically compared with total loans by chartered banks (excluding day-to-day loans, call loans and short loans) is indicated by the following:

	Foreign Currency Loans to Canadian Residents	Total Can. $ Loans	Foreign Currency Deposits from Canadian Residents
Dec. 31/76	$3,151	$52,431	$ 6,683
Dec. 31/77	$4,190	$57,875	$ 7,390
Dec. 31/78	$6,871	$64,894	$11,395

Source: Bank of Canada Review, February, 1979 Schedules 5 and 6.

At a time when the Bank of Canada is endeavouring to strengthen the Canadian dollar by maintaining high interest rates, it is not surprising that there has been an increase in the amount of foreign currency deposits. A country with a stable political system and a strong banking system will continue to attract foreign currency deposits at rates which are competitive internationally.

As has been noted earlier in this report, the proposed reduction in the rates of the primary reserve requirement is based on the reserves being admittedly higher than necessary. The implementation of this new 3% reserve on foreign currency deposits used domestically is, therefore, not needed for either fiscal purposes or monetary control. This was noted by Mr. W. A. Kennett, Inspector General of Banks, when he appeared before your Committee on November 15, 1978. At that time he also admitted that this proposed reserve would put the Canadian banks to some extent in a non-competitive position with respect to foreign currency lending and that this proposal required further study as follows: (Committee Proceedings, November 15, 1978, pages 4:55 and 4:56)

"First, the purpose of the implementation of the introduction of this new reserve was not simply to raise new money for the federal government. That was not the purpose. It has that effect. We have discussed that. But its purpose was to equalize the treatment of deposits in Canadian banks, so that foreign currency deposits used in Canada would be reservable in the same way that Canadian deposits are reservable. So there would be no incentive to switch—"

"... The second aspect of it is that if what the banks have said is true, is accurate—I will come back to that question—then Canadian banks would be in an uncompetitive position relative to foreign banks in competing for foreign currency lending business in Canada; in which case they would lose that business, in which case the reserve would not be collected, the business would not be there. So that in fact the government would not realize the $180 million in reserves that we were talking about."

"... The other point that I should mention is that the position of the chartered banks on this question has led us to begin ourselves to reconsider this situation. I think we are now sympathetic to the argument that this will impair their competitive position. Looking at it from the officials' point of view, and the work that was done earlier, we felt that the impact of withholding taxes, of reserves on deposits in other countries, would help to offset the lack of competitiveness that might be induced by this reserve. I think we have been convinced that that is not fully so. So we now agree, in a sense, with the bankers that there is some competitive disability here that we are introducing. So the question does need some more thought."

When appearing before your Committee on January 24, 1979, Mr. Gerald K. Bouey, Governor of the Bank of Canada commented as follows on the proposed 3% reserve on foreign currency deposits used domestically: (Committee Proceedings Jan. 24, 1979 18:21)

"My interest in the matter really relates to the deposits booked in Canada. If you have a situation, as we have now, where there is a cash reserve requirement against Canadian dollar deposits, that will obviously cost the banks something and it does affect the rates they can pay on those deposits. When you have no non-interest-bearing cash requirement against foreign currency deposits, then the banks are able to offer a higher rate than they otherwise would have done.

It seems very strange to me that we would put Canadian dollar deposits at a disadvantage in this country as against foreign currency deposits. In fact, other things being equal, Canadians would be able to earn more money on their foreign currency deposits simply because they are denominated in foreign currency. Particularly at a time when I was worried about the Canadian dollar, that seemed to be somewhat strange. So I have been interested in equalizing that situation, putting them on the same basis. The 3 per cent against foreign currency deposits would then be the same as 3 per cent against Canadian dollar time deposits."

"I think the problem may have arisen in the way that it was phrased, namely, "deposits for use in Canada," which then of course might include deposits booked outside the country where the banks are in competition with foreign banks. I would not want to see that happen and that is where I would agree it needs to be looked at. But I think there must be a way of equalizing the situation within Canada for deposits booked in one currency or the other."

"... If you go down to your bank in Ottawa and ask them to open a U.S. dollar account for you, they will do that. They will not have to keep non-interest bearing cash reserves against your Canadian dollar deposit account. It is that inequality that I am anxious to see eliminated. I think that can be done."

"I believe that the provisions as presently worded are based on the concept of funds for use in Canada. Some of the funds for use in Canada may come from depositors outside Canada and in that situation we do not want to put our banks at a disadvantage against foreign banks."

Your Committee recommends, in any event, that the Bank Act should exempt from the reserve requirement (a) foreign currency deposits which are loaned to federal, provincial and municipal governments in order to equalize competition from foreign banks and (b) foreign currency deposits where the loan agreement calls for not more than 25% to be repaid in the first five years and (c) foreign currency term deposits of one year and over which are not encashable.

YOUR COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS THAT SECTION 204 OF BILL C-15 BE AMENDED IN SUCH A MANNER THAT FOREIGN CURRENCY DEPOSITS USED DOMESTICALLY ARE NOT SUBJECT TO EITHER THE PRIMARY RESERVE REQUIREMENTS IN SUBSECTION 204(1)(g) OR THE SECONDARY RESERVE REQUIREMENTS OF SUBSECTION 204(7).

IN THE EVENT THAT SUCH DEPOSITS ARE NOT EXEMPTED FROM RESERVE REQUIREMENTS, YOUR COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS THAT THE FOLLOWING TYPES OF DEPOSITS BE EXEMPTED FROM THE RESERVE REQUIREMENTS:

(a) FOREIGN CURRENCY DEPOSITS BOOKED IN CANADA FROM NON-RESIDENTS WHICH ARE USED DOMESTICALLY;

(b) FOREIGN CURRENCY DEPOSITS WITH AN ORIGINAL TERM IN EXCESS OF ONE YEAR WHICH ARE NOT ENCASHABLE, WHETHER USED DOMESTICALLY OR NOT;

(c) FUNDS ADVANCED IN FOREIGN CURRENCY TO THE FEDERAL, PROVINCIAL AND MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENTS, AND

(d) FUNDS ADVANCED IN FOREIGN CURRENCY WHERE THE LOAN AGREEMENT CALLS FOR NOT MORE THAN 25% TO BE REPAYED IN THE FIRST FIVE YEARS.

(iv) Exemption for term deposits

Subsection 204(8)(d) of the Bill proposes to exempt from reserve requirements Canadian currency deposits from residents of Canada with an original term to maturity of one year or more if such deposits are not encashable; also exempted would be encashable Canadian currency deposits from residents of Canada that are not encashable until after one year from the date of issue.

Your Committee examined the proposed exemption for term deposits in connection with its study of the White Paper. It is noted that the latter part of the subsection (which would exclude deposits which are not encashable until one year from the date of issue) was not included in the White Paper proposals.

Your Committee referred to this matter on pages 14 and 15 of its report on the White Paper as follows:

"The White Paper proposals concerning the primary cash reserves required by chartered banks under the Bank Act appear to relieve banks from maintaining reserves on time deposits having an original term to maturity in excess of one year that are not encashable on demand.

"There is a body of opinion that banks have been able to hold on to their market share in one-year-plus deposits, despite offering lower interest rates than the near-banks; this is probably due to their relative accessibility and safety. (*)

"If banks have held on to their share of this term deposit flow while offering a lower interest rate than the near-banks, one can easily project that their share of the market will greatly increase if they can offer the same rates as trust companies and mortgage loan companies.

"The same writer predicts that by 1987, banks will have increased their share of the consumer loan market from 58.3 per cent in 1976 to 80 per cent, and their share of the mortgage loan market in Canada from 21% in 1976 also to 80 per cent by 1987.

"A reduction of the reserve requirement on term deposits from 4% to 3% as suggested by your Committee in addition to the present 5% secondary reserve requirement would result in a decrease of the rate differential disadvantage for banks from approximately 50 to 55 basis points (0.05%) at present to approximately 40 basis points (0.4%). This differential should still provide a sufficient competitive edge for trust companies, caisses and other near-banks to prevent a substantial disruption of their established market."

"In comparing the position of the trust companies and mortgage loan companies with the position of chartered banks it must be appreciated that trust and loan companies are limited in expansion of their deposit borrowings to between 20 and 25 times their capital base, whereas chartered banks have no such limitation. Also, many of the larger banks have their own subsidiary mortgage loan companies which are not required to put up interest-free cash reserves.

Naturally, mortgage loan companies owned or controlled by chartered banks are subject to the limitation of the above ratio of deposit borrowings to capital.

It is your Committee's opinion that the proven ability of trust and mortgage companies to channel a steady flow of 5 year term deposit funds into residential mortgages could be substantially hampered if banks were permitted to attract such term deposits without reserve requirements. The term market has been the trust and mortgage loan industry's chief source of funds for the mortgage market. The banks' rebuttal is that they would find it difficult to have any large proportion of their customers switch to term deposits without a call or encashable feature; however, in the opinion of your Committee the lifting of the 4% reserve requirement completely would probably permit the banks to attract a substantial share of the five year term deposit market away from the trust and mortgage loan companies on which the trust and mortgage companies depend.

It has been suggested by witnesses that this could restrict the supply of mortgage funds and might result in higher mortgage rates, if banks channelled a large part of these funds into commercial lending.

If the requirement for banks to maintain reserves on non-cashable deposits for a term over one year is lifted, banks would be able to compete with near-banks on an equal basis as far as rates are concerned. The branch system of the larger banks and their built-in banking-customer market would lead your Committee to conclude that the banks would increase substantially their share of the term deposit cash flow and of the mortgage loan market in Canada.

Your Committee is of the opinion that the complete removal of reserve requirements for chartered banks on term deposits over one year which are not encashable on demand could disturb the competitive position of trust and mortgage companies for term deposits to an extent sufficient not only to disrupt their flow of such funds into the residential mortgage market but might even seriously jeopardize the future existence of many institutions in this field."

Your Committee's recommendation at that time was as follows:

"Your Committee is not in favour of the proposal to relieve banks of the requirements to maintain primary cash reserves against notice deposits of a term in excess of one year which are not encashable, unless there is some requirement for banks to match maturity of term deposits with mortgage loans in order to maintain an adequate flow of funds into residential mortgages up to the amount of the ceiling proposed in this report of 15% in respect of residential mortgages."

In connection with its study of the White Paper's proposal to relieve banks of the ceiling which limited residential mortgages to 10% of deposit liabilities and debentures, your Committee reported as follows on page 24 of its report:

"In the interests of liquidity and of matching mortgages with the proceeds of term deposits or debentures of a comparable maturity, it would appear to your Committee advisable that some limit be placed on the amount of investments in mortgages at any one time in relation to total deposit and debenture liabilities; there should also be a reasonable matching of proceeds from term deposits with mortgages. This might have the effect of resolving to some extent the problem envisaged by the trust and mortgage companies that the removal of the 4% reserve on such non-callable term deposits would divert the normal flow of mortgage funds into commercial lending."

Your Committee heard from several witnesses and received several briefs which indicated very grave concern for the future of smaller trust and loan companies which, it is claimed, would find it difficult to continue in business if the term deposit business which they claim is their life-blood, was taken over by the banks.

*"Ottawa looks for Tighter Control" by André Marson, vice-president of Research Securities of Canada, Ltd., in the November-December 1976 issue of The Canadian Banker Vol. 83, No. 6, 1976—adapted from an article in the October 1976 issue of Le Banquier et Revue IBC.

The reduction of the primary reserve requirement from 4% to 3% of notice deposits, as recommended in your Committee's report on the White Paper, narrows the competitive edge, and in your Committee's opinion should, if the proposed exemptions for these term deposits were not proceeded with under the Bank Act, maintain reasonable stability in the industry, and also maintain sufficient competition for term deposits to provide the required flow of funds into the mortgage market.

RECOMMENDATION:

YOUR COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS THAT THE BANKS CONTINUE TO BE REQUIRED TO MAINTAIN PRIMARY RESERVES ON THE AMOUNT OF THEIR DEPOSIT LIABILITIES OF A TERM OF ONE YEAR AND OVER WHICH ARE NOT ENCASHABLE WHICH ARE PAYABLE IN CANADIAN CURRENCY, AS REQUIRED BY THE PRESENT BANK ACT, AND THAT BILL C-15 BE AMENDED BY THE ELIMINATION OF THE EXEMPTION PROVIDED IN SECTION 204(8)(d) OF THE BILL.

(v) Reduction in the Primary Reserve Requirement of 1% on the First 500 Million of Canadian Dollars Notice Deposits

Subsections 204(1)(e) and (f) require banks to maintain a primary reserve of 2% of its total notice deposits plus an additional 1% of such deposits in excess of $500 million, i.e. a total of 2% in the amount of notice deposits on the first $500 million and 3% on the amount over $500 million.

This lower rate of 2% on the first $500 million of notice deposits would represent a reduction in reserves of $10 million per bank for the present chartered banks, or approximately $120 million in aggregate out of total combined primary reserves of approximately $6 billion.

Near-banks are not required to incorporate as banks under the new Bank Act nor are they required to become members of the Canadian Payments Association. Without taking either step the near-banks may enjoy the clearing house facilities to be operated by the Canadian Payments Association through an agreement with a member of that Association, including the necessary arrangements in respect of settlement balances. In such event, such near-banks which do not incorporate as a bank are not subject to the provisions of Part I of Bill C-15 and the requirement to provide reserves.

The idea of a lower rate on the first $500 million was first proposed in the White Paper in order to make it easier on the smaller new banks and new banks which might become members of the Canadian Payments Association. It will result in lower primary requirement reserve for the new banks.

Since this lower rate on the first $500 million will apply to all chartered banks, including the present chartered banks, this change appears to your Committee to be fair and reasonable and will be less onerous on new entrants into the Canadian banking system.

It would appear that the bank subsidiaries in Canada of foreign banks would be subject to the new primary rates proposed in Bill C-15 of 10% of demand deposits and 2% of notice deposits up to $500 million.

It might be noted that the 2% rate on the first $500 million of notice deposits comes into effect on the coming into force of the new Bank Act while the present 4% rate on notice deposits in excess of $500 million and the present 12% rate on demand deposits are phased-in to the proposed 3% rate and 10% rate respectively over a 4½ year period.

Your Committee approves the reduction in the primary reserve requirement on the first $500 million of Canadian currency notice deposits as proposed in Bill C-15.

(vi) Exclusion of RRSP and RHOSP Deposits from Reserve Requirement

Subsection 204(8)(a) proposes to exempt from primary and secondary reserve requirement deposits that are properly held under registered retirement savings plans (RRSP) and registered home ownership savings plans (RHOSP).

Although this proposed exemption was not discussed in the White Paper, it appears to your Committee that it is a reasonable exclusion. Deposits under those types of savings plans are not available to banks to lend to borrowers nor to invest in usual banking types of investments. These deposits are restricted in accordance with the terms of the pertinent trust or plan agreements. A reserve requirement would increase the cost of interest which would have to be absorbed by other lending or investment vehicles.

Your Committee approves the exemption proposed in subsection 204(8)(a) for RRSP and RHOSP deposits.

(vii) Exclusion of Deposits from Other Banks for Purpose of Calculating Primary Reserve

While inter-bank deposits within the Canadian banking system are "netted out" on an overall basis, the inclusion of the deposit liability balances owned by banks in a creditor position in the reserve calculation would result in a duplication.

It might be pointed out that the proposed Bank Act provides under sections 204(3) and (4) that "two banks may, with the approval of the Bank of Canada, enter into an agreement pursuant to which one such bank may maintain Canadian currency deposits in a reserve account with the other bank in lieu of any deposits that the depositing bank would otherwise be required to maintain with the Bank of Canada."

While the ultimate effect of this proposal of inter-bank deposits, or the extent it will be resorted to cannot be estimated or quantified at this time, the proposed change in the reserve requirements to permit the exclusion of this type of inter-bank deposit from the reserve calculation undoubtedly fits in with the new provision in subsections 204(3) and (4).

Your Committee approves the exclusion of inter-bank deposits within the Canadian Banking System from the calculation of the reserve requirements for banks.

(viii) Payment of Interest on Primary Cash Reserve Subsection 204(1)

In its report on the White Paper, your Committee recommended that the Bank of Canada pay interest to the Chartered Banks on the primary cash reserve (exclusive of the amount of cash required for clearing settlement purposes). This recommendation, which reads as follows, has not been given effect to in Part I of Bill C-15:

"As a result of its studies your Committee is of the opinion that the Bank of Canada should pay interest on the deposits with the Bank of Canada provided by the chartered banks under the statutory primary cash reserve requirement, exclusive of the amount of cash required for clearing settlement purposes and subject to a deduction for the expenses in connection with the handling of such reserve and the investment thereof."

Appearing before your Committee on January 24, 1979, Mr. Gerald K. Bouey, Governor of the Bank of Canada made the following observations concerning the questions of payment of interest on reserves:

"Mr. Bouey: I do not think it is possible to establish clearly that the banks are entitled to have the cash reserve requirements at no higher than such-and-such an amount. As I mentioned earlier, it is a very arbitrary business, depending on a lot of things. I can give you a very lengthy answer on that, if you want me to. I do not feel that the banks are in some way being deprived of something as a result of the cash reserve requirements being where they are now. It does look as though it is possible to reduce them further, and if Parliament chooses to do so, that is fine, but I think the sensible thing to do is to bring about such a reduction on a gradual basis. I would not want to argue that the banks should be paid interest on the full amount in the meantime, any more than I would argue that they should be paid interest for all those years when reserve requirements were higher."

(Committee Proceedings, Jan. 24, 1979 page 18:15)

"Mr. Bouey: I think the question of payment of interest on reserves is very much like the question of reducing the required level of reserves. I suppose I would feel that there is not much point in paying interest. If you feel the banks are holding more non-interest bearing reserves than we would like them to hold, then why not reduce the requirement?"

(Committee Proceedings, Jan. 24, 1979 page 18:17)

The question of the phasing-in of the reduced reserve requirement proposed by Part I of Bill C-15 has been discussed earlier in this report.

Your Committee continues to be of the opinion that interest should be paid by the Bank of Canada on the total amount of the primary cash reserves (exclusive of the amount of cash required for clearing settlement purposes and subject to a reduction for expenses in connection with the handling of such reserves and the investment thereof.)

Your Committee's reasons for this opinion include the following:

(a) The payment of interest on primary cash reserves would not be detrimental to monetary policy.

(b) The payment of interest on primary cash reserves would attract more near-banks into the sphere of the banking system and tend to counteract the building of a two-tier banking system.

(c) The payment of interest on the primary cash reserve would tend to nullify the advantage which foreign banks presently have over Canadian banks because the former are not required to put up non-interest bearing reserves for their Canadian operations which are required of Canadian banks under the Bank Act.

(d) In your Committee's study of recent developments in the banking systems in other countries, your Committee notes that a special advisory Committee of bankers formed by the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, to study the "Problem of Membership" recommended that the direct payment of interest on reserve balances appeared to hold the best potential for eliminating the reserve burden which has been causing a decrease in membership by banks in the Federal Reserve System and "the erosion of the percentage of deposits in the banking system subject to the reserve requirements set by the central bank and therefore in the portion of money supply under the direct control of the monetary authority." Your Committee is of the opinion that the conclusion expressed above is relevant to the subject of payment interest on the primary cash reserve of Canadian chartered banks. Furthermore, it would promote the objective stated in the White Paper of encouraging foreign banks to form a foreign bank subsidiary under the new Bank Act.

In the course of its studies and hearings, your Committee received no information which would tend to change its opinion and the principle of paying interest on the cash reserves appears to remain sound.

Both the Inspector General of Banks and the Governor of the Bank of Canada, when appearing before your Committee, indicated that the practicality of the cash flow fiscal requirements of the federal government had to take precedence over the principle of paying interest on the cash reserves and that the proposed reduction in the reserve requirement is the preferable alternative to paying interest on the primary cash reserves.

Your Committee has concluded that the fiscal imperatives of the government make the implementation of this principle inadvisable during this decennial review of the Bank Act. Therefore, your Committee has no recommendation to make in this matter at this time.

DIVISION I

PART I—THE BANK ACT

3. ENTRY INTO BANKING

(i) Method of Incorporation of New Banks and Form of Review

Under the present legislation new banks are incorporated by Act of Parliament. The White Paper outlined the Government's intention to enact legislation to permit incorporation of new banks by Letters Patent. The White Paper philosophy is carried forward into the Bill in Subs. 7(2) which contemplates the incorporation of new banks by Letters Patent, the same to be issued at the sole discretion of the Minister with approval of the Governor in Council. For domestic applicants no suitability criteria are set out in the Bill, although the situation is significantly different for foreign applicants.

In its report on the White Paper your Committee approved the concept of incorporation by Letters Patent but recommended that there be established an appropriate committee or other tribunal charged with the responsibility of conducting a public review of applications for incorporation of banks so that interested parties would have an opportunity to appear and make representations. This recommendation was based on your Committee's feeling that it was not in the public interest that the present public review associated with incorporation by Act of Parliament be discarded and that some form of modified substitute therefor be developed. This aspect of your recommendation has not been accepted by the Government, and the only review contemplated is that of the Governor in Council.

The subject of public review was dealt with in evidence before your Committee. The Canadian Bankers' Association in its brief in response to the present Bill subscribed to the view that there ought to be a public form of review but questioned whether the Inspector General would have the time to perform this function or whether the function was consistent with his office. Witnesses representing the Canadian Bankers' Association touched on the subject during your Committee's hearings. The first point made was that there should be some discretion as to whether a public hearing is necessary in every case of an application for incorporation of a new bank. Further there was concern expressed as to whether or not a mandatory public review would be seen by foreign entrants as an impediment to incorporation, rising to the level of lack of reciprocity as between its domestic legislation and Canadian legislation. Alternatives to a full public review were said to include a full and meaningful publication of the Ministerial recommendation, together with full disclosure of the reasoning underlying the recommendation so that the public can be fully informed as to the rationale for a particular course of action.

Your Committee has considered all of these representations and remains of the view that a vehicle for public review continues to be necessary and desirable in all cases. Your Committee is further of the view that should an application for Letters Patent be refused or should the applicant prefer, the applicant should have the option of proceeding for incorporation by Act of Parliament and thereby subject itself to the public review procedures inherent therein. Your Committee's recommendation therefore is that a public review should be conducted where the application is for Letters Patent of incorporation, the same to be by an appropriate tribunal or official such as the Inspector General of Banks or by Parliamentary Committee where the method of incorporation is by Act of Parliament. In the former case the public review ought to take place prior to approval of the application for Letters Patent of incorporation by the Governor in Council.

RECOMMENDATION

YOUR COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS THAT THE PROVISIONS OF THE BILL CONTEMPLATING INCORPORATION OF BANKS BY LETTERS PATENT BE ACCEPTED SUBJECT TO PROVIDING THAT THE APPLICANT MAY ELECT TO PROCEED BY ACT OF PARLIAMENT EVEN IF AN APPLICATION FOR LETTERS PATENT HAS BEEN REFUSED, AND SUBJECT TO THE REQUIREMENT THAT THERE BE ESTABLISHED SOME APPROPRIATE COMMITTEE OR OTHER TRIBUNAL, OR THE INSPECTOR GENERAL OF BANKS, CHARGED WITH THE RESPONSIBILITY OF CONDUCTING A PUBLIC REVIEW OF APPLICATIONS FOR INCORPORATION OF BANKS BY LETTERS PATENT SO THAT INTERESTED PARTIES WILL HAVE AN OPPORTUNITY TO APPEAR AND MAKE REPRESENTATIONS IN ALL CASES SUCH PUBLIC REVIEW SHOULD TAKE PLACE PRIOR TO THE APPROVAL OF THE GOVERNOR IN COUNCIL AS CONTEMPLATED BY CLAUSE 7(2) OF THE BILL.

(ii) Ownership of Bank Shares by Provincial Governments

Under the present legislation Governments are prohibited from owning capital stock in Chartered Banks. The White Paper proposed that this prohibition be removed and that Provincial Governments be allowed to hold and vote capital stock of chartered banks up to 25% of the shares of a new bank with such shareholdings being reduced to 10% within ten years.

In its report on the White Paper your Committee expressed its opposition to this proposal. Based on representations made to it at the time of its review of the White Paper it concluded that it is neither necessary nor advisable specifically for Provincial Governments to acquire voting stock in return for financial assistance and further that the credit policy of the Bank might be influenced or weakened by the presence of Government.

The Government has not accepted the recommendation of your Committee in this connection. Section 114 of the Bill contemplates that in respect of a bank incorporated on or after the 1st of January 1968, it may issue shares or register transfers of shares to a Provincial Government or Agent thereof but only subject to the prior approval of the Governor in Council and only to the extent of 25% of the total number of shares of a particular class. The Bill further provides that the privilege of issuing such shares to Governments shall continue for only five years after the coming into force of the Act or incorporation of the Bank whichever period is longer. The Bill contemplates, as did the White Paper, a gradual reduction in such 25% shareholding to 10% over a period of ten years.

A number of witnesses appearing before your Committee commented on this provision and its desirability from the standpoint of the public interest. It was quite obvious that the criticisms advanced against the provisions of the Bill were essentially the same as those advanced earlier, namely that it is not in the public interest that Governments become involved in promotion or ownership of Banks. Since your Committee's report on the White Paper the Fraser Institute has issued a study booklet entitled "Provincial Government Banks" which comments on this whole subject. In particular, and dealing with the federal position as outlined in the White Paper, the following observations appear at page 106:

"An unattractive feature of the federal proposal from the general public point of view is that quasi-Government Banks are likely to encounter greater difficulties with conflict of interest and associated uncertainties on what the guiding principals of its policy should be—profit maximization or the government's social and economic policies. If under the new proposal provincial governments initially subscribe to the maximum of 25% of a new bank's shares, effective control of the organization will likely be in the Government's hands. Other shareholders as individuals or "acting in concert are limited to owning the maximum of 10% of bank shares... In the partial ownership case, the status of the bank becomes uncertain. The rate of return offered to shareholders would presumably have to be competitive with that available on private bank shares, but the threat exists that the rate of return would be lower and the risk higher if the Government uses its voting power to influence bank policies in the directions deemed politically desirable by the Government. The problem of conflicts of interest is likely to become much more severe in cases where a Provincial Government does not have clear control of the Bank. Where does the responsibility of management lie—with the private or Government shareholders? Uncertainty over partial Government ownership could act to subvert the intent of the federal proposal since potential private investors are likely to be apprehensive over the possible deleterious effect of Government influence on the new bank's performance."

Representatives of the Northland Bank appeared before your Committee and gave qualified support to the provisions in the Bill. Northland's position, as a relatively new bank, is that Government participation is a valuable instrument in establishing credibility in foreign markets. Further, the Northland Bank has a vested interest in the preservation of these clauses in the Bill because 10% of the shares of that Bank are presently being held in trust for the Governments of the Province of Manitoba and Saskatchewan pending passage of the new Bank Act.

Considering all of these representations your Committee remains of the view that it is not in the public interest that Governments become involved in the ownership of banks in a private banking system. Nothing has been said that would persuade your Committee that its recommendation made in response to the White Paper was misconceived and in fact what has been said reinforces your Committee with respect to its earlier views.

RECOMMENDATION

THAT THE PROVISIONS OF THE BILL PERMITTING OWNERSHIP OF BANK SHARES BY PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENTS BE AMENDED TO PROHIBIT OWNERSHIP OF SUCH SHARES BY PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENTS.

(iii) Limit on the Holding of Bank Shares by Cooperative Corporations

The present Bank Act prohibits any one individual or corporation from owning more than 10% of the voting stock of a bank. A similar provision exists in the Quebec Savings Banks Act. The White Paper proposed that for the purposes of the 10 per cent limit, centrals, federations, or regional unions be deemed to be associated with their member credit unions or caisses populaires and their combined holdings of shares in any bank were to be limited to no more than 25%.

Bill C-15 extends from ten per cent to twenty-five per cent the limit of the aggregate shareholdings in a bank which may be held and voted by "associated" cooperative corporations. However, it has been pointed out that the proposed legislation (Subs. 110(4)) would prevent the registration of a transfer of shares of a bank "if such transaction would cause the total number of shares of that class held by all cooperative corporations to exceed twenty-five per cent of the total number of issued and outstanding shares of that class." This would result in a cooperative corporation, central, regional or local, in Manitoba, for example, being deemed to be associated with a federation, regional or local caisses populaire in the Province of Quebec for the purpose of the proposed twenty-five per cent limit on shareholdings in a bank.

Your Committee received representations concerning this matter from the Fédération de Québec des Caisses Populaires Desjardins and from the Canadian Cooperative Credit Society Limited. Your Committee is inclined to agree with the statements made by these important organizations that it is somewhat illogical to deem to be associated with each other, for the purpose of a limit on shareholdings in a bank, individual, local caisses, regional unions or federations within a province, and then to extend the deemed association aspect even further by treating all cooperative corporations across Canada as being associated with each other.

It is possible that any group of corporations with adequate resources, in order to gain control of a bank, could act in concert to try to acquire in aggregate more than the limit of ten per cent of the shares of a bank that may be held by one party. This could happen with a grouping of companies in the same industry or in different industries. However, your Committee is of the opinion that too much emphasis has been placed in the Act on defining the deemed association aspect as regards cooperative corporations and not enough attention given to the matter of what proportion of the voting shares ought to constitute control of a bank.

Your Committee is not alone in its opinion that the ownership of twenty-five per cent of the voting shares of a public corporation is generally considered to be a controlling interest or to place the owner at least in a position to have a very strong position in forming the policy of the company.

To a less knowledgeable observer one central or federation might appear to be legally or effectively associated with other centrals or federations from an administrative or policy-making viewpoint. However, such appearance of association should not per se be a reason

“to presume them to be ‘associated’ in a grand entity which does not exist.”*

This would also mean under the definition of “cooperative corporation” in Subsection 109(1) a “local cooperative credit society” as defined (“a cooperative credit society the membership of which is wholly or substantially comprised of natural persons”) could not hold and vote a share of a bank if a central or federation of local or regional credit unions which are completely unrelated and unassociated, such as a federation under the jurisdiction of another province, had already reached the twenty-five per cent limit proposed in Bill C-15.

The provisions of Bill C-15 which prevent a director or officer of a local credit union (which might have as a member another local credit union), from being a director of a bank represent a further illustration of rather strained reasoning in the same general area. These provisions would effectively eliminate from eligibility for bank directorship almost every individual who is an officer of a local credit union. This subject is dealt with in greater detail later in this report.

Your Committee is of the opinion that a ten per cent limit on shareholdings of a bank by any central or federation acting independently is a reasonable limit to prevent control of any one such group.

In its report on the White Paper, your Committee observed as follows:

“Your Committee is of the opinion that the strength of the credit unions and caisses populaires acting in concert through their respective centrals or regionals has grown to a point where the acquisition by them of a 10% or more voting interest in a chartered bank or a savings bank could result in a conflict of interest and in loss of independence of the bank or savings bank. In the opinion of your Committee there is a possible risk that the direction in which the bank should be operated could be influenced in the interest of such type of associated group acting in concert. The proposal in the White Paper would permit the control of a bank or savings bank to be accomplished without difficulty.”

Your Committee is inclined to agree with some of the representations made to it by witnesses to the effect that in some areas of Canada a new bank can be assisted financially in its early stages of development by initial equity capital participation, within limits, by cooperatives.

In a brief to this Committee by the Northland Bank it was stated that the majority of the bank is owned by cooperatives including an aggregate twenty-five per cent held by credit union centrals.

Your Committee does not take issue with the method of financing a new bank in its early stages. However it is clear that without adequate restrictions, unrelated or related, associated or deemed associated, centrals, federations and other groups could, by agreement, obtain voting control of banks, whether large or small.

Your Committee is still of the opinion, for the reasons given in its report on the White Paper, that the shareholdings by associated cooperative bodies in a bank should be limited to ten per cent from the point of view of maintaining a proper degree of independence of the bank's management. However, in cases where there is significant benefit to the economy of a particular district your Committee agrees that in the development stage of a bank this limit of ten per cent might be permitted to be increased, subject to adequate controls, to twenty-five per cent. This should, in your committee's opinion, be permitted only for a new bank, and for a limited period of time.

Your Committee is of the opinion that the interests of any associated cooperative corporations in a bank should be limited to ten per cent in aggregate after ten years and by all cooperative corporations whether associated or not, should be limited to twenty-five per cent of the bank's voting shares after ten years.

RECOMMENDATIONS:

(1) THE LEGISLATION SHOULD BE AMENDED TO PROVIDE THAT FOR THE PURPOSE OF THE LIMIT ON THE HOLDING OF THE SHARES OF A BANK, LOCAL COOPERATIVE CREDIT SOCIETIES OR LOCAL CREDIT UNIONS WHICH ARE LINKED TO OR ARE MEMBERS OF, DIRECTLY OR INDIRECTLY, REGIONAL, CENTRALS OR FEDERATIONS UNDER THE SAME PROVINCIAL JURISDICTION SHOULD BE DEEMED TO BE ASSOCIATED.

(2) THE PROPORTION OF THE VOTING SHARES OF A BANK WHICH MAY BE HELD AND VOTED BY ANY GROUP OF COOPERATIVE CORPORATIONS

*Brief submitted by the Fédération de Québec des Caisses Populaires Desjardins, September 1978.

WHICH ARE SO DEEMED TO BE ASSOCIATED SHOULD BE LIMITED IN AGGREGATE TO TEN PER CENT; HOWEVER, IN THE CASE OF NEW BANKS THIS LIMIT SHOULD BE EXTENDABLE FOR A PERIOD NOT EXCEEDING TEN YEARS TO A LIMIT OF TWENTY-FIVE PER CENT.

4. BUSINESS POWERS OF BANKS

(i) Financial Leasing of Equipment

The present Bank Act does not permit banks specifically to engage in financial leasing, although banks in Canada have conducted leasing operations through partly owned subsidiary companies. Financial leasing has also been carried on in Canada through affiliates and subsidiaries of foreign banks.

Your Committee in its report on the White Paper agreed with the proposals to permit banks to engage in financial leasing. However, the White Paper proposed that such leasing operations would have to be carried on as a division, department or part of the bank's banking operations, and that a separate subsidiary company could not be used by banks to carry on financial leasing operations.

Your Committee's recommendations on the White Paper proposals were as follows:

"1. Your Committee recommends the approval of the White Paper proposal to permit banks specifically to engage in financial leasing of equipment on a non-operating full payout basis.

2. Your Committee recommends that, in financial leases negotiated by banks, the dependence on a residual value of the equipment should be limited to 10% of the acquisition cost and not 20% as proposed in the White Paper.

3. Your Committee recommends that banks which engage in approved financial leasing operations be permitted to conduct same through separate wholly-owned subsidiary companies."

The proposed legislation, including the proposed draft regulations, follows the general scheme proposed in the White Paper.

Subs. 172(1)(i) states:

"A bank may engage in and carry on such business generally as appertains to the business of banking and, without limiting the generality of the foregoing may . . . subject to regulations made pursuant to subsection 307(1) for the purposes of this paragraph, engage in financial leasing and in the course thereof acquire, at the request of a specific lessee for leasing by him, hold and lease moveable and personal property whether or not such property becomes affixed to immovable or real property."

The main thrust of the draft Financial Leasing Regulations which circumscribe the type of financial lease into which a bank may enter might be summarized as follows:

- a) The substantial purpose of leasing is to extend credit to the lessee; i.e. the financial equivalent of credit;
- b) the property must be selected by the lessee;

c) the financial lease shall be on a non-operating basis; i.e. the bank will not be responsible for repairs and maintenance of the property;

d) the estimated residual value of property subject to a financial lease by a bank shall not be greater than 20 per cent of the cost of acquisition by the bank, and the aggregate of estimated residual values of properties shall not exceed 10 per cent of the acquisition cost of those properties;

e) the lease shall provide that the bank is compensated for not less than the full investment of the bank in the leased property (cost less estimated residual value).

Your Committee received a number of briefs and heard witnesses with respect to the proposed financial leasing powers of banks.

The main points about which questions were raised were as follows:

a) Should banks be permitted to engage in the financial leasing of passenger automobiles and on-road truck vehicles—on an individual unit basis?

—on a fleet basis?

b) Should banks be permitted or required to operate their financial leasing operations through partly owned or wholly-owned subsidiary companies?

In order to assess the importance of the growth of leasing in Canada and the extent to which financial leasing has become an accepted part of banking operations in other countries, the following extract from an article entitled "Equipment Leasing in Canada" prepared by the Equipment Lessors Association of Canada might be useful:

"The leasing of capital equipment became a major economic factor shortly after the end of World War II in the United States of America. Its early use was in connection with computers, office machines and automotive equipment including communications, copying and mailing machinery. Despite the obvious advantages in the leasing of such equipment, the expansion of leasing to cover assets such as aircraft and railway rolling stock, construction and materials handling equipment, hotels, restaurants and retail stores, medical and health services, pulp and paper machinery, etc. was relatively slower. The bulk of businessmen at that time believed that, as a general rule, assets used in business should be owned by the business.

"However, competition through improved productivity forced industries to replace existing assets with more modern equipment at a faster and faster rate. The big obstacle of increasing replacement of assets was of course the cost of replacement. Thus the attraction of spreading payments over a predictable period and paying for those costs out of operating income became increasingly attractive. Budgeting became more meticulous and financial techniques more sophisticated. With periodic credit squeezes, firms often had to look at alternative forms of financing their capital purchases.

"One reason for the growth of leasing was the recognition of the effects of the capital cost allowance system on both the lessor and the lessee. Capital cost allowances on the purchase of new equipment made it worthwhile for a company earning substantial profits to enter the business of leasing or to form a leasing division. Capital cost allowances generated could be set off against the tax due on other income, making it possible to offer attractive terms to lessees.

"In the early 1960's a number of sales finance companies and holding companies began leasing operations. Chartered banks took advantage of the openings provided by making substantial investments in joint ventures with other chartered banks or with merchant banks of other countries. Furthermore, established independent lessors from the U.S. and Britain also expanded operations by setting up subsidiaries in Canada. At one time, too, a number of trust companies and investment houses were involved in leverage leasing. Currently there are four basic forms of lessors: the independent lessor, sales finance companies, Canadian bank affiliates and branch operations of foreign banks.

"With leasing a relative newcomer in Canada, there have been few statistics to measure the extent and growth of leasing. Only recently have the industry and government had an accurate measure of the scope and parameters of the industry. A survey conducted by the industry covering the five-year period to the end of 1972 revealed an astonishing 56 per cent compound growth rate, highlighting the ten year period between 1962 and 1972. A recently completed survey conducted by the federal government disclosed that at the end of 1973 $1,043 million of lease receivables were held by reporting lessors, an increase of 49.9 per cent from the 1972 level of $696 million. This would indicate that investment by lessors in new capital assets in 1973 represented approximately 2 per cent of the total investment of all Canadian business in new capital equipment during that year. Furthermore, since corresponding U.S. figures indicate that approximately 7 per cent of all American capital assets were purchased by lessors in the same year indications are excellent that the Canadian leasing market will continue to experience strong growth in the future. Current estimates of the market size in Canada indicate that lease receivables grew to $1.4 billion in 1974 and should grow to $2.3 billion by 1979. The surveying question was specifically designed to eliminate information relating to equipment rentals, real estate leases and automobile leases not considered relevant to equipment leasing. Consequently, results exclude information of well-known leasing companies such as IBM, Xerox, Hertz, etc."

The following schedule indicates the important position held by U.K. banks in the leasing field.

U.K. LEASING MARKET PERFORMANCE 1977*

Top Ten Companies

Market Performance Statistics

COMPANY	Gross Lease Portfolio at original cost $M	Net Book Value of Leased Assets $M	New Business $M
Barclays Bank	637	337	77
National Westminster Bank	564	327	210
Midland Bank	489	305	178
Finance for Industry	307	130	70
Lloyds Bank	300	222	99
Lloyds & Scottish Group	224	103	35
Bank of Scotland	211	129	65
National & Commercial Group	209	150	81
Bowring Group	188	83	44
Standard & Chartered Banks	146	106	49
Top Ten Total			908
Equipment Leasing Assoc. Total			1,178

*Source: Midland Montagu Leasing Limited—September 1978

The experience of banks entering the leasing field in the United States are summarized by the following extracts from a presentation by S.L. Eichenfield, Sr. Vice-President, Notes Receivable/Leasing Division of Walter G. Heller & Co.*

"National banks in the United States aggressively entered the leasing business as a result of a 1966 ruling by the Comptroller of the Currency:

"In general, the regulations provide that national banks can engage in leasing so long as the leasing activity is incidental to the traditional financial services provided by banks. Banks can engage in full payout leasing only; can look, minimally, to the residual; and cannot provide any services not normally found in banking practice. In other words, banks cannot provide insurance, maintenance, etc., but can merely enter into transactions tantamount to loans in which they will recoup their investment plus profit over the original term of the lease. U.S. banks are prohibited from engaging in non-payment leasing activities or in full service automobile leasing activities."

Your Committee as a result of its studies has concluded that the granting of specific powers to Canadian banks to engage in financial leasing would permit them to provide competitive services in a field of finance which has become generally accepted in other countries, including United States and U.K. as a normal function of banking. This particularly applies to "large-ticket" equipment leasing.

* The Role and Future of Independent Lessors in the U.S.A." paper presented to the Equipment Lessors Association of Canada, September 22, 1978.

The main problem to be resolved would appear to be to what extent, if any, banks should be permitted to engage in the leasing of passenger automobiles and on-road truck vehicles.

The Canadian Bankers' Association when appearing before your Committee, indicated that with a 20 per cent residual value limitation there would be no way that banks could practically engage in individual unit "one-to-one" automobile leasing. The banks, however, do believe that they can provide competitive services in the fleet leasing field and still permit the automobile dealers and independents in the automobile leasing field to remain competitively strong in their own important field which is composed of some 2800 new vehicle dealers who sell approximately 80% of the new motor vehicles sold annually in Canada and who employ in excess of 100,000 people.*

Your Committee is particularly impressed with the important contribution which the automobile dealers in the leasing field and independent lessors make to the economy of Canada, not only in providing the much needed services normally attributed to their operations and to their contribution to employment, but also perhaps just as important the services they perform in proper maintenance and repair of vehicles to permit them to remain in service for a longer period than otherwise would be the case.

Your Committee found the following submission by FADA* to be valuable:

"Our distribution and servicing system has allowed Canadians to travel (and transport people and goods) on the basis of a comparably low cost relationship to other items in our economy—and absolutely on a historical basis if one takes into account inflation and the purchasing power of our citizens. A key part of this system that has developed is the vehicle dealer—not only is the vehicle dealer the primary source of distribution of vehicles either through selling or leasing—he is primarily responsible for the servicing of those vehicles even after the manufacturer's warranty period is over. This servicing facility is extremely vital when it is appreciated that there has been a significant trend toward self-service gasoline stations which have tended to eliminate the service facilities to the automobile driving public (both on a per gasoline stop basis and on a regular periodic maintenance and tune-up basis). All this is happening at a time when there is another trend towards automobile owners keeping their vehicles for longer and longer periods of time, thereby emphasizing the necessity for regular periodic servicing in the latter functional years of an automobile. As well, the automobile dealer provides an outlet to owners of vehicles to trade in their vehicles, and the existence of this market is of benefit not only to those wishing to dispose of such vehicles but also to those wishing to acquire such vehicles.

* Submission of the Federation of the Automobile Dealers Association of Canada, November 21, 1978

"As indicated earlier, as vehicles become more and more costly because of improvements in safety features, gasoline economy and performance, we expect that an increasing number of such vehicles (both absolutely and as a percentage of the market) will be leased. A vehicle dealership must balance its viability on a reasonable level of profit over an extended period of time. These profits come from two general areas: the distribution of the vehicle (either by way of sale or leasing) and, secondly, from the servicing of those vehicles. If the distribution side of the vehicle dealership business is decreased by the banks invading this field in leasing, then the dealership business as a whole will suffer and its ability to provide the high level of service required to the vehicle owning public will be significantly affected. The banks will not provide the service required. To attract capital into the service side of the business (and this is an on going matter), the higher and higher rates will have to be charged to the great detriment of the public. We are therefore fearful that certain elements of that public, because of economic constraints, will not obtain proper servicing for their vehicles, thereby creating a safety hazard for all members of the public, as well as decreasing the efficiency of vehicles on the road, thereby increasing petroleum consumption.

"The members of our Federation and industry play an important role in our economy, both with respect to providing services and products for the general public and with respect to being significant employers of Canadian labour."

Having considered the various aspects of the problem as presented to it, your Committee believes that the proposed legislation and regulations should be tightened to make it clear that banks should not be permitted to engage in the business of one-to-one leasing of individual unit passenger automobiles and on-road truck vehicles, but that banks should be permitted to offer and engage in fleet leasing of autos and trucks provided that if there is a residual value, of not more than 20% built into a fleet lease, then such residual value must be supported by a third party purchase agreement or guarantee at the time that the lease is completed. This would in the opinion of your Committee, permit meaningful competition from the banks, to provide an effective equivalent of credit, and also prevent the banking community from engaging in the marketing of fleets of automobiles at the end lease periods in order to recover the residual value.

Representations have also been made to your Committee that banks should be permitted to engage in financial leasing through partly-owned or wholly-owned subsidiary companies. Indeed, it was submitted that there is more danger of conflict of interest when a bank is carrying on a business through a bank department than from investment in Canadian corporations on a controlled basis and that the use of subsidiaries would present a more accurate breakdown of bank operations.

It is also apparent from your Committee's studies that the following arguments tend to favour the conduct of financial leasing by banks through separate subsidiary companies:

- (a) better ability to attract proper trained personnel;
- (b) the provision of separate and clear reporting of the leasing operations;
- (c) since competitors in the leasing field are required to maintain separate corporations subject to provincial jurisdiction and to match debt against income, requirements for debt/equity ratio etc., competitors are put at a disadvantage compared with banks;
- (d) a conflict would arise if a bank had the power to prevent its client (a leasing company) from writing certain types of leases and when the same restrictions did not apply to the leasing department of the bank.

RECOMMENDATIONS:

YOUR COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS:

(1) THAT SUBSECTION 172(1)(i) OF BILL C-15 AND THE FINANCIAL LEASING REGULATIONS BE AMENDED IN SUCH A MANNER AS TO PROHIBIT BANKS FROM ENTERING THE BUSINESS OF LEASING OF PASSENGER AUTOMOBILES AND ON-ROAD TRUCK VEHICLES, EXCEPT FOR FLEET OR WHOLESALE LEASING WHERE THE AGGREGATE COST OF THE FLEET OF VEHICLES BEING LEASED IN ANY PARTICULAR LEASE IS $100,000 OR MORE, SUBJECT TO INDEXING OF THIS AMOUNT FOR FUTURE CHANGES IN THE VALUE OF MONEY.

(2) THAT SUBSECTION 192(5) BE AMENDED TO PERMIT A BANK TO CONDUCT ITS FINANCIAL LEASING OPERATIONS THROUGH A WHOLLY OWNED SUBSIDIARY.

(3) THAT THE FINANCIAL LEASING REGULATIONS BE AMENDED IN THE FOLLOWING RESPECTS:

a) THAT THE REGULATIONS BE AMENDED TO PERMIT A BANK TO LEASE EQUIPMENT WHICH COMES INTO THE POSSESSION OF THE BANK THROUGH DEFAULT IN A LOAN TRANSACTION OR EQUIPMENT WHICH HAD BEEN ACQUIRED ORIGINALLY FOR THE BANK'S OWN USE AND SUBSEQUENTLY BECAME SURPLUS.

b) THAT THE REGULATIONS BE AMENDED TO PROVIDE FOR BASING A PART OF THE RETURN OF A BANK ON AN UNCONDITIONAL GUARANTEE FROM A THIRD PARTY OF TERMINAL PURCHASE IN ORDER TO INSURE RECAPTURE OF RESIDUAL VALUE.

c) THAT THE REGULATIONS BE AMENDED TO EXTEND THE TWO-YEAR LIMITATION OF DISPOSAL OF REPOSSESSED EQUIPMENT; ALSO BANKS SHOULD BE PERMITTED TO RE-LEASE

PROPERTY COVERED BY AN EXPIRED EQUIPMENT LEASE EITHER TO THE ORIGINAL LESSEE OR TO ANY OTHER PARTY.

(ii) Factoring

The new legislation would permit banks specifically to engage in factoring operations. This is in line with the White Paper proposal which your Committee recommended for approval.

As was the case during its study of the White Paper, your Committee received representations that banks should be allowed to conduct their factoring operations through a separate subsidiary company.

Some of the reasons given for the preference for factoring through a separate subsidiary included the following:

- (a) the nature of the operations and the volume of paper work do not lend themselves to being carried on by regular banking staff working in the same bank premises;
- (b) adequate trained personnel in this field can be attracted, retained and remunerated more suitably in a separate subsidiary company;
- (c) the special risk factors involved in factoring can be overseen and controlled most effectively in a separate organization;
- (d) the potential for conflicts of interests is minimized in a separate entity.

The brief submitted by the Hamilton Group Limited also covers some aspects of the conduct of factoring operations which bear on this point.*

"To ensure that the activities of banks are subject to the provisions of the Bank Act and to avoid conflicts of interest—the intended dual aims of conducting leasing and similar activities through the bank rather than through subsidiaries—we recommend that the Bank Act should strictly limit the business of each restricted bank's subsidiary as if the subsidiary were part of the bank. In recommending that leasing and factoring be carried on through restricted subsidiaries, we do not propose to restrict the ability of a bank to lease and factor through its branch system nor do we propose that the new legislation continue the present capitalization limits on bank subsidiaries, provided that controls were placed on their operation."

It has also been submitted to your Committee that banks should be permitted to own up to a 100% interest in a Canadian subsidiary carrying out factoring operations; this would permit joint investment in a factoring subsidiary together with other companies and individuals who have developed the particular expertise know-how and reputation in the field.

As noted in your Committee's report on the White Paper:

"Some banks have engaged in factoring through partly-owned affiliated factoring companies, although factoring

* Brief submitted by the Hamilton Group Limited re Bill C-57, The Banks and Banking Law Revision Act, 1978—December 15, 1978 has not been permitted specifically to banks under the Bank Act.

"Foreign banks have been operating in factoring in Canada through non-banking subsidiaries and affiliates.

"In the opinion of your Committee it seems appropriate to permit Canadian banks to engage in factoring, either directly or through a subsidiary, because it is now considered in most countries to be a normal banking service. Your Committee received no objections to this proposal."

It is obvious that there is a complete absence of resistance from the public and competing financial institutions to the extension of the banks business powers into the factoring field. There would appear to be no doubt that factoring is indeed a mode of credit granting which is entirely compatible with traditional banking operations. The only issue which sparked any debate before your Committee related to the manner in which such operations should be carried out by the banking community.

RECOMMENDATION:

YOUR COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS THAT BILL C-15 BE AMENDED SO AS TO PERMIT A BANK TO CONDUCT ITS FACTORING OPERATIONS THROUGH A WHOLLY OWNED SUBSIDIARY COMPANY.

(iii) Data Processing

Clause 172(1)(k) would authorize a bank, under its business powers and as part of the "business of banking" to provide banking related data processing services to the extent that regulations pursuant to the Act permit. This clause of the Bill is intended to replace and expand Section 75 of the present Act which does not refer specifically to the provision of banking related data processing services amongst the listed business powers of banks. The scope of entitlement under the present legislation of the rights of a bank to provide data processing services to its customers has recently been reviewed in the Queens Bench Division of the Supreme Court of Manitoba in the case of CENTRAL COMPUTER SERVICES LTD. et al vs. TORONTO-DOMINION BANK (Judgment December 15, 1978 unreported). In this case the Court held, that where, under Section 75, a particular service is not listed as a specific business power of a bank, the onus is on the bank to establish that the service it is providing constitutes a business generally as "appertains to the business of banking." Two of the services offered by the Bank were a computer payroll service wherein the bank determines appropriate deductions, makes calculations, pays the deductions to those entitled and sends a cheque to each employee or deposits the net amount to the employee's account. The Court held that these two computerized services offered by the Bank, of a multitude of other such services, did not constitute, in the circumstances therein set out, "the business of banking". It was stated that such a computerized service is legitimately part of the business of banking unless it is a service being offered to non-customers, in which circumstances the banks would be engaged in a business unrelated to its business of banking.

The second type of service which was objected to by the Plaintiffs was a fully integrated computer assisted accounting service which calculated and recorded accounts receivable, sales and product analysis, accounts payable, job costing, general ledger, and preparation of profit and loss statements and balance sheets. The Court observed with respect to this service as follows:

"The Bank attempted to justify the Compuaccount services as ones necessary to customers, particularly those borrowing from the bank. It was argued that it is important for the bank to know the financial health of a borrowing customer. I conclude that the service is one that the bank certainly enjoys for its own purposes as a lender, but the bank's only other reason for offering this service is to sell the service as part of a profit making venture. I heard no evidence from the witnesses called by the bank that the "doing of books" for customers was a traditional banking service, or that they understood such an activity to be a "business of banking". The evidence was more to the effect that such activity was beneficial and should be a service available at a bank. With respect to Compuaccount I have no difficulty in concluding that the bank is offering accounting services. This service does not, in my opinion, pertain to the business of banking referred to in Section 75(1) but is the engaging in a trade or business in contravention of Section 75(2)(b)."

The entry of the banking community into the data processing service industry was outlined at length in the White Paper. Your Committee at that time heard evidence from interested parties on the subject, principally members of the banking community who objected to the White Paper proposal to restrict banks to providing data processing services directly related to the making of payments, that is, banking related data processing services. The principal objection of the data processing service industry was characterized as relating to tied selling. It was the view of the banking community that this concern ought to be more properly left to the Combines Investigation Act rather than incorporating it in the form of a restriction in the banking legislation. Your Committee accepted that view and its recommendation was that the restriction in the White Paper concerning the limitation of banks to providing data processing services directly related to the making of payments not be approved by reason of the fact that sufficient protection to the public is available through the vehicle of the Combines Investigation Act.

During its study of the present Bill your Committee considered representations again from the banking community and somewhat more detailed and exhaustive representations from the data processing service industry particularly from the Canadian Association of Data Processing Service Organizations (CADAPSO). That body provided the Committee with a brief not only directed to the provisions of the Bill, but also directed to its concerns with respect to the language of the draft Regulations developed pursuant to the provisions of Subs. 172(1)(k) of the Bill.

The position of the bankers in response to the Bill is direct and placed on a broad framework. The banking community is of the view that it would be an excessive degree of regulation to deprive banks of the right to provide any data processing services "reasonably related to the financial needs of their customers." The data processing industry on the other hand takes a contrary view saying that the provisions of Clause 172(1)(k) are even less satisfactory than what was contemplated by the White Paper in terms of the limitations that they impose upon banks, and that in any event the Regulations are permissive in terms of particular types of data processing services which they regard as representing offensive and significant in-roads by the banks into the provision of data processing services unrelated to traditional banking services.

In the first place dealing with the provisions of the Bill, CADAPSO asserts that the banks should be limited in their entitlement to provide data processing services for a variety of reasons. They urge that the presence of the banks outside the conventional banking function in this field will produce cross-subsidization leading to predatory pricing or loss leader activities. They further argue that such conduct will lead to tied sales as was urged during your Committee's consideration of the White Paper. They further argue that the expansion of the activities of the banks into this area is likely to lead to conflicts of interest, which would not be in the public interest, arising out of the data process service industry's requirement to do its financing through chartered banks which would be in direct competition with them in respect of the provision of data processing services. The same sort of conflict of interest is seen by CADAPSO arising out of the relationship between the banks provision to a customer of conventional banking related services and data processing services which would give the bank an insider position from the standpoint of business activities of its customers.

Finally the data processing service industry takes the position that it is not in the best interests of the customer of a bank to have its choice of banker influenced by its dependence on any one bank's data processing facilities.

As earlier indicated the industry asserts that the provisions of the Bill differ in subtle but important ways from the proposals outlined in the White Paper. In its brief CADAPSO indicated as follows:

"In CADAPSO's view, consistent with the White Paper, it is necessary to restrict the power of the banks in relation to data processing services to the precise offerings to be permitted. It has always been difficult to ascertain the limits of the power conferred on the bank by paragraph 75(1)(e) of the present Bank Act . . . that uncertainty would be continued under Bill C-57 if the banks were permitted to offer the types of data processing services which may be specified in the Regulations and were also permitted to enjoy, in relation to such services and other data processing services, the potentially wide scope of the general power. Accordingly CADAPSO submits that the powers of banks to offer data processing services be stated to be a limitation and not an expansion of the general power."

It is the view of your Committee that the real nub of the data processing industry's concern arises out of the uncertainty as to the precise regulations that will be passed from time to time which might well have the effect of expanding the powers of the banks to engage in the provision of data processing services in circumstances in which the private data processing service industry would have no opportunity to object. It is by reason of the peculiar nature of regulations that CADAPSO is led to the suggestion that the specific limitations in terms of permissible defined services should be included in the language of the Statute itself. In the opinion of your Committee this is not practicable. So long as there is a decennial review of the Bank Act, and further so long as the data processing service industry and banking services continue to expand at the rapid rate which they have heretofore, it would be unduly restrictive and unworkable to have precise species of data processing services enshrined in the Statute for a period of ten years.

The alternative is one that your Committee has urged from time to time, namely that regulations should not be approved by Order-in-Council until interested members of the public have an opportunity to comment thereupon. The precise method of accomplishing this will be for the Government to select but your Committee is of the view that consideration should be given to the procedure set out in Bill S-7* which requires the tabling of Orders-in-Council within a prescribed number of days and which has the effect of restoring to Parliament the ultimate authority for effecting substantive change in legislation whether through the vehicle of regulations or the exercise of ministerial discretion.

Subject to this proviso with respect to the method of enacting regulations your Committee has carefully considered all of the evidence, has reviewed its deliberations on the occasion of its consideration of the White Paper and has concluded that there is some justification and cause for concern on the part of the data processing service industry when it is faced with a desire on the part of the banks to provide any data processing services reasonably related to the financial needs of their customers. This definition of types of services the banks ought to be permitted to provide is of course much broader than so-called "banking services" because new computer or data processing services provided by the banks not theretofore provided could not be caught in the ambit of "banking related services" until a pattern of providing such services had been established.

In the circumstances your Committee is of the view that the language of the Bill should be retained notwithstanding the objections of the banking community, and that the provision by the banks of data processing services should be limited to banking related data processing services as defined from time to time in the regulations.

* (An Act to Implement Conventions between Canada and the Republic of Korea etc.)

Turning now to the Regulations, extensive oral submissions were made during your Committee's hearings with respect to the specific language chosen and its propriety in the light of the proposed definition of the power set out in Section 172.

Dealing with some of the objections advanced by the data processing industry, the first is under Regulation 3(1)(d) which would permit a bank to provide data processing services to a client which is an employer involving the preparation of the client's payroll by certain specified steps. CADAPSO objects to the inclusion of Regulation 3(1)(d)(vi) which reads

"the preparation of summary reports of the distribution of labour and salary costs into agreed upon classifications, and also the preparation of comparison reports provided that such comparisons are limited to similar data of the client for previous time periods."

This sort of provision represents the threshold of real criticism on the part of CADAPSO. It implicitly acknowledges that the banking community has been involved in the computerized preparation of client's payrolls up to now, but defines the sort of service contemplated by subparagraph (vi) as not being an ordinary payroll service but rather a cost analysis which has traditionally been provided by the data processing industry. In short the industry asserts that this permissive provision would enable the banks to launch into a consultant's role through data processing which would be outside the present scope of banking related activities.

The second major criticism of the regulation relates to Regulation 4 which provides that in addition to the services that may be provided to clients under Regulation 3, the services outlined in Regulation 4 may be provided to "financial institutions" as defined in the regulations to include the Canadian Payments Association, trust or loan companies, financial corporations and any other institutions that accept from the public deposits which are transferrable by order. Your Committee's interpretation of the industry's position is that the specific services therein referred to would not be objectionable if they were rendered to a member of the Canadian Payments Association but it is felt by the industry that the other categories of institutions to whom the banks, under these Regulations would be permitted to provide such services, is too broad.

Notwithstanding the submissions of CADAPSO your Committee is of the view that so long as the banks are entitled to provide a data processing service which results in an assembly of first generation information it would constitute a serious economic burden on the public to then prohibit the banks from using such first generation information to produce summaries and comparisons thereof required by their customers. Otherwise the customers would be required to secure such summaries or comparisons elsewhere at significant attendant duplication of cost. Accordingly your Committee is of the opinion that the Regulations should include a provision along the lines of Regulation 3(1)(d)(vi).

Insofar as CADAPSO's objection to the provisions of Clause 4 are concerned your Committee is of the view that their concerns are to a degree justified. In your Committee's view the definition of "financial institution" in the regulations should be limited to those institutions which accept from the public deposits transferrable by order. Insofar as the categories of services are concerned as outlined in Regulation 4 they should be limited to services incidental to the payments system. This rationale would eliminate general ledger accounting service as a permissible category of service.

RECOMMENDATIONS:

YOUR COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS:

1. THAT REGULATION 2 OF THE DATA PROCESSING REGULATIONS BE AMENDED TO LIMIT THE DEFINITION OF "FINANCIAL INSTITUTION" TO INSTITUTIONS THAT ACCEPT FROM THE PUBLIC DEPOSITS WHICH ARE TRANSFERRABLE BY ORDER FOR THE PURPOSES OF THE PROVISION BY BANKS OF THE DATA PROCESSING SERVICES OUTLINED IN REGULATION 4.

2. THAT REGULATION 4 OF THE DATA PROCESSING REGULATIONS BE AMENDED TO DELETE FROM THE CATEGORIES OF PERMISSABLE SERVICES THEREIN SET OUT ITEM (e) "GENERAL LEDGER ACCOUNTING SERVICES."

5. LOANS AND SECURITY

(i) Residential Mortgage Lending

Under the present Bank Act banks are authorized to lend money on the security of immovable property, both commercial properties and residential properties; the total principal amount outstanding in a bank's portfolio of residential mortgages including NHA mortgages is limited to ten per cent of the bank's deposit liabilities and debentures.

The White Paper proposed that the 10 per cent limit be removed and this has been given effect to in Bill C-15. In its report on the White Paper, your Committee recommended that the 10 per cent limit not be removed but that the limit be increased from 10 per cent to 15 per cent.

The following review might be helpful in appraising the situation regarding the position of chartered banks in the mortgage field.

The White Paper stated at page 32:

"While some of the larger banks are approaching the 10 per cent ceiling, conventional residential mortgages held by the banks as a group at the end of 1975 amounted to only 5.8% of the total Canadian dollar liabilities and debentures."

"As there continues to be a growing need for residential mortgage funds, particularly for small and medium sized homes, it is desirable that banks not be constrained by arbitrary limits."

Your Committee's observations on this subject in its report on the White Paper included the following:

In the interests of liquidity and of matching mortgages with the proceeds of term deposits or debentures of a comparable maturity, it would appear to your Committee advisable that some limit be placed on the amount of investments in mortgages at any one time in relation to total deposit and debenture liabilities; there should also be a reasonable matching of proceeds from term deposits with mortgages. This might have the effect of resolving to some extent the problem envisaged by the trust and mortgage companies that the removal of the 4% reserve on such non-callable term deposits would divert the normal flow of mortgage funds into commercial lending. This subject was dealt with earlier in this report under "Reserves on Term Deposits" in Sec. III(f).

Some criticism was expressed to your Committee of the fact that the banks as a group were not providing their fair share of the funds for residential mortgages, and although permitted to expand their mortgage portfolios up to 10% of their deposit liabilities and debentures, no one bank in particular had yet reached the 10% limit. It has been suggested that some provision should stipulate that banks should be required to allocate a minimum of 10% of their deposits and debentures to the residential mortgage market. This procedure perhaps would indicate a positive social role for the banks.

Your Committee is of the opinion that from a liquidity point of view there should be some limit on the percentage of a bank's deposit liabilities which might be invested in residential mortgages, and suggests that, rather than taking off the 10% limit completely, an increase to 15% would be reasonable until the next decennial review of the Bank Act.

The rationale for the adoption of the 10% ceiling in 1967 was apparently to restrict the impact of new competition which would be provided by banks entering the mortgage market. Indications are, however, that the trust and mortgage loan companies, caisses populaires and the credit unions more than held their own in competition with the banks. While chartered banks' share of the mortgage market rose from 3.7 to 11.3 per cent from 1967 to the end of 1974, the combined share of the trust and loan companies and of the credit unions also rose—from 24.6 per cent in 1967 to 35.6 per cent by the end of 1974. (Source: Economic Council—Efficiency and Regulation, 1976—page 83).

While the chartered banks as a group have increased their mortgage holdings to 5.8% of their deposits, it appears reasonable to raise the 10% limit because at least three of the banks are approaching their 10% limit and it would not seem equitable under existing conditions to restrict the competition from the banks which have been the most aggressive in providing mortgage funds.

An increase in the limit from 10% to 15% should provide adequate room for growth. Your Committee, however, is of the opinion that some restriction is necessary in order to provide for control over liquidity, and if there is no limit, such as 15%, that there should be a requirement for a reasonable matching of maturities of the proceeds from term deposits with investment in mortgage loans.*

The following extract from the study prepared by the Economic Council in 1976 provided some support to the White Paper proposals:

"Chartered banks are subject to the limitation that their conventional residential mortgage holdings are no more than 10 per cent of the sum of deposit liabilities payable in Canadian currency and outstanding debentures. This portfolio ceiling is an example of a regulation whose rationale has altered over the years. Originally, self-liquidating loans were considered to be the appropriate business for chartered banks. They were expected to lend only when repayment would be forthcoming over a short period of time, so as to maintain a balance between the maturity of bank assets and liabilities. The first movement away from this principle, with respect to mortgages, occurred with the Bank Act revision of 1954 which permitted chartered banks to hold mortgages issued under the National Housing Act. These loans were insured by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. In 1967, the remaining restrictions on residential mortgage lending were eased further. The banks were then permitted to hold up to 4 per cent of their total deposits in conventional mortgages, with the ceiling rising at 1 per cent per year until it reached 10 per cent at the end of 1973. As Chart 7-1 indicates, chartered bank mortgages have been well below the ceiling. At the end of 1974, the banks as a group had used half the capacity permitted them under the constraint. Individual banks have used these mortgage lending powers in different ways and to different degrees. Some have channeled their mortgage lending through subsidiary mortgage loan companies, so that only a fraction of their mortgage holdings show up on their balance sheets. Others are considerably closer to the mortgage ceiling than the banking system as a whole. At the end of 1974, three banks were within two percentage points of their current mortgage ceilings. Thus, while a fairly large unused capacity for mortgage lending exists among banks as a whole, the present ceiling may force certain banks to curtail the rate at which they acquire mortgages and may soon restrict them from further mortgage lending, unless they are prepared to establish a mortgage-holding company.

"The rationale for adopting the present ceiling on mortgage holdings was that it would ease the impact on competitors of bank entry into the mortgage market. But one might ask whether the entry of chartered banks created substantial problems for the institutions tied to the mortgage market, particularly the trust and the mortgage loan companies. The volume of mortgages held by deposit institutions more than doubled over the period from 1967 to the end of 1974. While the chartered banks' share of the mortgage market rose from 3.7 to 11.3 per cent over this period the combined share of the trust and loan companies and of the credit unions also rose from 24.6 per cent in 1967 to 35.6 per cent by the end of 1974. Data on the rates of return earned by major trust and loan companies during this time suggest that, while the average margin between the return earned on assets and the interest paid on borrowing narrowed over the period, the rate of return on the equity of trust and mortgage loan companies increased as the result of increased debt/equity ratios. From this evidence, we do not believe that the entry of chartered banks jeopardized the viability of other institutions in the mortgage market. On the contrary, entry of the banks eased the problem of financing the unprecedented growth in demand for mortgage credit.

* (Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce Relating to the Subject Matter of the White Paper on the Revision of Canadian Banking Legislation, June 1977)

Such rapid growth in demand cannot be forecast for the next ten to fifteen years in the mortgage market, given the unexpected slowdown in population growth, especially among the age groups that buy houses. However, we do not regard this slackening growth of the mortgage market as sufficient grounds for continuing to restrict bank participation in the financing of conventional mortgages.”*

It should be added that the Economic Council’s recommendation in the above study was that the present limitations on holdings of conventional mortgages by banks be removed.

For the reasons given in the excerpt from its report above your Committee recommended that the limit be established at 15 per cent rather than opening it up completely.

Appearing before your Committee on December 12, 1978 the Inspector General of Banks, Mr. W. A. Kennett commented on this aspect of the problem as follows: (Committee Proceedings 16:22)

Mr. Kennett: Mr. Chairman, I guess the basic reason for the policy that was established in the banking legislation was that there did not seem to be a serious threat—there did not seem to be a very great likelihood that the banks, in view of 10 years of history, with the 10 per cent limitation, would move into this area and divert substantial resources into the mortgage lending area. On the other hand, the other consideration was that in certain instances of small banks getting started—that was the other point I was making—they would appreciate having greater flexibility. It may be that the flexibility of 15 per cent is enough.

Mr. Kennett’s comment was followed by this observation by the Honourable Senator John Connolly:

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Could I do it a little more softly, perhaps, by putting it this way. I think our basic recommendation of increasing the quota from 10 per cent to 15 per cent, was based on the fact that by the end of 1975 the banks had only invested 5.8 per cent of their liabilities in conventional mortgages. I guess the ceiling did not inhibit them in developing that branch of their business. I do not know what the rate is at the moment. Perhaps it has advanced. Some of the larger banks have apparently approached the 10 per cent figure. But if the 15 per cent figure, or another appropriate figure, were adopted it might mitigate the problem that perhaps does exist. On the basis of the evidence that we have had here, it does exist for the trust and loan companies.

Your Committee has made some studies of the growth of the amount of outstanding conventional mortgages held by banks compared with the growth of bank’s deposits and debentures. This comparison is shown on Appendix A to this report. It indicates that from December 31, 1973 banks’ conventional residential mortgages have grown from $1,674 million outstanding to $4,590 million at December 31, 1977, a growth of $2,916 million in 4 years or by 174 per cent. However banks’ deposits and debentures grew by 120.77 per cent in the same period, from $49,222 million to $89,978 million.

Appendix A also shows the annual amount of banks’ conventional residential mortgages outstanding compared with the annual limit of 10% and the amount by which the aggregate amount of chartered banks’ conventional residential mortgages outstanding at year end was below the 10 per cent limit. This indicates in fact that the margin of unused mortgage capacity of banks has grown each year for the last six years.

The following extract from this appendix illustrates this trend:

	Amount of residential mortgages outstanding	Deposits and Debentures	10% Limit	Excess Capacity
1973	$1,674	$49,222	$4,922	$3,248
1974	2,707	59,577	5,958	3,251
1975	3,496	67,825	6,782	3,286
1976	3,802	77,942	7,794	3,992
1977	4,590	89,978	8,998	4,408

(Millions)

It would appear to your Committee, therefore, that there is room for growth of the aggregate amount of residential mortgage loans in the banking system. However, your Committee believes that an increased limit of 15 per cent would be reasonable taking into account the new banks which will be entering the system as well as permitting room for some of the smaller banks to work in this area with more scope, but on the other hand keeping a reasonable limit from a liquidity point of view. As has been pointed out earlier in this report, some of the chartered banks have been very close to reaching their individual 10 per cent ceiling and an increase of the limit from 10 per cent to 15 per cent combined with the normal, expected growth of deposits should permit a continued significant contribution by such banks in this area.

Concern was expressed by various witnesses about the large share of the mortgage market which banks have acquired since the 1967 decennial revision of the Bank Act and that further lifting of restrictions would make the competitive position of trust and loan companies very vulnerable; in addition some witnesses were concerned about the liquidity of banks if they were given additional scope in the residential mortgage field and new powers to engage in leasing and factoring.

* (“Efficiency and Regulation” a Study of Deposit Institutions issued by the Economic Council of Canada 1976).

In this connection Mr. Robert M. MacIntosh, Chairman of the Bank Act Revision Committee of the Canadian Bankers' Association appearing before your Committee on November 30, 1978 addressed this question as follows: (Committee Proceedings 9:34)

"The removal of the limitation on our mortgage holdings in the bill we believe to be in the public interest. To summarize in one sentence what we have said before, we believe that we have lowered rates, we have brought mortgage lending out to the hinterland of Canada, which was not done by the existing institutions. It served the public interest, and we therefore believe the removal of the 10 per cent limit is a good thing."

As has been pointed out earlier in this report, the aggregate growth of banks in the residential mortgage field has been very conservative for several years with reference to the two main indices,—namely (1) share of the market, (2) the limit of 10 per cent of deposits and debentures.

Your Committee has studied the analysis of the relative growth of various institutions in the residential mortgage market and has submitted as Appendices hereto various statistics.

In order to provide a reasonable assessment mortgages issued by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation have been shown separately on Appendix E, Schedule I; because of the extreme volatility of the market caused by CMHC from time to time, CMHC mortgages have been eliminated from Schedule II of Appendix E. This schedule shows the comparison of the proportion of the market shared by banks, trust and loan companies and others. In the six-year period from January 1, 1972 to December 31, 1977, there was practically no change whatsoever in the relative shares of the market as shown by the following summary:

	Banks	Trust and Loan Companies	Other
December 31, 1972	30.33%	55.27%	14.60%
1973	31.39%	55.54%	13.07%
1974	31.96%	56.43%	11.61%
1975	30.96%	51.95%	11.09%
1976	27.55%	57.11%	15.34%
1977	31.51%	54.58%	13.91%

As a result of its studies it would appear to your Committee that the growth patterns and market shares (apart from the market share assumed from time to time by CMHC) have been parallel and indicate to your Committee no particular concern that the chartered banks have been acquiring a possible predatory position in the residential mortgage field.

The other concern which was expressed to your Committee in representations made by witnesses representing interested parties in the trust, mortgage, loan and finance company field, is that the removal of banks' primary cash reserve requirement on the amount of their one-year and over non-encashable term deposits would, in their opinion, severely jeopardize the existence of many companies in the trust and mortgage field.

After study and due consideration your Committee is of the opinion that the reduction of the primary reserve requirement from 4% to 3% has closed the competitive gap between the banks and the trust and loan companies in this area. This was in accordance with the recommendations of your Committee on the White Paper proposals.

As previously noted under the RESERVES section of this report, your Committee, in its White Paper report, recommended that the banks not be relieved from the requirement of maintaining reserves against notice deposit of a term in excess of one year which are not encashable.

Now that your Committee's recommendation for a reduction in the percentage of the reserve requirement from 4% to 3% apparently has been accepted, as indicated in the provisions of Bill C-15, your Committee has been able to review the situation in the light of representations presented by witnesses with respect to the other proposed amendments in Bill C-15.

In its brief on Bill C-15 the Association of Canadian Financial Corporations (ACFC) referred to the alternative recommendations made by your Committee on the White Paper Proposals—either require the banks to maintain the reserve on term deposits or to match the flow of such term deposit funds with mortgages. The ACFC's brief states in part:

"The Report of your Committee's study of the White Paper calls for caution in regard to the investment of banks in residential mortgages. As you no doubt recall: The existing Bank Act limits the investment of each bank to ten per cent of the sum of its deposits and debentures; the White Paper recommended the removal of the limitation; your Report suggested two alternative types of limitation, namely:

—a limitation of fifteen per cent, or —a matching of the mortgage portfolio by appropriate funding.

"ACFC supports the position taken by your Committee with one important exception; we favour matching as the restraining method over an arbitrary 50 per cent rise in an already arbitrary ceiling on investments."

Your Committee has studied the comparative trends of the term deposits and mortgage loan activity of banks and has come to the conclusion that there has been in the past a reasonable matching of the flow of term deposit money by banks into their mortgage portfolio. This flow, of course, fluctuates from time to time depending upon the trend of interest rates offered by banks as indicated by the change in the Bank of Canada rate.

In the course of its hearings, testimony was given to the effect that for the past few years and particularly at present there was a greater supply of mortgage funds available than could be absorbed by the demand. It would result in the unproductive use of funds if banks could not channel the available long term deposits in excess of mortgage requirements into other productive areas of demand.

Your Committee suggests that the question of controlling the supply of term deposit funds by banks into residential mortgage funds, if there is a problem in the future, could be covered more effectively under the Liquidity and Adequacy of Capital Regulations. This would be a reasonable method of creating the proper supervisory structure in this matter, keeping in mind the greater complexities faced by banks not only in adequately recording the depositing of the inward flow of funds but also endeavouring to manage the disposition of funds in the most effective manner possible within the constraint of liquidity, profitability and reserve requirements.

Bill C-15 provides the mechanics for the amalgamation of two banks and for the conversion of a financial institution into a bank. There are transitional provisions which would permit the phasing down of a bank's residential mortgage portfolio to the limit, if any, required by the Bank Act, as amended. Whether this problem has a bearing on the reasons for the elimination of the limit which a bank may have in residential mortgages is not easily determined. Your Committee suggests, however, that this possible problem of the phasing down of the ratio of mortgages to deposits and debentures should be considered in the regulations.

RECOMMENDATIONS:

(1) YOUR COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS THAT BILL C-15'S COMPLETE REMOVAL OF THE LIMIT OF RESIDENTIAL MORTGAGES WHICH A BANK MAY HOLD BE REPLACED WITH A PROVISION INCREASING THE LIMIT FROM TEN PER CENT OF DEPOSITS, AND DEBENTURES TO FIFTEEN PER CENT.

(2) IF YOUR COMMITTEE'S RECOMMENDATION TO THE EFFECT THAT THE RESERVE ON TERM DEPOSITS ONE YEAR AND OVER WHICH ARE NOT ENCASHABLE BE MAINTAINED IS NOT ACCEPTED THEN YOUR COMMITTEE FURTHER RECOMMENDS THAT THE LIQUIDITY AND ADEQUACY OF CAPITAL REGULATIONS PROVIDE FOR MATCHING AS HEREIN DESCRIBED IF REQUIRED FROM TIME TO TIME.

(ii) Security for Loans

Section 177 of Bill C-15 is the equivalent of Section 88 of the present Bank Act. It provides the basis upon which banks may make loans to certain borrowers and the security that may be taken. Subsection 177(1)(a), (b) and (c) provide that loans may be made to certain classes of persons, including farmers, on the security of the products involved. Subpara-graph (d) also provides for the extension of loans to farmers for sundry purchases upon the security of the purchase invoice.

Your Committee heard witnesses who were concerned that priority to the extent of $7,500 under the present Bank Act (which has been indexed by subsection 177(5)(b) (iv) of Bill C-15) is not enough. There is also concern with respect to the index provision under Section 177(5)(g)(iv) as to what might happen if the Index Number of farm prices were again adjusted to 100, as occurred in 1971.

Your Committee is of the opinion that these concerns are justified and that suitable amendment should be made to Bill C-15 in order to resolve them.

The Minister has suggested a proposed draft amendment which would add a new subsection 177(6) which would provide for the automatic changing of the $64 figure set out in Section 177(5)(g)(iv) in the event of a basic change to the Index during the period between revisions of the Act. Your Committee approves of this minor amendment and includes it in its recommendations.

RECOMMENDATIONS:

1. YOUR COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS THAT BILL C-15 BE AMENDED BY INCREASING THE MULTIPLIER OF $64 TO ARRIVE AT AN APPROPRIATE CONTEMPORARY PRESENT VALUE AS COMPARED WITH THE $7,500 LIMIT IN THE PRESENT ACT.

2. YOUR COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS THAT BILL C-15 BE AMENDED IN LINE WITH THE MINISTERS DRAFT OF PROPOSED NEW SUBSECTION 177(6) TO PROVIDE FOR THE AUTOMATIC CHANGING OF THE $64 BASE SUGGESTED IN BILL C-15, (OR SUCH INCREASED AMOUNT AS MAY BE SETTLED UPON IN ACCORDANCE WITH RECOMMENDATION 2 ABOVE) IN THE EVENT OF A BASIC CHANGE TO THE INDEX BETWEEN REVISIONS OF THE ACT.

6. BANK DIRECTORS

There are a number of provisions in the Bill relating to the make-up of Boards of Directors of banks and the eligibility of bank directors to serve on the boards of other corporations, together with provisions relating to the duties and responsibilities of directors. In keeping with the philosophy underlying the provisions of The Canada Business Corporations Act the bill, apart altogether from its provisions relating to directors, contains innumerable provisions which are obviously an attempt, from the standpoint of corporate law to bring the Bank Act into line with the provisions of The Canada Business Corporations Act. Insofar as directors in particular are concerned, the Government has chosen to treat the banking community as a special case requiring more stringent provisions than are otherwise found in the Canada Business Corporations Act.

The White Paper did not direct itself to this subject and accordingly your Committee has not considered it in the present climate heretofore. The philosophical underpinnings for these proposed changes, differing as they do from the provisions of the Canada Business Corporations Act, are elusive and difficult to crystallize. Nothing has been said in evidence before your Committee which would establish a framework upon which one might consider the desirability or otherwise of such changes. Accordingly one is left to speculate as to the reason for these restrictions. While it is true that the banking community is a powerful and pervading influence in Canadian commercial life, that fact alone, it seems to your Committee, is not a sufficient basis for restricting banks in terms of their internal management in ways which are otherwise not realistic.

Your Committee wishes to make recommendations with respect to three of the provisions in the Bill affecting the election or appointment of directors as follows:

- (a) Subsections 35(1)(g) to (j) which have the effect of disqualifying certain classes of persons for election or appointment as directors of a bank;
- (b) Subsection 35(5) which removes the requirement that eligibility for election or appointment as a director depends, inter alia, on the candidate holding shares of the bank; and
- (c) Section 59 which prohibits, subject to certain exceptions, an officer or employee of the bank from serving as a director of another corporation.

The existing law relevant to this enquiry is to be found in Subs. 18(2) and 18(6) of The Bank Act. Subs. 18(2) provides that a person is not eligible to be elected or appointed a director of a bank unless he holds stock of the bank as the absolute sole owner thereof in connection with which certain minimum amounts of money have been paid up, such amounts varying depending on the capital stock of the bank. Subsection 18(6) of the Bank Act provides that a person is not eligible to be elected or appointed a director of a bank if he is a director of a bank to which the Quebec Savings Banks Act applies, or if he is a director of a trust company or a loan company to which the Trust Companies Act and the Loan Companies Act respectively apply. A person is also ineligible to be a director of a bank if he is a director of a company which controls more than ten per cent of the shares of a Quebec savings bank, a trust company or a loan company as above described. Finally subsection 18(7) prohibits a person from becoming a director of a bank if he or she is a director of a corporation, more than one-fifth of whose directors are also directors of the bank.

Subsections 35(5) to (j) of Bill C-15 excludes, in terms of eligibility for bank directorship, the following classes of person:

- a) persons who are directors or officers of cooperative credit societies one or more members of which are other cooperative credit societies;
- b) persons who are directors or officers of a corporation that is controlled by a cooperative credit society;
- c) persons who are members of the Investment Dealers Association of Canada, or persons who are members of any Stock Exchange in Canada, or who are principals or directors in a corporation that is either a member of the Investment Dealers Association or of a stock exchange; and

d) persons who are directors or officers of Crown Corporations.

The Minister in his proposed draft amendments has altered the language of subsections 35(1)(g) and (h) to incorporate the proposed new "central cooperative credit society" and "federation of cooperative credit societies" terms which are themselves defined in the proposed draft amendments.

While there are other prohibitions which go beyond the existing provisions of the Bank Act, the prohibitions above recited are obviously those that are regarded as being most restrictive and offensive. The first point to note about these restrictions is that they do not find their counterpart in the Canada Business Corporations Act. So long as cooperative credit societies in one form or another are entitled to hold, even on an interim basis, significant interests in chartered banks, the prohibition against this class of director does not make sense. Representations were made to your Committee by the Northland Bank to the effect that if this provision in subparagraph (g) with respect to cooperative credit societies becomes law, a number of key directors of that new bank will be thereby disqualified from continuing as directors. It would appear to your Committee that so long as cooperative credit societies under any legislative scheme are entitled to own an equity interest in a bank, there should be on some appropriate basis, a limited entitlement for representatives of such institutions to sit on the board.

Similarly, with respect to investment dealers and members of stock exchanges, the conflict of interest that is presumably inherent in this prohibition is illusive. If there is, on any particular business occasion, a conflict of interest, the legislative scheme should contemplate directors caught in such conflict to disqualify themselves pro tem rather than having a blanket prohibition in anticipation that there might at some time in the future be some conflict of interest.

With respect to directors of Crown Corporations sitting as directors of banks, the corollary to this prohibition as pointed out by the Canadian Bankers' Association is that bank directors who have been invited by the Crown to sit on the boards of directors of Crown Corporations will be required to resign. Surely this is not in the public interest.

Subsection 35(5) of Bill C-15 would effectively repeal the provisions of Subs. 18(2) of the Act and would provide that a director of a bank is not required to hold any qualifying shares. This provision is unique in the Bank Bill and is not to be found in the Canada Business Corporations Act. It's philosophical foundation is unclear. If it is being suggested that in the past persons who particular banks thought would be appropriate to be directors have been frustrated by the requirement of holding qualifying shares, there is no evidence to this effect and in fact the conclusion would appear to be to the contrary. If it is being suggested that persons who felt themselves suited for directorship of a bank, or whom the public might regard as being suited for directorship of a bank, have been denied the opportunity by reason of constraints arising out of the qualifying share requirement, that is again unsupported by any evidence. It is at the very root of traditional concepts of commercial and corporate law that those individuals responsible for the policy direction of a corporation should have a financial interest therein in the operations of the company. While it is quite possible that in many cases persons could function as directors just as effectively without owning qualifying shares, it surely is overkill to prohibit the imposition of a qualifying share requirement altogether.

Subsection 59(1) of the Bill prohibits officers or employees of banks, subject to certain exceptions, from serving on boards of directors of other corporations. This presumably is intended to avoid conflicts of interest or preferential treatment for corporations which are customers of the bank. No evidence has been presented in support of this theory. Again the provision is subject to the practical criticism that it would deny to the Canadian business community the extensive and valuable experience of bankers on their boards in aid of avoiding an occasion for a conflict of interest. Your Committee is of the view that except in situations in which conflicts of interest have been demonstrably uncontrollable the management of this phenomenon should be to impose on the individual an obligation of disqualification rather than disqualifying an entire class of persons.

Additionally, problems might well develop, to the prejudice of the business community, by the use of the expression "officer" or "employee". Surely what is intended is that employees of the bank may be prohibited from serving as directors of other corporations. If non-employees of the bank who happen to have the designation of an officer are so prohibited there would be a serious disruption in the availability of directors from the banking community to serve on the boards of directors of other corporations. While the public interest is what is to be served by this legislation there is simply no evidence before your Committee from either the banking or the business community which would militate in favour of maintaining this prohibition.

Finally, as has been pointed out correctly, the inclusion of an exception to this prohibition which would permit officers or employees of a bank to function as directors of a customer corporation where, implicitly, the security of loans is threatened is surely inane. The election or appointment of such a director to the Board, of a customer corporation could be, correctly or incorrectly, a signal to the financial community that the bank was concerned about the security of its loans to the corporation, with devastating results. Furthermore it would be open to the suggestion that officers or employees of banks were in a position to insinuate themselves onto the boards of directors of unwilling corporations by reason of their financial condition at a given point in time.

As pointed out in the Report of the Royal Commission on Corporate Concentration it can be concluded that the public interest is not in fact adversely affected by the election or appointment of certain classes of persons to the boards of Canadian corporations notwithstanding theoretical objections to their suitability.

In the opinion of your Committee the proposed prohibition against officers and employees of banks serving on the boards of other corporations lacks substance and does not merit support.

RECOMMENDATIONS:

1. YOUR COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS THAT THE PROVISIONS OF SUBSECTIONS 35(1)(g) AND (h) BE AMENDED SO AS TO PERMIT THE CLASS OF PERSONS REFERRED TO THEREIN TO BE ELECTED OR APPOINTED A DIRECTOR OF A BANK SO LONG AS, PURSUANT TO THE PROVISIONS OF THE BANK ACT, THE INSTITUTION IN QUESTION, NAMELY A COOPERATIVE CREDIT SOCIETY, HAS AN EQUITY INTEREST IN THE BANK IN QUESTION WITH THE FURTHER PROVISIO THAT THE NUMBER OF DIRECTORS OF THIS CLASS SHOULD BE LIMITED TO THE PROPORTION OF THE EQUITY INTEREST HELD BY THE COOPERATIVE CREDIT SOCIETY IN THE BANK.

2. YOUR COMMITTEE FURTHER RECOMMENDS THAT SUBSECTIONS 35(1)(i) AND (j) BE DELETED SO AS TO PERMIT PERSONS ASSOCIATED WITH THE INVESTMENT COMMUNITY AND OFFICERS AND DIRECTORS OF CROWN CORPORATIONS TO BE DIRECTORS OF A BANK.

3. YOUR COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS THAT THE PROVISIONS OF CLAUSE 35(5) RELATING TO THE PROHIBITION AGAINST REQUIRING QUALIFYING SHARES FOR BANK DIRECTORS BE DELETED AND THAT THE PRESENT PROVISIONS OF THE BANK ACT BE PERMITTED TO CONTINUE IN FORCE. ALTERNATIVELY, IT IS RECOMMENDED THAT THE PROVISIONS OF CLAUSE 35(5) BE DELETED AND THAT THERE BE SUBSTITUTED THEREFORE AUTHORITY ON THE PART OF THE BANK TO ENACT BYLAWS PROVIDING FOR QUALIFYING SHARES IN APPROPRIATE CIRCUMSTANCES AND WITHIN APPROPRIATE LIMITS.

4. YOUR COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS THAT SUBSECTION 59(1) OF BILL C-15 BE AMENDED SO AS TO PERMIT OFFICERS, DIRECTORS AND EMPLOYEES OF A BANK TO BE DIRECTORS OF OTHER CORPORATIONS.

7. INVESTMENTS

(i) Ownership by Banks of Shares in Canadian Companies

Sections 192, 193 and 194 of Bill C-15 outline the restrictions applying to ownership by banks of shares in non-financial corporations. These provisions follow generally the proposals in the White Paper.

The following extract from Notes on Bill C-15 prepared by the Department of Finance indicates the policy underlying the new legislation:

"Reflecting the traditional policy that banks should not engage in non-banking business, the present Bank Act places restrictions on the extent to which banks may invest in the shares of Canadian corporations. It established that in general such investments would be limited to 10 per cent of voting stock but, in order to permit innovative small investments, also authorized investments in the voting stock of corporations (other than deposit-accepting trust and loan companies) up to 50 per cent provided the investment did not exceed $5 million. The banks have in the current decennial period made considerable investments under this 50 per cent provision.

"In the absence of further constraints, the 50 per cent provision has not limited the higher equity investments to relatively small corporations and has not prevented a bank from dominating a corporation through investments in its preferred shares, through control of additional voting equity held by affiliates of the bank, or through reliance by the corporation on business promoted by the bank's branches. This has resulted in a trend towards increasing bank involvement in non-banking business and toward bank services being increasingly provided through corporations controlled in these ways.

"The basic policy objectives reflected in this division are that banks' operations should be confined within their own corporate structure, subject to all aspects of banking legislation and regulations, also accordingly that banks should not, except specifically authorized by the Bank Act, carry on activities in Canada or provide services to the public in Canada through wholly owned or partially owned affiliates. Within this policy, banks are not permitted to own more than 10 per cent in the voting stock of a Canadian financial corporation (as defined) or of a non-financial corporation, other than in accordance with the exceptions set out in this division.

"In the financial corporation category, exceptions are made in respect of bank service corporations, export development corporations, mortgage loan corporations, service corporations of various mortgage funds, and venture capital corporations. The exceptions in respect of the last three categories are subject to regulation by Governor in Council. Flexibility is provided to qualify existing corporations if the adjustments necessary to comply with the provisions of these sections and the regulations are made.

"Other existing investments by the banks in excess of 10 per cent in financial corporations which would not qualify under the five above categories are subject to grandfathering provisions prescribed by Governor in Council. Flexibility is provided to enable the banks to continue their support of the corporation on the basis of the proportion of equity capital presently held by the bank.

"Existing investments in excess of 10 per cent in non-financial corporations are required to be divested within a period of two years, unless a further period is approved by the Minister.

"Banks will not be precluded from making innovative and joint venture investments on a temporary basis."

Most banks see no need for the prohibition against carrying out some approved operations, such as leasing and factoring, through separate subsidiary companies. Also they would prefer to be able to share the ownership of such companies with outside interests who can provide special expertise in the particular area and can share the risks involved.

In its report on the White Paper your Committee commented on this aspect as follows:

"Your Committee is of the opinion that in some cases greater flexibility in concentrating specialized skills and improved efficiency can result by organizing and marketing in specialized areas through a separate wholly-owned subsidiary. Provided proper identification of the affiliation is made by the subsidiary so that the public is aware of the identity of the parent company, provided such subsidiary is subject to the provisions of the Bank Act, provided its liabilities are guaranteed by the parent company, and provided the subsidiary's figures are consolidated with those of its parent company for reserve and reporting purposes, your Committee is not aware of any compelling arguments in favour of this restriction."

Your Committee's recommendations in this respect are covered in detail in this report under the separate sections dealing with factoring and financial leasing.

(ii) Venture Capital Corporations

Subsection 192(6)(a)(ii) of Bill C-15 would permit, subject to the regulations, a bank to own all, and not less than all, of the issued and outstanding shares of a venture capital corporation, as defined in subsection 192(1).

The Bill and the supporting regulations follow the general proposals for banks' interests in venture capital corporations as outlined in the White Paper.

Your Committee was generally in favour of the White Paper proposals in this regard, but in its report concern was expressed that the divestiture period might not be sufficiently long to permit disposal of mature investments, and a five-year divestiture period was recommended. This problem appears to have been managed in a reasonable manner in the Venture Capital Corporations Regulations in line with your Committee's White Paper recommendations.

For the purpose of limiting the amount of risk exposure and preserving the liquidity of a bank, the regulations impose three limits:

(a) the aggregate indebtedness for a venture capital corporation represented by bonds, debentures, notes or similar obligations shall not exceed twice the bank's shareholders' equity, (Regulations 2 (1)(a)),

(b) the total book value of a bank's investment in all venture capital corporations shall not exceed five per cent of the bank's shareholders' equity, (Regulation 3)

(c) the aggregate amount to which a bank may supply financial support to all corporations or partnerships in which a bank's venture capital corporation has invested or extended credit is limited to fifteen per cent of the bank's shareholders' equity. (Regulation 4)

Your Committee is of the opinion that these limits are reasonable.

Representations have been made to your Committee that banks should not be required to own 100% of a venture capital corporation. Your Committee is of the opinion that this requirement would not in any way prevent a bank from participating with others in joint ventures within the limitations imposed by the regulations and thus on the one hand attracting new ideas, inventions and discoveries and assisting in the development of new projects, and, on the other hand sharing with others the risks of new ventures. For example, it would appear possible under the regulations, for a venture capital corporation, owned by a bank, to either share with others half the ownership of another venture capital corporation or limited partnership which in turn would invest in joint ventures.

Regulation 4(1) refers to "the bank and all venture capital corporations owned by it." This would indicate an assumption that a bank may own directly more than one venture capital corporation. This is not clear from Subsection 192(6) (ii) of the bill which states in effect that "subject to regulations a bank may own (a) all and not less than all of the issued and outstanding shares of . . . (ii) a venture capital corporation."

Your Committee is of the opinion that it is neither necessary nor advisable for a bank to own a proliferation of venture capital corporations. The same equity position of the bank's shareholders is maintained by having only one wholly-owned venture capital subsidiary. The diversification of types of ventures and the degree of splitting of risks and sharing of resources and expertise with other parties can be accomplished equally well through the joint ventures and investments undertaken by the sole wholly-owned venture capital corporation of the bank. This would also permit a better control mechanism and more satisfactory reporting procedures from the standpoint of the responsibility of the Inspector General of Banks.

In summary, your Committee wishes to go on record as approving the thrust of the proposed legislation in permitting and encouraging the use, within very conservative limits of the tremendous pools of capital provided by the Canadian banking system for participation in new ventures for the dynamic development of Canada's potential in human and material resources through venture capital corporations owned by banks.

The investments of most venture capital corporations are based on the development of nature resources such as mining, oil and forestry, and require a separate provincial incorporation. This is often required to take advantage of special provincial tax incentives and grants. Your Committee is of the opinion that provision ought to be made in the legislation to permit the owning of a maximum of one provincially incorporated venture capital corporation in each province, all of which would be wholly-owned subsidiaries of the bank's federally incorporated venture capital corporation.

RECOMMENDATIONS

1. YOUR COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS THAT THE PROPOSAL IN THE REGULATIONS TO PERMIT A BANK TO OWN DIRECTLY MORE THAN ONE VENTURE CAPITAL CORPORATION NOT BE APPROVED: HOWEVER, YOUR COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS THAT BILL C-15 AND THE VENTURE CAPITAL CORPORATION REGULATIONS BE AMENDED TO PERMIT A BANK TO OWN A MAXIMUM OF ONE PROVINCIALY INCORPORATED VENTURE CAPITAL CORPORATION IN EACH PROVINCE, EACH SUCH CORPORATION TO BE A WHOLLY OWNED SUBSIDIARY OF THE BANK'S FEDERALLY INCORPORATED VENTURE CAPITAL CORPORATION.

2. YOUR COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS THE APPROVAL OF THE PROPOSAL IN THE LEGISLATION THAT IF A BANK FORMS OR ACQUIRES A VENTURE CAPITAL CORPORATION, THE BANK MUST OWN ALL AND NOT LESS THAN ALL OF THE ISSUED AND OUTSTANDING SHARES OF SUCH CORPORATION: HOWEVER, YOUR COMMITTEE EMPHASIZES THAT THE BANK ACT AND ITS REGULATIONS IN ITS OPINION, SHOULD NOT PREVENT A BANK'S WHOLLY OWNED VENTURE CAPITAL CORPORATION FROM HOLDING LESS THAN 100% EQUITY AND VOTING POSITIONS IN CANADIAN CORPORATIONS AND LIMITED PARTNERSHIPS ACQUIRED THROUGH THE PROVISION OF FINANCING AND LOANS TO CANADIAN CORPORATIONS AS DEFINED IN THE DEFINITION OF "VENTURE CAPITAL CORPORATIONS" IN BILL C-15.

(iii) Dealing in Securities

Banks from 1876 to the present have been authorized to "deal in" securities without any definite limitations other than the restriction on the use of their name in corporate security sales promotions.

The proposals in Bill C-15 contain prohibitions and constraints on the banks' role in dealing in securities arising out of the policy considerations outlined by the Department of Finance in NOTES ON BILL C-15 as follows:

"The more precise definition of the role of the banks in the securities markets takes into account potential conflicts of interest, particularly where this could occur in respect of corporate securities, the issuers of which are also borrowing customers of the bank; possible undue concentration of power, if the choice between raising capital from the banking sector or from the public were to become restricted; the desirability of the continued availability of the potential distributing power of the chartered banks through their comprehensive branch system; and the need for continued participation by the banks in financing Canadian industrial growth and major resource-oriented projects."

The following is an outline of the powers and constraints proposed in Bill C-15 respecting a bank's entitlement to deal in corporate securities as provided by the Department of Finance in NOTES ON BILL C-15:

"(a) The Banks are authorized, in respect of debt securities to continue to deal in them as principal or agent, to act as members of selling groups, and to underwrite and distribute such securities of all levels of government in Canada and their agents, those of international agencies of which Canada is a member, as well as their own debentures and those of authorized affiliates which are guaranteed by the bank. This enables the banks to continue their role in the financing and distribution of mortgages and government debt securities (189(2) and (5)).

"(b) The banks are precluded, in respect of debt securities from underwriting corporate debt securities but may act as members of selling groups (189(5)).

This withdraws the right of banks to underwrite corporate debt securities, leaving this exclusively to the securities industry and avoiding conflicts of interest.

"(c) The banks are precluded, in respect of equity securities, from dealing in them except in the following specified circumstances: (189(3)):

- they may act as agent provided the transaction is effected through a broker or dealer (189(4)(b));

- they may deal as principals for their investment and trading accounts provided, in respect of the latter account, the transactions are effected through a broker or dealer (189(4)(a));

- they may issue and distribute their own shares (189(4)(c)).

This withdraws the general right of banks to deal in equity securities. They may continue to deal for their own account and act as agents for the public.

"(d) The banks are precluded, in respect of equity securities from underwriting any corporate equity securities, but may be members of the selling group (189(5)).

This withdraws the right to underwrite equity securities. They may, however, participate in their distribution.

"(e) The banks are precluded from making private placements of corporate debt or equity securities except in the following specified circumstances (189(7)):

- the banks may do so in respect of their own securities (subject in the case of equity securities to the approval of the Inspector (189(4)(c)), in respect of the debt and equity securities of corporations controlled by the bank, and in respect of the debt securities of authorized affiliates.

- the banks may participate in private placements where they are members of the selling group.

This withdraws the right to engage in the private placement of securities except where the banks are permitted to underwrite and in connection with their own securities and those of related corporations.

"(f) It is made clear that the banks may participate in consortium or syndicate lending where the debt instrument involved is of a kind not normally traded in the market and it is clearly a project of a size or nature which is not being financed primarily through the securities market from non-bank sources (189(8)).

This will ensure that banks may continue to participate in meeting the larger and specialized capital requirements of industry and resource-oriented projects.

"(g) The banks are precluded from having any involvement in the management of mutual funds but may act at arms length as agents in the sale of mutual funds, thus avoiding potential conflicts of interest (190(1)).

"(h) It is made clear that a bank may advertise that it buys and sells securities provided it does not promote the sale of any particular security other than the debt securities it is authorized to underwrite under (a) above. This permits the branch system of the bank to continue to be used in the general distribution of securities throughout Canada (189(6))."

In response to these provisions the Investment Dealers Association of Canada and the Stock Exchanges of Canada delivered a strong brief emphasizing the separation of functions as between the banking community and securities dealers. Your Committee endorses this general concept. In addition the brief outlined a number of provisions of the securities aspect of the Bill which gave them concern all of which will no doubt be given careful consideration by the Government.

The point which must be stressed in your Committee's view is that a limited involvement by the banks in the distribution of securities is essential by reason of their extensive network of branches which provide a service to the smaller communities of Canada which would otherwise be unavailable. At the same time the provisions of the Bill provide some protection for investment dealers and brokers which in a statutory sense they have not heretofore enjoyed and which will enable them to continue to play a vital role in the Canadian financial system.

8. FOREIGN STORAGE OF BANK RECORDS

Subsection 156(4) of Bill C-15 provides in part as follows:

"A bank shall not process, store or otherwise maintain any of its corporate or clients' records at a location outside Canada or transmit data relating to any such records to a point outside Canada with the object of having that data processed, stored or maintained outside Canada . . ."

This provision of the Bill has excited considerable interest not only in the banking community, but also in the data processing field.

In the first place, the presence of such a provision for what appears to be the first time in Canada, in the Bank Bill is curious. If the public interest demands that data, consisting of business records, be retained in Canada and not stored abroad, it is unclear as to why this is peculiarly appropriate to the banking industry. There is no equivalent provision in the Canada Business Corporations Act nor in any other federal legislation. The first criticism therefore is that the inclusion for the first time of such a provision in the Bank Act is inappropriate and amounts to a piecemeal treatment of a complex subject. If accessibility of such information is the issue, then it is the view of your Committee that it should be dealt with in composite legislation.

The banking community anticipates facing serious difficulties in the light of this provision of the Bill by reason or the fact that, at the present time, and on an ever increasing basis, the development of computer technology in the computer service industry is in the direction of international processing storage which would leave the Canadian banking community, and for that matter the Canadian public, at a distinct disadvantage if such transmittal and storage were prohibited.

As has been pointed out by the Banks, they may wish to use services which may involve the use of data processing facilities outside Canada for analytical purposes. This clause would deny to the banks the flexibility afforded other corporations. The language of the clause is sufficiently broad as to prohibit even the most innocuous activity such as, for example, the analysis of the effective rate of return on a schedule of equipment lease payments. Further, with the increasing use of a wide variety of credit cards valid in a multitude of jurisdictions, information regarding bank customers must from time to time be stored in a foreign data centre, otherwise the credit card would have no utility.

If the intention is to promote utilization of Canadian data processing firms or to promote the expansion of the computer hardware manufacturing industry the representations made to your Committee would lead to the conclusion that these results are not likely to follow. In the first place, insofar as processing firms are concerned, the largest and most sophisticated themselves make use of services and facilities in foreign countries from time to time. It would not appear to follow that there would be anything in the way of a significant change in the Canadian manufacturing industry if this clause were to survive since, on the evidence before your Committee, emphasis in the Canadian industry has been upon the development of the computer service bureau rather than the manufacturing industry and the work of the service bureau industry would be frustrated by such a provision.

Finally it has been suggested by some groups that have made representations to your Committee that the underlying reason for the inclusion of this clause is to insure that the Inspector General of Banks will not be denied, in the performance of his function, an effective opportunity to examine the records of banks which may be stored in a computer facility abroad. It is the view of your Committee that this objective together with any others that may be inherent in the proposed legislation can be secured just as effectively by either requiring that a record of the same information which is stored abroad be maintained in Canada, or alternatively that the Bank be required to maintain and have available for all legitimate purposes, facilities to enable such public official to secure a print-out of the information so stored from a domestic location and also to enable him to secure a detailed index of the information stored and the codes necessary to enable him to secure such a print-out.

The above is apart altogether from the advice which your Committee has received to the effect that generally information which is ordinarily processed outside Canada is statistical information, and the main bank records are, and will in all likelihood continue to be, stored in Canada.

RECOMMENDATION:

YOUR COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS THAT SUBSECTION 156(4) OF THE BILL BE DELETED IN ITS ENTIRETY EITHER WITH A VIEW TO AWAITING GOVERNMENT LEGISLATION OF A MORE COMPOSITE VARIETY REFLECTING PUBLIC POLICY WITH RESPECT TO THE PROCESSING AND STORAGE OF DATA IN COMPUTER BANKS ABROAD, OR ALTERNATIVELY, REPLACED WITH A MORE POSITIVE AND PRACTICAL PROVISION, NARROWER IN SCOPE, AND INTENDED TO PERMIT THE BANKING COMMUNITY AS IS PRESENTLY PERMITTED FOR ALL OTHER SECTORS OF THE BUSINESS COMMUNITY TO PROCESS AND STORE APPROPRIATE CLASSES OF DATA IN CANADA AND ABROAD ON A BASIS THAT WILL PERMIT THOSE PERSONS OR INSTITUTIONS WHICH HAVE A LEGITIMATE INTEREST IN RETRIEVING SUCH INFORMATION TO SO RETRIEVE IT FROM A LOCATION AND WITH INFORMATION AND FACILITIES AVAILABLE IN CANADA, AND PROVIDED A DETAILED RECORD OF THE SAME INFORMATION IN BOTH RAW DATA AND PRINT-OUT FORM IS ALSO STORED AND SIMILARLY AVAILABLE IN CANADA.

9. FINANCIAL DISCLOSURE

Your Committee received briefs from the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants and the Canadian Bankers' Association. Both of these Associations appeared before your Committee and made recommendations for changes in the format of and the filing of financial statements and financial disclosure generally.

The matters on which your Committee makes recommendations in this report are as follows:

- (i) Accumulated Appropriations for Losses;
- (ii) Filing of financial statements and returns;
- (iii) Regulations on Cost of Borrowing

Your Committee has noted the following changes in the banking legislation and in the Minister's suggested amendments which pertain to provisions affecting financial statements, returns, audit committees and auditors:

Consolidated financial statements
Equity accounting for associated companies
Minority interests
Improvements in format and presentation of financial statements
Requirement for Audit Committees
Alternative appointment of either a firm of accountants or an individual as auditor

(i) Accumulated Appropriations for Losses

Your Committee has considered various representations and suggestions as to whether or not the charge to expense in a given year based on the five-year loan loss experience should be changed. As a result of its deliberations your Committee has concluded that the special circumstances of the regulated banking system and its proven record of stability does not warrant change in the method of handling the annual provision for losses on loans calculated on the formula based on a bank's five-year average loss ratio.

Your Committee is aware that information is provided in a bank's financial statements and in the notes thereto to disclose adequately the actual losses on loans for a period. It is particularly noted that Regulation 4(1) (c) prescribes the detailed information to be disclosed in such notes. However, your Committee is of the opinion that because the tax-paid portion of the Accumulated Appropriations for Losses represents an appropriation of retained earnings or contributed capital, such portion should properly be included as part of shareholders' equity on a bank's balance sheet. A suggested amendment to this effect has been proposed by the Minister.

RECOMMENDATION:

YOUR COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS THAT BILL C-15 BE AMENDED TO PROVIDE FOR THE TAX-PAID PORTION OF THE ACCUMULATED APPROPRIATIONS FOR LOSSES TO BE INCLUDED AS PART OF SHAREHOLDERS' EQUITY ON THE BALANCE SHEET OF A BANK.

(ii) Filing of Financial Statements and Returns

Your Committee has concluded that the new reporting requirements for banks, including consolidated financial statements as proposed by Bill C-15, should allow more time for the preparation and submission of returns. The Minister has brought forward suggested amendments in this connection and your Committee approves same.

RECOMMENDATION:

YOUR COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS THAT BILL C-15 BE AMENDED TO PROVIDE THAT THE RELATIVE TIME PERIODS ALLOWED FOR PREPARATION, SUBMISSION AND PUBLISHING OF FINANCIAL STATEMENTS AND RETURNS BE EXTENDED AS FOLLOWS:

(a) MAILING ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT TO SHAREHOLDERS—60 DAYS INSTEAD OF 45 DAYS;

(b) SUBMISSION OF QUARTERLY FINANCIAL STATEMENTS TO INSPECTOR GENERAL OF BANKS—45 DAYS INSTEAD OF 30 DAYS

(c) PUBLISHING OF QUARTERLY FINANCIAL STATEMENTS IN NEWSPAPERS—65 DAYS INSTEAD OF 45 DAYS

(iii) Regulations on Cost of Borrowing

In our report on Bill C-16, the Borrowers and Depositors Act, your Committee expressed concern over the extent to which "credit charge" as defined for the purpose of that Act fell within the federal power to legislate with respect to interest assigned under Section 91(19) of the British North America Act. In general terms "if the predominant aspect or the principal characteristic of the legislation deals with interest then it will be in the federal power; however, if such aspect or characteristic relates to the making of a contract or its terms, other than interest, then subject to the ancillary power to legislate... the power to legislate would be in the provinces."

Your Committee's report on Bill C-16 cited jurisprudence in support of its concern and while we do not propose to repeat the citation in this report it does seem appropriate to quote the Hon. Mr. Justice Judson in the case of Attorney General for Ontario v. Barfried Enterprises Ltd. (1963) S.C.R. 570 where the court considered whether The Unconscionable Transactions Relief Act which defined "cost of the loan" to mean among other things, "The whole cost to the debtor of money lent" and includes interest discounts subscription, premium, dues hours, commission, brokerage fees and charges was really legislation in relation to interest. The Hon. Mr. Justice Judson at page 575 says: "The day to day accrual of interest seems to me to be an essential characteristic. All other items mentioned in The Unconscionable Transactions Relief Act except discount lack this characteristic. They are not interest."

On the basis of these comments and other decisions quoted in our report on Bill C-16, your Committee is of the opinion that it is questionable whether many of the items formerly included in Bill C-16, definition of "credit charge" and now included in Bill C-15, definition of "cost of borrowing" would be "interest". The most significant questionable area would be any payments by the borrower to a third person when such third person is not related to or a nominee of the lender. Because of the difficulty in defining "cost of borrowing" your Committee believes it would be more appropriate to include such definition in the Bill rather than in the regulations.

In defining the nominal annual percentage rate in the regulations, any increase in the amount paid by the borrower caused by the compounding of interest for one or more periods is excluded if the annual interest is expressed as the sum of the percentage rates for the year.

Regulation 8(1) outlines the disclosure requirements for borrowers other than by way of mortgage on real property but does not require that the effective date of the loan and the terminal balance or terminal payment, if any, be shown separately on the Statement of Disclosure form.

Regulation 8(2) outlines the disclosure requirements for loans secured by a mortgage on real property but makes no separate reference to the cost of borrowing which must be calculated to obtain the nominal annual percentage rate and therefore could be disclosed.

The Consumers Association of Canada in an addendum to their brief to your Committee has suggested that Regulation 10 should be expanded to require disclosure or maximum liability for unauthorized credit card use. The Association has also suggested that the regulations adopt a standard method for the computing of interest charges on variable amounts and that the calculation procedure be disclosed to card holders; also that the bank be required to disclose the time required to liquidate the debt at the minimum permitted repayment level.

RECOMMENDATIONS

YOUR COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS THAT:

1. THE DEFINITION OF COST OF BORROWING SHOULD BE INCORPORATED IN THE BILL AND PAYMENTS TO THIRD PARTIES UNRELATED TO THE BANK AND NOT A NOMINEE OF THE BANK AND NECESSARY TO THE COMPLETION OF A LOAN OR ADVANCE SHOULD BE EXCLUDED FROM THE COST OF BORROWING.

2. WHERE THE TERMS OF THE LOANS ARE SUCH THAT THERE IS A DIFFERENCE BETWEEN "THE NOMINAL ANNUAL PERCENTAGE RATE" AND "THE EFFECTIVE ANNUAL RATE", THE EFFECTIVE ANNUAL RATE SHOULD BE DISCLOSED.

3. THE STATEMENT OF DISCLOSURE OF INFORMATION UNDER SUBSECTION 198(4) OF PART I OF BILL C-15, SHOULD INCLUDE THE EFFECTIVE DATE OF THE LOANS AND THE TERMINAL BALANCE ON THE AMOUNT OF PAYMENT REQUIRED ON TERMINATION.

4. THE DISCLOSURE REQUIREMENTS FOR LOANS SECURED BY REAL PROPERTY SHOULD INCLUDE THE COST OF BORROWING IF SUCH AMOUNT MUST BE DETERMINED TO OBTAIN THE NOMINAL ANNUAL PERCENTAGE RATE.

5. THE DISCLOSURE REQUIREMENTS FOR VARIABLE CREDIT SHOULD INCLUDE A STATEMENT OF THE CARDHOLDER'S MAXIMUM LIABILITY FOR UNAUTHORIZED CREDIT CARD USE.

10. CANADA BUSINESS CORPORATIONS ACT

As has been noted in this report, there are more than four hundred instances in which equivalent provisions of the Canada Business Corporations Act (Statutes of Canada 1974-75-76, C. 33 as amended) have been incorporated in Part I of Bill C-15, being the new Bank Act.

Your advisers compared these provisions with the treatment accorded them in the proposed legislation in Part I of Bill C-15; recourse was also had to two studies submitted to your Committee by the Canadian Bankers' Association as supplementary evidence in connection with that Association's brief on Bill C-15; these studies were prepared by John H. C. Clarry, entitled "Bill C-57—Canada Business Corporations Act—Comparison" and "Major Areas of Different Treatment under the Bank Act and the CBCA".

Your Committee also studied a number of technical amendments to Bill C-15 which were proposed by the Canadian Bankers' Association, and met with representatives of that Association together with representatives of the office of the Inspector General of Banks with a view to resolving many areas of difference in treatment in Bill C-15 compared with the equivalent provision of the CBCA.

The major areas of different treatment under Bill C-15 and the CBCA fall into the following categories.

Qualifications of directors

Bank directors and officers as directors of other corporations

Provisions applicable to directors and officers

Loans to directors, officers and employees

Incorporation and corporate proceedings

Share capital; pre-emptive rights; options, redemptions

Issue of bank debentures and shares

Data Processing

Financial statements; audit committees; auditors

Regulatory provisions

Provisions of the CBCA which are not adopted in the Bank Act

Other differences reflecting different circumstances of banks and government policy

In your Committee's opinion the advisability of proposing amendments to Bill C-15 in order to conform with equivalent provisions of the CBCA cannot be generalized. Many of the differences in technical treatment between the CBCA and Part I of Bill C-15 were resolved in the meeting above referred to and are, in your Committee's opinion, adequately dealt with in the suggested amendments brought forward by the Minister.

There are many areas in which the treatment in Part I of Bill C-15 differs from the equivalent provisions of the CBCA and such treatment reflects government policy or the necessity to adapt the provisions of the Bank Act to the different circumstances of Banks compared with other business corporations. Your Committee is of the opinion that the special character of the banking system and the important responsibilities of banks in the business community and the Canadian economy require in some cases, different treatment in the Bank Act than that contemplated by the CBCA. Your Committee's views on the advisability of according to banks the same or different treatment under the Bank Act is reflected in the various sections of this report and in our recommendations for amendment to Bill C-15.

11. MISCELLANEOUS TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS

In Part I of Bill C-15 and in the Minister's draft proposed amendments, technical and non-substantive changes to the Bank Act have been proposed. Your Committee, after a comprehensive analysis of Part I of the Bill has developed specific recommendations for change to some of these provisions. These recommendations for change are presented herein in outline form.

RECOMMENDATIONS:

(a) It is noted that shares of trust companies are currently held by some banks and will require disposition, when such a trust company incorporates as a bank, on a possible "distress" basis.

YOUR COMMITTEE THEREFORE RECOMMENDS THAT SECTION 9 OF BILL C-15 BE AMENDED TO PERMIT A BANK, WHICH OWNS SHARES OF A TRUST COMPANY SEEKING INCORPORATION AS A BANK, TO ENJOY A LIMITED TRANSITIONAL PERIOD TO ENABLE IT TO DISPOSE OF ITS TRUST COMPANY SHARES ON OTHER THAN A DISTRESS BASIS.

(b) Subsection 46(3)(c) of Bill C-15 specifically prohibits the Chief Executive of a bank from issuing securities, including deposit instruments, except as may be authorized by the Board of Directors.

YOUR COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS THAT THESE PROHIBITIONS BE LIMITED TO SHARES AND THAT IN THE CASE OF OTHER SECURITIES AND DEPOSIT INSTRUMENTS PROVISION BE MADE FOR DELEGATION OF THE ISSUING FUNCTION TO OFFICERS OF THE BANK.

(c) The provisions of subsection 117(2) describes the right of one class of shares to vote at all meetings, to receive all property of the bank on dissolution and Section 129 provides for the declaration of dividends.

YOUR COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS THAT SUBSECTION 129(1) OF PART I OF THE BILL BE AMENDED SO AS TO PERMIT THE SEPARATE DECLARATION OF DIVIDENDS ON DIFFERENT CLASSES OF SHARES.

(d) The provisions of Bill C-15 do not allow a bank to purchase any shares it has issued as redeemable shares nor does it allow for the calculation of a price for redeemable shares by means of a formula stated in the bylaw creating the shares.

YOUR COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS THAT SUBSECTION 124(2) OF PART I OF BILL C-15 BE AMENDED TO PERMIT A BANK TO PURCHASE ITS SHARES WHICH IT HAS ISSUED AS REDEEMABLE SHARES (SUBJECT TO THE CONSENT OF THE INSPECTOR GENERAL OF BANKS) AND THE OTHER CONDITIONS COMPARABLE TO SUBSECTION 124(3); AND ALSO TO PERMIT THE REDEMPTION OF REDEEMABLE PREFERRED SHARES AT A PRICE CALCULATED ACCORDING TO A FORMULA STATED IN THE BY-LAW CREATING THE PREFERRED SHARES.

(e) It is noted that the present proposals in Section 132 do not make it clear that the minimum five year term does not apply to the right of the holders to exercise their recourse in the event of winding-up or insolvency.

YOUR COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS THAT AMENDMENT TO THIS PROPOSED SUBSECTION 132(2)(b) BE MADE TO CLARIFY THAT COLLECTION OF DEBENTURES PRIOR TO THE FIVE YEAR MINIMUM TERM IS POSSIBLE IN THE CASE OF A BANK INSOLVENCY OR WINDING-UP AND FURTHER THAT THE CONVERSION OF DEBENTURES SHOULD NOT BE CONSTRUED AS PAYMENT.

(f) The Government proposals require insiders to file a first report within thirty days from the coming into force of the Act. A large number of people will fall within the provisions of Section 168.

YOUR COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS THAT IN VIEW OF THE LARGE NUMBER OF PEOPLE WHO WOULD BE REQUIRED TO FILE THE INITIAL INSIDER REPORT SUBSECTION 168(1) SHOULD BE AMENDED SO AS TO EXTEND THE INITIAL FILING PERIOD FOR THE FIRST INSIDER REPORTS FROM THIRTY DAYS TO SIXTY DAYS.

DIVISION II
PART II OF BILL C-15

THE QUEBEC SAVINGS BANKS ACT

Part II of Bill C-15 consists of amendments to the present Quebec Savings Banks Act. The only bank to which this Act applies is the Montreal City and District Savings Bank. (La Banque d'Épargne de la Cité et du District de Montréal)

Your Committee notes the more important amendments to this Act which include the following provisions:

- to permit the bank to have branches outside Quebec;
- to increase ratio limit on mortgage loans to deposits from 60% to 65%;
- to delete limit on size of mortgage loans;
- to permit insured high ratio conventional mortgages;
- to permit loans to individuals against security of movable property, with no limit per individual except approval of board required where aggregate of unsecured loans to an individual and loans against security of movable property to that individual exceed $50,000;
- to permit the bank to issue no par value shares, and have shares of various classes;
- to provide for setting aside pre-emptive rights by by-law if confirmed by special resolution;
- to incorporate some provisions similar to those in the Bank Act in areas such as;
 - capital adequacy and liquidity
 - consolidated financial statements and format thereof
 - borrowing limits for officers, employees and directors
 - rotation of auditors, appointment of an audit committee
 - sale of lottery and bus tickets
- to prohibit the Montreal City and District Savings Bank from acquiring shares of a chartered bank
- to limit the holding of shares of a savings bank by cooperative corporations to 25 per cent

The White Paper on Banking had proposed that the Montreal City and District Savings Bank would be required to be a member of the Canadian Payments Association and be subject to the same reserve requirements as chartered banks. This would have resulted in a considerable loss of revenue to the bank. In its report on the White Paper, your Committee recommended that the reserve requirements of the Montreal City and District Savings Bank as provided under the Quebec Savings Bank Act should remain under that Act and that no changes in the amount of reserves should be made. This recommendation has been given effect to inasmuch as there are no proposed amendments in Part II of Bill C-15 affecting the reserve requirements of the Bank.

The Montreal City and District Savings Bank submitted briefs and supplementary information concerning proposed amendments to Bill C-15. Representatives of the bank also appeared before your Committee on June 28, 1978.

Your Committee has studied the proposals of the bank in relation to the amendments in Part II of Bill C-15 and the present Quebec Savings Banks Act. The bank stated its opinion that the proposed amendments brought forward by the Government in Part II of Bill C-15 were not very numerous or comprehensive because the Government is now studying the desirability of a new Savings Bank Act. Your Committee agrees with the bank that if there are any amendments which can be substantiated as being advisable or necessary for improved legislation in the Quebec Savings Bank Act now is the time to make the necessary changes rather than wait for some indefinite period of time which might run into several years.

Based on its studies, your Committee wishes to make the following comments on the amendments proposed to the Quebec Savings Banks Act in Part II of Bill C-15.

LOANS TO INDIVIDUALS

(a) Unsecured Loans

Your Committee is of the opinion that the present limit of the $10,000 for unsecured loans to individuals should be increased to $20,000, and that such limit be indexed to take into account any future depreciation in the value of money

(b) Secured Loans

Your Committee suggests that the limit on secured loans to individuals not requiring approval of the directors be increased from $50,000 to $100,000.

THE PROPOSALS PERTAINING TO CORPORATE STRUCTURE

1. Qualification of Directors

In line with the requirements of the Bank Act, your Committee is of the opinion that the Quebec Savings Banks Act should provide that the directors and officers of a chartered bank or a cooperative corporation, as defined in the Act, are disqualified from being directors of the Bank.

It is noted that the Minister's suggested amendments to Bill C-15 would disqualify from being a director of a bank a person who is a director or officer of a chartered bank or of a cooperative corporation.

2. Limit on bank shares by cooperative corporations

In its brief and when it appeared before your Committee, the Montreal City and District Savings Bank pointed out that greater protection from the danger of control or influence on policy by cooperative credit societies should be afforded to it under the Quebec Savings Banks Act than the limitations in the Bank Act imposed on the shareholdings of banks incorporated under the latter Act held by cooperative credit societies.

Some of these reasons, it is claimed, are as follows:

- (a) The Montreal City and District Savings Bank is in direct competition with cooperative credit societies such as Caisses Populaires Desjardins and the ownership of the bank's shares possibly could lead to a loss of a degree of independence;

(b) The Bank is more vulnerable to acquisition of large blocks of its shares by groups which might act in concert because the number of shares outstanding is relatively small. The possibility of obtaining a broader distribution of shares is restricted because the present Act requires that holders of shares have pre-emptive rights on any new issue of treasury shares;

(c) The proposed provisions in Part II of Bill C-15 concerning the limits on ownership of shares by cooperative corporations, the extent to which cooperative credit societies are deemed to be associated, and the lack of prohibition against officers of competing cooperative credit societies being directors of the Bank leave the Bank in a vulnerable position.

Your Committee suggests that a broader definition of a cooperative corporation should be given in the Act so as to include corporations under the control of a league or federation of leagues or federations of local cooperative credit societies.

In the opinion of your Committee the concept of deemed association of shareholders, as laid down in the Act, should be extended so that cooperative credit societies who are members of, and corporations under the control of, the same league or federation be deemed associated shareholders.

Your Committee is also of the opinion that the Act should limit the total number of shares held together by all cooperative corporations to 25% of the total number of the issued and outstanding shares of a Savings Bank, but that the limit for all cooperative corporations which are deemed to be associated should be 10%; also, that provision should be made in the Act in the case of new Savings Banks for the latter limit to be temporarily exceeded up to a maximum of 25% for a maximum of five years.

3. Voting rights of shares held by certain funds

In the opinion of your Committee the Act should prohibit the exercise of the voting rights of shares of the Bank held by a pension fund to which a chartered bank or cooperative corporation is a contributor. This would prevent the use of pension funds as a means of controlling the Bank or exceeding the limit on voting shares which may be held directly.

4. The authorized capital stock

Your Committee considers that the authorized capital of the Bank is insufficient for its needs and to allow for growth, and believes that the capital stock, authorized by the Act, should be increased to $5,000,000 divided into five million shares of one dollar each.

5. Suspension of shareholders' pre-emptive rights

The bank has proposed that the directors should be empowered by the Act to suspend the pre-emptive right of shareholders with respect to new Bank share offerings.

This proposal is based on a desire to give the shareholdings a broader base. Your Committee suggests that a minimum of two-thirds majority of the votes cast at a meeting of shareholders called for the purpose of approving or ratifying a suspension of rights for any particular new issue of shares would be appropriate under the circumstances. It should be in the interests of the shareholders to obtain broader distribution of its shares, and this is difficult to accomplish under the present Act which requires any new issue of shares to be offered to the present shareholders.

Your Committee notes that the Minister has brought forward a proposed draft amendment defining "special resolution" to mean a resolution passed by a majority of not less than two-thirds of the votes cast by or on behalf of the shareholders who voted in respect of that resolution or signed by all the shareholders entitled to vote on that resolution. This would have the effect of applying the two-thirds majority requirement to the setting aside of pre-emptive right and your Committee approves of this proposed amendment.

6. The issue of securities

Your Committee is of the opinion that as is the case for chartered banks, the Bank should be authorized to borrow money by the issue of bank debentures, subject to the same limit of one-half of the Bank's paid-in capital, contributed surplus, general reserve and retained earnings.

It is noted that the Minister's suggested amendments to Part II of Bill C-15 would give the Bank the same debenture issuing powers as are in Sections 132-134 of the Bank Act, suitably amended.

THE PROPOSALS PERTAINING TO BUSINESS AND POWERS

1. Business Powers

In addition to the powers specified in the present Act and in the Bill, your Committee agrees with the Bank's proposal that the Bank should have such powers set forth in the new Bank Act as are not inconsistent with the business of the Bank, namely, to borrow money generally, to issue credit cards, to provide banking related data processing services, to sell RRSPs and RHSPs and to hypothecate the assets of the Bank as security for the repayment of moneys borrowed by it;

Also the prohibition against lending money on the security of shares of the Bank or of a chartered bank or on debentures of the Bank should not apply where the amount of the loan is $50,000 or less, as is the case for loans made by the chartered banks.

It is noted that Part II of Bill C-15 would permit in Section 8 a bank incorporated under the Quebec Savings Banks Act to open branches anywhere within Canada instead of being limited to the Province of Quebec.

2. Investments

Your Committee does not approve the Bank's proposal that it should be authorized to invest in shares and securities of any corporation without restriction, but that the present limitation in the Act remain unchanged; that is, limited to securities and shares of companies incorporated in Canada none of whose securities are in default.

3. Loans

Your Committee is of the opinion that as regards loans to individuals, the Act should (i) permit the Bank to lend money to any individual, without security, up to $20,000 subject to indexing for future changes in the value of money; (ii) for secured loans to individuals, extend the meaning of "security" so as to include the security of movable property, tangible or intangible, as well as the guarantees that may be provided under any Act of the Parliament of Canada or of a Province; and (iii) increase the amount of secured loans to an individual in excess of which the approval of the directors is required from $50,000 to $100,000 subject to indexing.

It is noted that the Minister's suggested amendments to Part II of Bill C-15 include a proposed change whereby directors need only approve loans over $100,000.

As regards loans to companies, your Committee agrees that the Act should (i) permit the Bank to lend money to any company incorporated in Canada without restriction, subject to the approval of the directors if the loan is made without security; and (ii) permit the Bank to lend money to companies against the same securities as for individuals and subject to the approval of directors if the loan is in excess of $100,000 with appropriate provisions for indexing.

4. Mortgage loans

Your Committee suggests that NHA mortgage loans should be exempted when computing the permitted ratio of total mortgage loans to total deposit liabilities; moreover, the amount of a mortgage loan in excess of which the approval of directors is required should be increased to $300,000 subject to indexing.

5. Loans to Employees

Your Committee is of the opinion that the borrowing by employees of the Bank should be made subject to one restriction only, i.e. that the approval of directors be required when the aggregate amount of loans to any one employee exceeds the annual salary from the Bank of that employee.

The Proposals Relating to Financial Reporting

Your Committee notes that the Minister is bringing forward a proposed draft amendment whereby the tax-paid portion of the Accumulated Appropriations for Losses is to be included as a part of Shareholders' Equity. Your Committee approves this proposed draft amendment.

RECOMMENDATIONS:

1. YOUR COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS THAT PART II OF BILL C-15 BE AMENDED SO AS TO DISQUALIFY FROM BEING A DIRECTOR OF A BANK INCORPORATED UNDER THIS ACT A PERSON WHO IS A DIRECTOR OR OFFICER OF A BANK TO WHICH THE BANK ACT APPLIES OR OF A COOPERATIVE CORPORATION OR A PERSON WHO IS A DIRECTOR OR

OFFICER OF A CORPORATION CONTROLLED BY A CHARTERED BANK OR A COOPERATIVE CORPORATION.

2. YOUR COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS THAT PART II OF BILL C-15 BE AMENDED SO AS TO (a) LIMIT THE TOTAL NUMBER OF SHARES HELD TOGETHER BY ALL COOPERATIVE ASSOCIATIONS TO 25 PER CENT OF THE TOTAL NUMBER OF ISSUED AND OUTSTANDING SHARES OF A BANK INCORPORATED UNDER THIS ACT;

(b) LIMIT THE HOLDINGS OF VOTING SHARES HELD IN AGGREGATE BY COOPERATIVE CORPORATIONS WHICH ARE DEEMED TO BE ASSOCIATED TO 10 PER CENT OF SUCH A BANK; AND

(c) PROVIDE FOR A TEMPORARY EXCEEDING OF THE 10 PER CENT LIMIT IN (b) ABOVE UP TO A MAXIMUM OF 25 PER CENT FOR A PERIOD OF FIVE YEARS DURING THE ORGANIZATIONAL AND FINANCING PERIOD OF A BANK NEWLY INCORPORATED UNDER THE QUEBEC SAVINGS BANK ACT.

3. YOUR COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS THAT PART II OF BILL C-15 BE AMENDED TO PROHIBIT THE EXERCISE OF THE VOTING RIGHTS OF SHARES OF A BANK INCORPORATED UNDER THE QUEBEC SAVINGS BANKS ACT WHICH ARE HELD BY A PENSION FUND TO WHICH A BANK CHARTERED UNDER THE BANK ACT OR A COOPERATIVE CORPORATION IS A CONTRIBUTOR.

4. YOUR COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS THAT PART II OF BILL C-15 BE AMENDED SO AS TO INCREASE THE AUTHORIZED CAPITAL OF THE MONTREAL CITY AND DISTRICT SAVINGS BANK TO $5,000,000 DIVIDED INTO FIVE MILLION SHARES OF ONE DOLLAR EACH.

5. YOUR COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS THAT PART II OF BILL C-15 BE AMENDED SO AS TO PERMIT THE SUSPENSION OF PRE-EMPTIVE RIGHTS IN THE CASE OF NEW ISSUE OF TREASURY SHARES UPON A SPECIAL RESOLUTION OF THE DIRECTORS RATIFIED BY AT LEAST TWO-THIRDS OF THE VOTES CAST IN FAVOUR AT A MEETING OF THE SHAREHOLDERS.

6. YOUR COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS THAT PART II OF BILL C-15 BE AMENDED SO AS TO AUTHORIZE THE ISSUE OF DEBENTURES BY A BANK INCORPORATED UNDER THIS ACT, SUBJECT TO A LIMIT IN AMOUNT NOT EXCEEDING THE BANK'S SHAREHOLDERS' EQUITY.

7. YOUR COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS THAT PART II OF BILL C-15 BE AMENDED SO AS TO GIVE TO A BANK INCORPORATED UNDER THIS ACT THE FOLLOWING SPECIFIC POWERS:

(a) TO BORROW MONEY GENERALLY,

- (b) TO ISSUE CREDIT CARDS,
- (c) TO PROVIDE BANKING RELATED DATA PROCESSING SERVICES,
- (d) TO SELL RRSPs and RHSPs
- (e) TO HYPOTHECATE THE ASSETS OF THE BANK AS SECURITY FOR MONEYS BORROWED BY IT,
- (f) TO LEND MONEY ON THE SECURITY OF SHARES OF THE BANK OR OF A CHARTERED BANK OR ON DEBENTURES OF THE BANK WHERE THE LOAN IS $50,000 OR LESS.

8. YOUR COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS THAT PART II OF BILL C-15 BE AMENDED SO AS TO INCREASE THE LENDING POWERS OF A BANK INCORPORATED UNDER THIS ACT AS FOLLOWS:

- (a) THE LIMIT ON UNSECURED LOANS TO INDIVIDUALS BE INCREASED FROM $10,000 TO $20,000 WITH A PROVISION FOR INDEXING OF THE DOLLAR LIMIT TO REFLECT ANY CHANGE IN THE VALUE OF MONEY;
- (b) THE LIMIT ON SECURED LOANS TO INDIVIDUALS AND CORPORATIONS, IN EXCESS OF WHICH THE APPROVAL OF THE DIRECTORS IS REQUIRED BE INCREASED FROM $50,000 TO $100,000 WITH A PROVISION FOR INDEXING;

(c) THE LIMIT ON MORTGAGE LOANS IN EXCESS OF WHICH THE APPROVAL OF THE DIRECTORS IS REQUIRED BE INCREASED FROM $100,000 TO $300,000 WITH A PROVISION FOR INDEXING;

(d) FOR SECURED LOANS TO INDIVIDUALS, THE MEANING OF "SECURITY" BE EXTENDED TO INCLUDE THE SECURITY OF MOVABLE PROPERTY, TANGIBLE OR INTANGIBLE, AS WELL AS THE GUARANTEES THAT MAY BE PROVIDED UNDER ANY ACT OF PARLIAMENT OF CANADA OR OF A PROVINCE;

(e) TO PERMIT THE LENDING OF MONEY TO ANY COMPANY INCORPORATED IN CANADA, SUBJECT TO THE APPROVAL OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS IF THE LOAN IS MADE WITHOUT SECURITY;

(f) TO EXEMPT NHA MORTGAGE LOANS WHEN COMPUTING THE PERMITTED RATIO OF TOTAL MORTGAGE LOANS TO TOTAL DEPOSIT LIABILITIES;

(g) FOR LOANS TO EMPLOYEES OF THE BANK, THE RESTRICTION BE LIMITED TO REQUIRING THE APPROVAL OF THE DIRECTORS WHEN THE AGGREGATE AMOUNT OF LOANS TO ANY ONE EMPLOYEE EXCEEDS THE ANNUAL SALARY FROM THE BANK OF THAT EMPLOYEE.

DIVISION III
BANK OF CANADA ACT

Several amendments have been made to the Bank of Canada Act. Some of these result from the proposed establishment of the Canadian Payments Association and the necessity of providing the Bank of Canada with the power to accept deposits from and make loans to non-bank members of the Association.

When Mr. Gerald K. Bouey appeared before your Committee on January 24, 1979 he summarized the need for these amendments as follows:

"The thrust of this group of amendments is to allow non-bank members of the CPA to effect their settlements with other members through the Bank of Canada in much the same way as central bank facilities are now used for this purpose by the chartered banks; that is, by making transfers between deposit accounts held at the Bank of Canada. The essential difference is that such deposit accounts held by the chartered banks, while available for making clearing settlements, are an integral part of the system of minimum cash reserve requirements, whereas in the case of non-bank members of the CPA these deposit accounts would be maintained for the purpose of clearing settlements only. It may, however, be only the larger near-banks which will choose to maintain such deposit accounts, since it is likely that only these institutions will have a sufficiently large volume of items to justify direct participation of the clearings. In any case, to put all members on an equal legal footing in this respect, it is proposed that the power of the Bank of Canada to accept deposits from banks be extended to include the acceptance of deposits from other members of the CPA. Likewise, any non-bank members which chooses to keep its clearing balance with the central bank will also need access to Bank of Canada lending facilities to provide a source of temporary credit when, as will occasionally happen, unexpectedly large clearing settlements occur. Thus, it is proposed that the Bank of Canada's power to make temporary loans and advances to banks be extended to permit similar credit facilities for non-banks. Since these changes would broaden the group of institutions with which the Bank could have direct dealings, it would accordingly seem desirable to adjust certain other provisions of the Act such as that relating to the eligibility of directors."

(Committee Proceedings, Jan. 24, 1979 page 18.6:)

Your Committee has no comments to make on the proposed amendments to the Bank of Canada Act.

DIVISION IV

CANADIAN PAYMENTS ASSOCIATION ACT

Part IV of Bill C-15 comprises the Act which will establish as a corporation the new Canadian Payments Association (CPA).

During examination of the Bill insofar as it pertains to the CPA your Committee had the benefit of evidence from the Inspector General of Banks and his staff and a number of interested organizations. The proposed Act to establish the CPA is the successor to certain provisions of the Canadian Bankers' Association Act passed July 7, 1900, under which the Canadian Bankers' Association was given the authority to establish clearing houses under the approval and surveillance of the Treasury Board.

Your Committee understands that the clearing house system presently in operation, through 78 years of experience, has developed an exemplary clearing system which serves the country well. It is apparently understood that in the initial stages of the operation of the new Act it is likely that the rules which will be adopted will, by and large, be those that are in place now. As appears hereunder it will be important, in the view of your Committee, to insure that in the enthusiasm of launching a new organization the operational lessons of the past are not altered in the interest of change alone.

The objects of the CPA are set out in section 53 of the Bill which states:

"The objects of the association are to establish and operate a national clearing and settlements system and to plan the evolution of the national payments system."

The clearing and settlement of cheques and other payment items drawn on the chartered banks and other financial institutions will be arranged by the CPA which will take over the present clearing and settlement operations between the banks and the Bank of Canada presently carried out by the Canadian Bankers' Association.

The Bill proposes that only banks chartered under the Bank Act, including foreign bank subsidiaries, savings banks to which the Quebec Savings Banks Act applies, and the Bank of Canada would be required to be members of the Association. Other financial institutions which accept deposits transferable by order, such as near-banks including trust companies, credit unions, caisses populaires and others, may belong on a voluntary basis provided they meet the requirements set out in Section 78 of the CPA Act which appear to be minimal.

The White Paper proposed that membership in the association and the maintenance of chartered bank type reserves with the Bank of Canada would be compulsory for all institutions which accept transferable deposits, including trust companies, loan companies, caisses populaires and credit unions (the two latter represented as to membership through their respective centrals). Your Committee in its report on the White Paper recommended against requiring near-banks to maintain cash reserves of the magnitude proposed in the White Paper for monetary control purposes but recommended that reserves be required of members of the CPA for clearing settlement purposes. Your Committee also recommended that all other requirements for reserves applicable to chartered banks remain in the Bank Act and not be incorporated in the proposed Canadian Payments Association Act. This recommendation has been followed in Bill C-15. However, Part IV of Bill C-15 does not require compulsory membership in the CPA by the near-banks which accept deposits transferable by order; this is contrary to the White Paper proposal and to your Committee's recommendation.

Your Committee continues to believe that reserves should be required of all members of the CPA for clearing settlement purposes through the mechanism of a Clearing Settlement Cash Reserve. The importance of maintaining such reserves was emphasized in his evidence by the Inspector General of Banks as follows: (Committee Proceedings Nov. 8, 1978, p. 3:32)

"As the Senate recognized in its report you absolutely have to have some kind of settlement balances to make the system work."

The amount of such reserve could be calculated by estimating a member's actual clearing settlement requirement or draw-down experience in the previous year plus an adjustment to provide for estimated growth. Also non-members of the Association clearing through a member should be required to deposit with the clearing member a clearing settlement cash reserve calculated on the same basis as for members. All clearing settlement cash reserves should be deposited with the CPA which should in turn deposit such reserves with the Bank of Canada.

In the course of the Committee's hearings representatives of the Canadian Cooperative Credit Society and Fédération des Caisses Populaires Désjardins indicated that it was the intention of these important and large credit union organizations to join the CPA under the conditions outlined in Part IV of Bill C-15.

The Canadian Bankers' Association, in its brief to your Committee indicated its disappointment that the legislation did not carry through the White Paper proposal to require all near-banks which accept deposits transferable by order to become members of the CPA and thus come within the monetary control of the banking system under the direct influence of the central bank. The bankers believe that an excellent opportunity has been missed at this decennial review of the banking legislation to prevent the growth of a two-tier financial system.

Mr. Gerald K. Bouey, Governor of the Bank of Canada, in his remarks to your Committee on January 24, 1979 (as noted, in the section of this report dealing with Part III—The Bank of Canada Act amendments) indicated that the power of the Bank of Canada to accept deposits is being extended to include the acceptance of deposits from non-bank members of the CPA and the granting of temporary credit facilities to them when unexpectedly large clearing settlements occur.

As a result of its studies your Committee has a number of recommendations to make concerning the Canadian Payments Association Act.

In its brief to your Committee concerning Part IV of Bill C-15 the Canadian Bankers' Association commented as follows:

"The two main aspects of the payments system—one the "clearings" and the other the "settlement"—call for essential but different attributes for success.

"The first requires the establishment, maintenance and enforcement of exacting standards for preparation and processing of masses of paper. This function is carried on mainly within the institutions. It is an expensive function, because of the use of staff time and advanced technology. Standards now in effect are those developed over many years by The Canadian Bankers' Association. They are exacting in detail and are rigorously enforced.

"The settlement function by contrast rests on the daily solvency of the institutions involved. If a bank or other cheque-issuing agency cannot meet its indebtedness to another organization for cheques issued against it and accepted by that other agency it is in serious trouble. In fact both organizations may be in serious trouble. Such situations have not created problems in the past because near-banks have been sponsored by a chartered bank which has in effect guaranteed their solvency. The chartered bank in turn has had access to the Bank of Canada as a lender of last resort if it faced a temporary shortage for any reason.

"It is not surprising that the prospect of replacing the present system with a new and untried set of arrangements gives the bankers some concern." (Brief C.B.A. pp. 38 and 39)"

Part IV of Bill C-15 provides that membership in the CPA is available to any institution which can establish that it meets the three tests of membership eligibility as set out in Subsection 52(2) which are generally as follows:

- 1) it is a central, a trust company, a loan company or any other institution other than a credit union that accepts deposits transferable by order to a third party; and
- 2) it meets the requirements of section 78 in that it is a member of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, or a member of the Canadian Co-Operative Credit Society Limited and has been granted a certificate under the Co-operative Credit Associations Act or has deposits made with it insured or guaranteed under a provincial enactment as therein set out; and
- 3) it is able to meet the requirements of the bylaws of the CPA.

The Act does not require that before being admitted to membership an applicant must be able to meet minimum standards of liquidity and financial stability upon which other members can rely with confidence as to the applicant's ability to meet its settlement obligations with the other members. In your Committee's opinion the Bill should include a requirement for all members to meet minimum standards of liquidity and financial soundness. In the initial instance this minimum standard should be developed by the present members of the Canadian Bankers Association (who are, by the terms of the Bill, automatically the first members of the CPA in any event) subject to the approval of the Inspector General of Banks and incorporated in the initial by-laws of the CPA. Future changes to such by-laws will be subject to approval of the members of the CPA voting in accordance with the provisions of the legislation. There are of course other aspects of the problem of assuring that members are able to meet the financial obligations of membership and these are covered in the recommendations which follow.

Even though the White Paper proposal that all near-banks which accept deposits transferable by order be members of the CPA is not now incorporated in the Bill, Sections 56 and 57 provide for eleven directors, one of which will be appointed by the Bank of Canada, and ten from four interest groups, namely banks, centrals, trust and loan companies, and other financial institutions. The number of directors in each class is distributed by regulation to the banks 5, centrals 2, trust and loan companies 2, and other financial institutions 1. The effect of this is to remove control of the Association's board of directors from the banks, whose current members will be substantially enlarged by the addition of Canadian subsidiaries of foreign banks as well as other financial institutions electing to incorporate as banks. The result is that non-bank members will have equal influence in spite of the fact that the present banks possess the practical experience gained from 78 years of operating the clearing system. The anomaly is underscored by the CBA who point out in their bill that banks are responsible for almost 90% of the volume of items and 98% of the value of all items cleared.

The Bill attempts to recognize this absence of control by the banks notwithstanding their continuing predominance in the clearing systems, by providing them with some protection flowing from the requirement that all member votes on penalties and operating and capital budgets will be in proportion to dues paid rather than in proportion to the number of directors elected. In addition the Bill contemplates that the Bank of Canada shall have a representative on the Board of Directors of the CPA who shall be the Chairman of the Board and who will have a casting vote. This is obviously a provision intended to provide a balance as between the interest groups represented on the Board.

Your Committee is of the opinion that, while the bankers are undoubtedly correct in their assertion that their interests, having in mind volumes and values of transactions, are inadequately protected in a numerical sense on the Board of the CPA, the provisions of the Bill above referred to should effectively insure that this new entity is launched within a reasonably democratic framework with adequate safeguards for the most meaningful interests involved without any one interest group being in a position of absolute control.

During our study of Bill C-15 your Committee received representations from the Consumers Association of Canada (CAC). The CAC expressed concern over the failure of the Canadian Payments Association Act and the Regulations as proposed to provide consumers at large with representation on the CPA's Board of Directors. The CAC believes that such consumers have a very direct interest in the CPA objective of planning of a national payments system and thus that they ought to have the right to appoint four members to the CPA Board in addition to the eleven called for under the Act. While your Committee appreciates the concerns of the CAC we believe the positions of all consumers are adequately protected by way of the authority assigned under the Bill to the Inspector General of Banks, the Governor in Council, the Bank of Canada, and by reason of the division of Board of Directors into four classes of membership.

Given removal of overall control from the banks and the need to maintain the implicit confidence of each member in the other in order to operate the CPA effectively your Committee is concerned that the by-laws of the Association may not adequately provide for the continuation of the present operating and administrative rules and procedures which are extremely detailed and important. As pointed out by the Inspector General of Banks in his testimony: (Committee Proceedings Nov. 8, 1978 3:9)

"Indeed, it is generally anticipated that, in the early days at least, the rules that will be adopted will, by and large, be those that are in place now. Those rules, of course, have been put in place by the Canadian Bankers Association. So, at least in the first instance there is not going to be very much change."

To ensure that the CPA maintains such continuity, stability and confidence your Committee believes that it would be advisable to require that the CPA continue the present clearing and settlement of payment rules for a specified period of time.

Finally, and in order to provide an appropriate mechanism for launching this important organization, your Committee is of the view that, consistent with its concept for the establishment of initial standards of liquidity and financial soundness, those institutions which will be required to be members of the CPA by law should establish, subject to the approval of the Bank of Canada, the formulae necessary to set Clearing Settlement Cash Reserves, such formulae to be included in the initial by-laws of the CPA. Thereafter, as experience dictates, the formulae can be altered or amended in accordance with the views of the Board of Directors.

RECOMMENDATIONS:

YOUR COMMITTEE MAKES THE FOLLOWING RECOMMENDATIONS:

1. THAT THOSE INSTITUTIONS WHICH, BY THE TERMS OF BILL C-15, ARE REQUIRED BY LAW TO BE MEMBERS OF THE CPA, ESTABLISH, SUBJECT TO THE APPROVAL OF THE INSPECTOR GENERAL OF BANKS, INITIAL MINIMUM STANDARDS OF

LIQUIDITY AND FINANCIAL SOUNDNESS FOR MEMBERSHIP IN THE CPA AND THAT APPLICANTS FOR MEMBERSHIP BE REQUIRED TO SATISFY THE DIRECTORS OF THE CPA OF THEIR ABILITY TO MEET SUCH STANDARDS, SUCH STANDARDS SHOULD BE INCORPORATED IN THE BY-LAWS OF THE CPA AND THEREAFTER THE DIRECTORS MAY ALTER, AMEND OR VARY SUCH STANDARDS FROM TIME TO TIME BY AMENDMENT TO THE BY-LAWS.

2. THAT PART IV OF BILL C-15 BE AMENDED SO THAT ALL MEMBERS OF THE CPA WILL BE REQUIRED TO MAINTAIN AN ACCOUNT WITH THE BANK OF CANADA, THAT THE BANK OF CANADA SHALL EXTEND TO ALL SUCH MEMBERS A LENDER OF LAST RESORT FACILITY, AND THAT SETTLEMENT FOR THE CLEARING BALANCES TAKE PLACE ON SUCH ACCOUNTS WITH THE BANK OF CANADA. FURTHER YOUR COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS THAT THE FOLLOWING PROPOSED PROVISION BE INCLUDED AS SECTION 78.1 OF PART IV (CANADIAN PAYMENTS ASSOCIATION ACT) OF BILL C-15 WHICH WOULD HAVE THE EFFECT, INTER ALIA, OF PERMITTING CHARTERED BANKS TO UTILIZE THEIR CASH RESERVES DEPOSITED WITH THE BANK OF CANADA FOR SETTLEMENT PURPOSES:

"78.1 Notwithstanding any provisions of this Act, a member shall maintain, for the purpose of settlement of payment items, such balances in the form of deposits in Canadian currency with the Bank of Canada as may be required by by-law, provided that where a member maintains a reserve in the form of deposits in Canadian currency with the Bank of Canada pursuant to the requirements of any statute, such deposits shall be deemed for purposes of any by-law referred to in this section to be balances maintained for the purpose of settlement of payment items, and if so required by by-law, a member shall have an agreement with the Bank of Canada entitling the member to borrow from the Bank of Canada such amounts as are required by by-law."

FURTHER YOUR COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS THAT THOSE INSTITUTIONS WHICH, BY THE TERMS OF THE BILL ARE REQUIRED BY LAW TO BE MEMBERS OF THE CPA, ESTABLISH, SUBJECT TO THE APPROVAL OF THE BANK OF CANADA, INITIAL FORMULAE FOR FIXING SUCH CLEARING SETTLEMENT CASH RESERVES. SUCH FORMULAE SHALL BE INCORPORATED IN THE BY-LAWS OF THE CPA AND THEREAFTER THE DIRECTORS OF THE CPA MAY ALTER, AMEND OR VARY SUCH FORMULAE, FROM TIME TO TIME BY AMENDMENT TO THE BY-LAWS.

3. THAT THE PROVISION OF SECTION 52(6) BE EXTENDED TO COVER, IN ADDITION TO CREDIT UNIONS, ANY DEPOSIT-TAKING INSTITUTION

SEEKING MEMBERSHIP IN THE CPA. THIS PROVISION SHOULD REQUIRE THE INSPECTOR GENERAL WORKING WITH HIS PROVINCIAL COUNTERPART IN THE CASE OF PROVINCIALLY INCORPORATED INSTITUTIONS, TO DETERMINE WHETHER AN INSTITUTION APPLYING FOR MEMBERSHIP IS SOLVENT AND TO DETERMINE WHETHER IT WILL BE ABLE TO COMPLY WITH THE CLEARING ARRANGEMENTS AND BY-LAWS OF THE ASSOCIATION.

4. THAT PART IV OF BILL C-15 BE AMENDED SO AS TO REQUIRE ALL MEMBERS OF THE CPA TO AUTHORIZE AND DIRECT AGENCIES, OTHER THAN THE INSPECTOR GENERAL OF BANKS, WHICH PERFORM ANNUAL INSPECTIONS, TO FURNISH TO THE INSPECTOR GENERAL OF BANKS THE RESULTS OF SUCH INSPECTIONS, TOGETHER WITH ANY INFORMATION WHICH MIGHT CAUSE SUCH AN AGENCY TO HAVE CONCERN FOR THE FINANCIAL STABILITY OF A DEPOSIT TAKING INSTITUTION UNDER ITS JURISDICTION.

5. THE CPA ACT BE AMENDED TO EMPOWER THE BOARD OF THE CPA TO SUSPEND A MEMBER WHERE THE MEMBER CEASES TO MEET THE REQUIREMENTS LAID DOWN IN THE ACT, REGULATIONS OR BY-LAWS. THE BOARD SHOULD FURTHER BE EMPOWERED TO EXPEL A MEMBER WHO PERSISTENTLY FAILS TO MEET THE REQUIREMENTS OF THE ACT, REGULATION OR BY-LAWS OF THE ASSOCIATION. A MEMBER AGAINST WHOM A SUSPENSION OR EXPULSION HAS BEEN EFFECTED UNDER THE BY-LAWS OF THE ASSOCIATION SHALL HAVE A RIGHT OF APPEAL TO THE INSPECTOR GENERAL OF BANKS AND THERE SHALL BE A FURTHER RIGHT OF APPEAL FROM THE INSPECTOR GENERAL TO THE FEDERAL COURT OF CANADA.

6. THAT THE ASSURANCES OF BACKING PROVIDED BY CLEARING AGENTS FOR ITEMS DRAWN ON THEIR CLIENT INSTITUTIONS SIMILAR TO THOSE PROVIDED UNDER ARTICLE 24 OF THE BY-LAWS OF THE CANADIAN BANKERS' ASSOCIATION BE INCORPORATED IN THE LEGISLATION OR REGULATIONS OF THE CPA.

7. THAT THE CPA ACT SHOULD REQUIRE THAT CENTRALS BE FINANCIALLY RESPONSIBLE FOR THE INSTRUMENTS OF THEIR MEMBER CREDIT UNIONS PRESENTED TO THEM IN THE CLEARING EXCHANGES IN THE SAME WAY AS BANKS AND OTHER FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS ARE RESPONSIBLE FOR ALL INSTRUMENTS DRAWN ON THEIR BRANCHES.

8. THAT SECTION 79 OF PART IV OF BILL C-15 BE AMENDED TO PROVIDE THAT THE DEFINITION OF "PRIORITY ITEM" BE EXTENDED TO COVER ALL INSTRUMENTS WRITTEN DIRECTLY OR INDIRECTLY ON A MEMBER OF THE CPA, WHETHER OR NOT THE ITEM IS PAYABLE TO ANOTHER MEMBER INITIALLY OR AS A RESULT OF ANY ENDORSEMENT.

9. THAT SECTION 77 OF PART IV OF BILL C-15 BE AMENDED TO READ: "EVERY MEMBER MAY PRESENT PAYMENT ITEMS AND SHALL ACCEPT AND ARRANGE FOR SETTLEMENT, IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE BY-LAWS AND THE RULES OF PAYMENT ITEMS DRAWN ON OR ISSUED BY ITSELF OR DRAWN ON A MEMBER FOR WHICH IT ACTS AS A CLEARING MEMBER."

10. THAT SECTION 50(1) OF PART IV OF BILL C-15 BE AMENDED SO AS TO PROVIDE NEW DEFINITIONS FOR "CENTRAL COOPERATIVE CREDIT SOCIETY", "LOCAL COOPERATIVE CREDIT SOCIETY" AND "FEDERATION OF COOPERATIVE CREDIT SOCIETIES" SO AS TO PROVIDE UNIFORMITY OF DEFINITIONS IN THE CANADIAN PAYMENTS ASSOCIATION ACT, THE BANK ACT, AND THE QUEBEC SAVINGS BANKS ACT.

11. THAT THE WORD "MAY" IN THE FIRST LINE OF SECTION 67(1) BE CHANGED TO "SHALL" TO REQUIRE THE ASSOCIATION TO MAKE BY-LAWS COVERING THE ITEMS LISTED IN SUB-SECTIONS (a) THROUGH (g) INCLUSIVE.

12. THAT HAVING REGARD TO THE DISTRIBUTION OF DIRECTORS BETWEEN THE FOUR CLASSES OF MEMBERS, SUB-SECTION 67(1) (a) OF PART IV OF BILL C-15 BE AMENDED SO AS TO PROVIDE FOR THE QUORUM OF A MEETING OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF THE ASSOCIATION TO BE ESTABLISHED BY THE BY-LAWS.

13. THAT SUBSECTION 71(1) BE AMENDED SO THAT THE BOARD SHOULD HAVE AN OPERATING AND CAPITAL BUDGET PREPARED FOR EACH FISCAL YEAR FOR SUBMISSION TO THE MEMBERS AT A MEETING TO BE CALLED SPECIFICALLY FOR THE CONSIDERATION OF THESE BUDGETS NO LATER THAN 2 MONTHS BEFORE THE BEGINNING OF THE FISCAL YEAR TO WHICH THE BUDGETS APPLY; THAT SECTION 72(1) BE SIMILARLY AMENDED, AND SECTION 73(1) AS A CONSEQUENCE BE AMENDED TO REMOVE THE REQUIREMENTS FOR BUDGETS TO BE CONSIDERED AT THE ANNUAL MEETING.

14. IN VIEW OF THE LONG EXPERIENCE OF BANKS IN OPERATING THE PRESENT CLEARING AND SETTLEMENTS SYSTEMS THE REGULATIONS PASSED PURSUANT TO THE CPA SHOULD INCLUDE A PROVISION ESTABLISHING A TWO YEAR TRANSITIONAL PERIOD DURING WHICH THE CURRENT ADMINISTRATIVE CONTROL POLICIES AND PROCEDURES PROVIDED TO THE CLEARING AND

SETTLEMENT SYSTEM BY THE CBA, THROUGH THE CHARTERED BANKS, SHALL BE MAINTAINED IN FORCE IN ORDER TO PERMIT AN ORDERLY PHASING-IN OF THE NEW ADMINISTRATIVE CONTROL POLICIES AND PROCEDURES OF THE CPA AND AS INSURANCE AGAINST UNFORESEEN DIFFICULTIES IN DEVELOPING AND IMPLEMENTING THE PROPOSED NEW ELECTRONIC FUNDS TRANSFER SYSTEM.

During the course of your Committee's consideration of Bill C-15 and prior to the completion of the within report, the Minister of Finance made available a set of proposed draft amendments covering a variety of subjects. In view of the fact that this document was in draft form, your Committee has considered these amendments only from the standpoint of the concept contained therein and not with a view to assessing the adequacy of the proposed statutory language. A study of the report will illustrate occasions where the concept has been reviewed by your Committee.

CONCLUSION:

Your Committee wishes to express its appreciation for the services rendered in the review of the bill by Messrs. John F. Lewis and David W. Scott.

Your Committee has examined and considered the subject-matter of Bill C-15 in accordance with its terms of reference and, except as noted above, has no comment to make on the Bill.

Respectfully submitted,

Salter A. Hayden,
Chairman.

APPENDIX "A"

(Amounts are in millions Dec. 31)	Amount of Conven- tional Residential Mortgage Outstand- ing	Banks' Deposits and Deben- tures	10% Limit	Percent of Limit	Excess Capacity
1967	$ 91	$22,703	$2270	4.0	$2179
1968	$ 212	$24,619	$2462	8.61	$2250
1969	$ 326	$27,376	$2738	11.91	$2412
1970	$ 357	$29,928	$2993	11.92	$2636
1971	$ 627	$35,801	$3580	17.51	$2953
1972	$ 958	$41,226	$4123	23.24	$3165
1973	$1674	$49,222	$4922	29.4	$3258
1974	$2707	$59,577	$5958	45.63	$3251
1975	$3496	$67,825	$6782	51.55	$3286
1976	$3802	$77,942	$7794	48.78	$3992
1977	$4590	$89,967	$8998	51.01	$4408

(SOURCE: Bank of Canada Review)

APPENDIX "C"

MAJOR LENDERS' PERCENTAGE SHARE OF APPROVALS FOR RESIDENTIAL MORTGAGE NEW AND EXISTING HOUSING

TOTAL	Banks*	Trust and Mortgage Loan Co.*	Life Insurance Companies	CMHC	Other Lending Institu- tions* **
	%	%	%	%	%
1967	9.2	33.9	25.3	29.3	2.3
1968	15.0	39.6	23.9	17.6	3.9
1969	12.3	48.0	14.5	20.5	4.7
1970	16.2	41.8	7.1	30.5	4.4
1971	24.2	46.9	9.3	16.1	3.5
1972	27.3	49.8	9.6	9.9	3.4
1973	29.5	52.2	10.0	6.0	2.3
1974	28.1	49.5	8.3	12.2	1.9
1975	27.5	51.4	7.4	11.3	2.4
1976	20.1	54.0	11.0	5.4	3.5
1977	30.8	53.3	10.8	2.3	2.8

* Approvals by mortgage affiliates of Chartered Banks are included with Trust and Mortgage Loan Companies.

 Quebec Savings Banks, Mutual Benefit and Fraternal Societies.

APPENDIX "B"

APPROVALS FOR RESIDENTIAL MORTGAGES $ MILLIONS NEW AND EXISTING HOUSING

TOTAL	Banks*	Trust and Mortgage Loan Co.*	Life Ins. Co.	CMHC	Other Lending Institu- tions	Total
1967	$230	$841	$629	$727	$57	$2484
1968	429	1138	687	505	113	2872
1969	365	1425	432	608	139	2969
1970	493	1277	217	932	134	3053
1971	1104	2143	427	738	159	4571
1972	1486	2708	523	535	183	5435
1973	2188	3872	743	445	168	7416
1974	1902	3358	560	824	131	6775
1975	2786	5214	749	1150	249	10148
1976	2811	5826	1186	580	379	10782
1977	4604	7973	1610	352	422	14961

* Approvals by mortgage affiliates of Chartered Banks are included with Trust and Mortgage Loan Companies.

 Quebec Savings Banks, Mutual Benefit and Fraternal Societies.

Source: Lending Institutions: CMHC released B30-34, B47-51 CMHC: Bank of Canada Review

APPENDIX "D"

APPENDIX "E"

RESIDENTIAL MORTGAGES OUTSTANDING
$ MILLIONS
December 31

	Banks Including Mortgage Affiliates*	Trust and Mortgage Co. ex Bank Affil.*	Quebec Savings Banks	CMHC	Total Selected Lenders	Life Insurance Co. & Fraternal Benefit Societies	Total "Lend- ing" Institu- tions
1967	$954	$3832	$241	$3182	$8209
1968	1209	4197	253	3533	9192
1969	1601	4797	269	3905	10572
1970	1899	5459	306	4379	12043
1971	2854	6195	321	4971	14341
1972	4122	7392	341	5423	17278
1973	5727	9333	388	5658	21106
1974	7407	11202	450	6194	25253
1975	9478	13214	515	6829	30036
1976	11444	15842	618	7427	35331	$5702	$41033
1977	14896	18794	671	7735	42096	6293	48389

PERCENTAGE SHARE OF RESIDENTIAL MORTGAGE
HOLDINGS OF SELECTED LENDERS

	Banks	Trust and Mortgage Co.	Quebec Savings Banks	CMHC
	%	%	%	%
1967	11.6	46.7	2.9	38.8
1968	13.2	45.7	2.7	38.4
1969	15.1	45.4	2.5	36.9
1970	15.8	45.3	2.5	36.4
1971	19.9	43.2	2.2	34.7
1972	23.9	42.8	2.0	31.4
1973	27.1	44.2	1.9	26.8
1974	29.3	44.4	1.8	24.5
1975	31.5	44.1	1.7	22.7
1976	32.4	44.8	1.8	21.0
1977	35.4	44.6	1.6	18.4

PERCENTAGE SHARE OF RESIDENTIAL MORTGAGES
HOLDINGS OF "LENDING" INSTITUTIONS

	Banks	Trust and Mortgage Co.	Quebec Savings Banks	CMHC	Life Insurance Co. & Fraternal Benefit Societies
	%	%	%	%	%
1976	27.9	38.6	1.5	18.1	13.9
1977	30.8	38.8	1.4	16.0	13.0

Sources: Banks and QSB: Bank of Canada Review; Trust, Mortgage and Life Insurance Companies: Statistics Canada, Financial Statistics; CMHC: Canadian Housing Statistics.

*Note on figures prior to 1972 for Banks and Trust and Mortgage Companies: estimates were used for the non-residential portion of outstandings, and mortgage affiliates of the Banks were estimated from figures for individual companies.

SCHEDULE I

APPROVALS OF RESIDENTIAL MORTGAGES
EXCLUDING CMHC MORTGAGES

	(MILLIONS)
	TOTAL	BANKS*	TRUST AND LOAN CO.	OTHER
1967	$ 1,757	$ 230	$ 841	$ 686
1968	$ 2,367	$ 429	$ 1,138	$ 800
1969	$ 2,361	$ 365	$ 1,425	$ 571
1970	$ 2,121	$ 493	$ 1,277	$ 351
1971	$ 3,833	$ 1,104	$ 2,143	$ 586
1972	$ 4,900	$ 1,486	$ 2,708	$ 716
1973	$ 6,971	$ 2,188	$ 3,872	$ 911
1974	$ 5,951	$ 1,902	$ 3,358	$ 691
1975	$ 8,998	$ 2,786	$ 5,214	$ 998
1976	$10,202	$2,811	$5,826	$1,565
1977	$14,609	$4,604	$7,972	$2,033

SCHEDULE II

COMPARISONS OF PROPORTION OF MARKET
SHARES APPROVALS OF RESIDENTIAL MORTGAGES
(EXCLUDING CMHC MORTGAGES)

	BANKS	TRUST AND LOAN CO.	OTHER
1967	13.09%	47.87%	39.04%
1968	18.12%	48.08%	33.80%
1969	15.46%	60.36%	24.18%
1970	23.24%	60.21%	16.55%
1971	28.80%	55.91%	15.29%
1972	30.33%	55.27%	14.60%
1973	31.39%	55.54%	13.07%
1974	31.96%	56.43%	11.61%
1975	30.96%	57.95%	11.09%
1976	27.55%	57.11%	15.34%
1977	31.51%	54.58%	13.91%

Sources: Bank of Canada Review; CMHC: Canadian Housing Statistics; Trust Mortgage and Life Insurance Companies; Statistics Canada.

* Statistics for Banks Include Mortgage Loan Companies Owned by Banks.

THE SENATE

Friday, March 16, 1979

The Senate met at 2 p.m., Hon. Maurice Bourget, P.C., Speaker pro tem, in the Chair.
Prayers.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem informed the Senate that he had received the following communication:

RIDEAU HALL
OTTAWA
GOVERNMENT HOUSE

March 16, 1979

Madam,

I have the honour to inform you that His Excellency the Governor General of Canada will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 16th day of March, at 4.15 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to a Bill.

I have the honour to be,
Madam,
Your obedient servant,
Edmond Joly de Lotbinière
Administrative Secretary to the
Governor General

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate,
Ottawa.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN COMMONS MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Speaker pro tem informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the name of Mr. Kempling had been substituted for that of Mr. Hnatyshyn on the list of members appointed to serve on the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Langlois tabled:

Report, dated February 1979, of the Law Reform Commission of Canada entitled "Theft and Fraud", pursuant to section 18 of the Law Reform Commission Act, Chapter 23 (1st Supplement), R.S.C., 1970.
The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 4.10 p.m. the sitting was resumed.
The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

At 4.15 o'clock His Excellency the Governor General proceeded to the Senate chamber and took his seat upon the Throne. His Excellency was pleased to command the attendance of the House of Commons, and, that House being come, with their Speaker, His Excellency was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the following bill:

An Act to amend the National Housing Act and the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act and to make other related amendments.

The House of Commons withdrew.
His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

LEGAL AND CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

COMMITTEE AUTHORIZED TO MEET DURING SITTING OF THE SENATE

Leave having been granted to proceed to Notices of Motions:

Senator Petten, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), moved:

That the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs have power to sit while the Senate is sitting on Tuesday, March 20, 1979, and that rule 76(4) be suspended in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to.

● (1630)

Senator Grosart: Before the honourable senator proceeds to other business I would ask if he has received notice that another committee wishes to meet while the Senate is sitting next Tuesday?

Senator Petten: There is no other motion that a committee be allowed to meet while the Senate is sitting, but there will be other committees meeting on Tuesday. I will mention them when I move the adjournment motion.

Senator Grosart: I ask that question because there is one other committee that I know has scheduled a meeting for Tuesday at 3.30 p.m., at which two ministers and their officials will be present. I have reason to believe that had the chairman known that the Senate would not be sitting on Monday night, he would have moved a similar motion on behalf of the National Finance Committee. I have been in communication with him on another matter, and that was his assumption. I am wondering, not having had written notice, if I might have leave of the Senate to dispense with the notice, and, on behalf of Senator Everett, move a similar motion, notwithstanding rule 45(1)(a), to allow the National Finance Committee to meet, if necessary, while the Senate is sitting on Tuesday.

Senator Petten: I do not object to that. I note that the list of Senate committee meetings for next week indicates that the National Finance Committee will be meeting at 3.30 p.m. on Tuesday. Are you now suggesting that the committee not meet at 3.30 p.m.?

Senator Grosart: That is my only reason for raising the matter.

Senator Petten: I have no objection.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

ADJOURNMENT

Senator Petten: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday next, March 20, 1979, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Before the question is put, I should like to give a brief outline of our work for next week. On Tuesday evening we will be dealing with items on the Order Paper, and Senator Hayden will call the attention of the Senate to the report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce on the subject matter of Bill C-15, the Banks and Banking Law Revision Act, notice of which was given yesterday. I am informed that Bill C-42, the Energy Supplies Emergency Bill, will receive third reading in the other place early next week, and that a supply bill may be passed later in the week.

The committee schedule for next week is as follows: On Tuesday the Special Committee on the Constitution will hold an in camera meeting at 10.30 a.m. The Special Committee on Retirement Age Policies will meet at 2 p.m.; the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance will meet at 3.30 p.m. to review the recommendations contained in its report on the accommodation program of the Department of Public Works; and the Standing Senate Committee on Agriculture will also meet at 3.30 p.m. to consider Bill S-13, the Beef Import Bill. The subcommittee of the Standing Senate Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs dealing with off-track betting will meet at 8.30 p.m., and it is my understanding that the minister will appear before the committee at that time.

On Wednesday, the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce will meet at 9.30 a.m. and 2.30 p.m., and the Standing Senate Committee on National Finance will hold an in camera meeting when the Senate rises.

On Thursday, the Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee will meet at 9.30 a.m., also at 9.30 a.m. the National Finance Committee will meet to continue its examination of the DREE estimates, and the Agriculture Committee will meet to consider Bill S-13, the Beef Import Bill. The Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments has scheduled a meeting for 11 a.m. on Thursday.

Honourable senators, Senator Grosart asked me whether I had any objection to another committee meeting while the Senate is sitting. I have no objection to it, unless another committee has already scheduled a meeting that I do not know of. As you know, we cannot have more than two committees meeting while the Senate is sitting.

Senator Grosart: Perhaps I should just say that the information I have now would make that motion unnecessary.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, March 20, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, March 20, 1979

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Report of the Canadian Human Rights Commission for the calendar year 1978, pursuant to section 47(1) of the Canadian Human Rights Act, Chapter 33, Statutes of Canada, 1976-77.

Reports of the Administrator under the Anti-Inflation Act, dated March 14, 1979, pursuant to section 17(3) of the said Act, Chapter 75, Statutes of Canada, 1974-75-76, regarding the following references:

1. Rural Municipality of Ritchot, St. Adolphe, Manitoba.
2. Board of Education for the City of London, Ontario.
3. Corporation of the Town of Alexandria, Ontario.

Reports of operations under the Fisheries Development Act for the fiscal years ended March 31, 1976, 1977 and 1978, pursuant to section 10 of the said Act, Chapter F-21, R.S.C., 1970.

Reports of the Anti-Inflation Board to the Governor in Council, dated March 16, 1979, pursuant to section 17(2) of the Anti-Inflation Act, Chapter 75, Statutes of Canada, 1974-75-76, reporting its reference to the Administrator of the said Act of certain proposed changes in compensation plans, as follows:

1. The Canadian Red Cross Society and its Montreal laboratory technologists, represented by the Union of Laboratory Technologists of the Red Cross (CNTU).
2. The Canadian National Institute for the Blind and certain of its Saskatchewan South-District employees, represented by the Saskatchewan Insurance, Office and Professional Employees Union, Local 397.
3. Transport D'Anjou Inc. and its employees represented by La Fraternité canadienne des Cheminots, employés des transports et autres ouvriers Local 520.

PUBLIC BILLS

SUSPENSION OF RULES—NOTICE OF MOTION

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I give notice that tomorrow, Wednesday, March 21, 1979, I will move:

That until Friday, April 13, 1979, rules 44, 45 and 78 be suspended insofar as they relate to public bills.

Senator Flynn: Not again. Oh, la, la!

Senator Perrault: Routine.

Senator Flynn: Routine? I have heard that before. You should start to worry about that. Don't try that again.

Senator Langlois: Another threat.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

PROTECTION AGAINST SPILLS FROM OIL TANKERS—QUESTION

Senator Marshall: Honourable senators, the breakup of the British oil tanker Kurdistan in the Cabot Strait focuses attention on the increasing number of incidents of potential oil spills. In view of the danger that exists because foreign vessels lack adequate protective measures, and because of the serious threat to Atlantic Canada's fisheries, as well as to other aspects of the environment, would the Leader of the Government inquire as to what the government intends to do by way of establishing guidelines to ensure that vessels transporting oil in Canadian waters meet adequate protective standards?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the question will be taken as notice. As Senator Marshall knows, the situation is now under review by the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment.

Senator Marshall: I have a supplementary question. In view of the repeated incidents that have taken place, would the leader also inquire as to whether the government intends to establish a Canadian capability to transport oil in Canadian waters in order to ensure the protection of our environment?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, that additional question will be taken as notice.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Honourable senators, I have a question that is also related to the breakup of the British oil tanker Kurdistan. Has a decision yet been made by the government as to what disposition will be attempted of the two component parts of the tanker?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I will hopefully have the specifics available for tomorrow afternoon.

PUBLIC BILLS

SUSPENSION OF RULES—QUESTION

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, in view of the notice given by the Leader of the Government relating to the suspension of certain rules until April 13, I would ask him to explain the reasons why he wants to impose closure on the Senate for the next three weeks.

What has happened in the Senate as far as the opposition is concerned—certainly not as far as the government side is concerned—that would justify the imposition of closure in the way that is suggested.

Senator Langlois: It is not closure.

Senator Flynn: If it is not closure, what is it?

An Hon. Senator: We are forcing you to work for a change.

Senator Flynn: Did I hear you correctly, Senator Haidasz? I heard you, but it was not very intelligible, I must say.

Senator Haidasz: Read Hansard tomorrow.

Senator Flynn: I will. I hope Hansard heard it.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I suggest that the question of the Leader of the Opposition is out of order. I have given my notice of motion this evening, and there will be a full opportunity to debate that motion tomorrow. We are now in Question Period when honourable senators may exercise the right to direct questions on relevant matters. We are not debating the proposed motion at this time.

Senator Flynn: I am asking the Leader of the Government if there is any reason for his giving this notice of motion.

Senator Perrault: I will be pleased to set forth some of the reasons tomorrow.

Senator Flynn: Not all!

Senator Perrault: Events may transpire between now and tomorrow which remove the necessity for this kind of motion.

Senator Flynn: I have gone through this exercise before.

FISHERIES

ADVERSE PUBLICITY OF SEAL HUNT—UNITED STATES CONGRESSIONAL RESOLUTION—QUESTION

Senator Marshall: Honourable senators, even though the seal hunt is drawing to a close, a Canadian Press story indicates that United States Congressman Jack Kemp is promoting a resolution expressing the need to protect vulnerable species of animals as one of the reasons why Canada should re-examine its policy in allowing the hunt.

I wonder if the Leader of the Government would obtain the reaction of the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment to this report and ascertain why such a thing gets Canadian Press recognition, especially in light of the fact that in June and July the Americans will be conducting a seal hunt in Alaska. This type of resolution is certainly hypocritical and falsely represents Canadians to the people of the United States. Would the Leader of the Government find out what the reaction has been?

Senator Perrault: The question will be taken as notice. All honourable senators are aware of and understand the deep interest on the part of Senator Marshall in the seal hunt and in other matters relating to conservation. Indeed, all senators are interested in these important questions.

[Senator Flynn.]

As far as conservation is concerned, we can point with pride to the fact that Canada provides one of the few havens remaining today for the greatly endangered American bald eagle. We can take great satisfaction in the fact that our country provides a key sanctuary and refuge for this magnificent bird—proud symbol of our American friends to the south.

ENERGY

PROPOSED NUCLEAR FUSION RESEARCH PROJECT—QUESTION

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, I have a question for the Leader of the Government. In light of the many press reports of the last few weeks to the effect that the United States and West Germany are considering a nuclear fusion program in Canada, I will ask the Leader of the Government to determine whether the Government of Canada has been approached officially by any foreign country to determine whether Canada is prepared to host a major study in nuclear fusion.

Also, would the Leader of the Government advise us as to whether the Provinces of Quebec and/or British Columbia have approached the federal government with the suggestion—

Senator Flynn: Which one do you want it to be in?

Senator Austin: —with the suggestion that they be the recipient provinces of such a program?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the question is an important one. I understand that there has been interest.

Senator Flynn: Not the question; the problem.

Senator Perrault: While the question must be taken as notice, I understand that there has been interest expressed on the part of more than one country in the idea of having Canada designated as the site for a proposed world-scale nuclear fusion project. Among other factors, I understand that Canada's abundant supply of energy is an attraction. I understand that a project of this kind could only proceed in an area blessed with great amounts of low-cost power.

• (2010)

I understand that there have been some informal intergovernmental conversations with respect to the matter, but apparently there have been no meetings convened in Ottawa on the subject of this proposed fusion project.

Senator Haidasz: By way of a supplementary question, may I ask the leader whether the government has received any representations from Ontario, the greatest repository of uranium and nuclear science in the world, to have this nuclear fusion institute established in that province?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I must take the question as notice. I speak only from a peripheral knowledge of the contacts which have been made to this time. I understand, however, that there have been informed conversations at a high level between Canada and the United States. At least it is my understanding that the subject has been broached for initial discussion.

Senator Flynn: Saskatchewan might be interested.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

CANADA-NEWFOUNDLAND FORESTRY SUBSIDIARY AGREEMENT—QUESTION ON THE ORDER PAPER ANSWERED

Question No 12—By Senator Marshall:

1. What are the details of the expenditure of 8.4 million dollars under the announced extension to the Canada-Newfoundland Forestry Subsidiary Agreement?

2. What is the location of the half-million acres of underutilized freehold forest land purchased by the Newfoundland government through the agreement?

3. Where are the resource roads located that have been built to permit easier access to timber stands for harvesting, insect control and management?

4. In what areas is experimentation taking place with cable logging technology to remove timber from steep slopes and the integrated logging program?

5. In what areas have tree nurseries been established?

6. Under forest fire control, where are water bombers now stationed and where will the added water bombers be stationed?

Reply by the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion:

1. The $8.4 million will be spent on the continuation of the program undertaken under the Canada-Newfoundland Forestry Subsidiary Agreement as follows:

Forest Management	$90,000
Harvesting and Utilization	449,000
Access Roads	3,052,940
Forest Inventory	831,500
Forest Protection	550,600
Forest Improvement	1,505,200
Administration	952,600
Total	$8,431,840

2. Twenty-seven lots (181,781 acres) are located between Come-by-Chance and Port Blandford; four lots (79,867 acres) in the Terra Nova area; four lots (53,024 acres) in the Gambo-Freshwater Bay area; two lots (40,071 acres) in Bay of Exploits; two lots (35,999 acres) at Gaff Topsail; one lot (41,431 acres) on the north side of the Bay of Islands; one lot (14,528 acres) in the St. Barbe district; and one lot (18,496 acres) in the Baie Verte-White Bay area.

3. Resource roads are located as follows:

Eastern Region	84 miles
Central Region	275 miles
Western Region	286 miles
Labrador Region	50 miles
Salvage	68 miles
Total	763 miles

4. Cable logging experimentation has been taking place since the introduction of the Can-Car Ecologger to South West Brook in 1975. The 1976 trials were carried out near Red Indian Lake on Price Ltd. areas in the Costigan River Valley. During the 1977 trials, the Ecologger worked for a period of time near Costigan River and then was re-located in Tulk's Brook Valley, southwest of Red Indian Lake. In 1978, the Ecologger was transferred to an area of Bowater's operations southwest of Grand and Little Grand Lakes and continued its trials during 1978. A new Scottish machine called the Smith Timbermaster was introduced on Price limits in Tulk's Brook Valley.

The integrated logging was not practiced as a specific field project. However, efforts were made to contact and convince the pulp and paper companies as well as sawmillers to start integrated logging to produce both pulpwood and sawlogs. In fact, approximately 13 sawmillers are now producing both pulpwood and sawlogs in their harvesting operations.

5.

(i) One nursery is located at Woodale near Bishop's Falls on the bank of Peters River;

(ii) A second nursery is located at Mount Pearl near St. John's;

(iii) A third nursery is located near Goose Bay in Labrador.

6. Deployment of water bombers is determined by the Province. The water bomber fleet is deployed as follows during the fire season: Goose Bay—2, Deer Lake—1, Gander—3, St. John's—1.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

PENSION—CANADIAN FORCES LONG SERVICE PENSIONERS' ASSOCIATION—QUESTION ON THE ORDER PAPER ANSWERED

Question No. 32—By Senator Marshall:

What action has the Government of Canada taken on recommendations submitted by the Canadian Forces Long Service Pensioners' Association for improving the status of service personnel, viz:

- the establishment of a funded pension plan,
- equality with the Federal Public Service,
- establishment of Canadian Armed Forces Technical College,
- broadening of the veteran's status,
- improvement of widow's status, and
- establishment of a Ministry of Pensions?

Reply by the President of the Privy Council:

I am informed by the Departments of National Defence and Veterans Affairs as follows:

The Association has been informed by DND of the following points:

(a) There are no plans to change the funding arrangements set out in the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act (CFSA) at present. Also, there is no anticipated change in the current formula for calculating widows' allowance under CFSA.

(b) All vacancies within the federal public service are to be made available to servicemen. However, Canadian Forces personnel are subject to the hiring guidelines determined by the Public Service Commission.

(c) The establishment of a Canadian Armed Forces Technical College is considered neither desirable nor cost effective at present. However, DND is achieving success in its continuing efforts with provincial associations of technicians and technologists to have Canadian Forces qualification recognized and accredited.

(e) See part (a) above.

(f) The Minister of National Defence is responsible for the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act.

Insofar as the Department of Veterans Affairs is concerned:

(d) Representations by the Association concerning the broadening of the veteran status have been reviewed. The provisions of the veterans legislation were designed to recognize short-term service in the armed forces and in certain civilian activities during war. Considerations relating to that type of service differ significantly from those which apply to career-oriented service in peacetime, recognizing at the same time that the latter represents public service of a high order. Because of the basic difference between the two types of service, there is no intention at the present time to broaden the terms of eligibility for veterans benefits based on wartime contributions to the national interest.

PENSIONERS' TRAINING—QUESTION ON THE ORDER PAPER ANSWERED

Question No. 45—By Senator Marshall:

Are veterans still entitled to pensioners' training and, if so, how many were under training from (a) 1 April 1977 to 31 March 1978 and (b) 1 April 1978 to 31 December 1978?

Reply by the Minister of Veterans Affairs:

Assistance under the Pensioners' Training Regulations is still available to disability pensioners.

(a) 7.

(b) 6.

CANADIAN VETERANS OUTSIDE CANADA—QUESTION ON THE ORDER PAPER ANSWERED

Question No. 46—By Senator Marshall:

Does the Department of Veterans Affairs have any staff providing assistance to Canadian veterans in countries other than Canada, and, if so, provide the numbers of that staff by program and location, together with the numbers of cases being administered?

Reply by the Minister of Veterans Affairs:

The Department of Veterans Affairs does not employ any staff outside of Canada for the purpose of administering assistance to Canadian veterans living abroad.

[Senator Marshall.]

PENSION ACT

7,549 recipients of war disability pension live outside of Canada. The Administration of these pensions is handled by the Canadian Pension Commission, Head Office, Ottawa, Ontario.

WAR VETERANS AND CIVILIAN WAR ALLOWANCES

898 recipients of War Veterans Allowance and Civilian War Allowance live outside of Canada. The administration of these allowances is handled by a Foreign Countries District Authority located in the Ottawa District Office (staff of two with assistance from Ottawa Veterans Allowance District Authority when needed).

TREATMENT

There is a Head Office staff of eleven persons who administer all aspects of treatment benefits including those receiving benefits outside of Canada.

SERVICES OF PENSIONS ADVOCATES

Applicants in the United States are provided service through the Ottawa District Office. This office has three persons and they submit approximately twelve claims per month on behalf of such applicants.

Applicants living outside Canada and the United States are provided service through the North Bay District Office. This office has two persons and they submit approximately eight claims per month.

At Head Office there is a staff of 15 persons who administer all aspects of pension claims, including those from applicants residing outside Canada.

ASSISTANCE TO DISTRESSED OR NEEDY VETERANS—QUESTION ON THE ORDER PAPER ANSWERED

Question No. 47—By Senator Marshall:

How many veterans classified in distressed or needy circumstances were assisted, and what was the total amount of assistance given from (a) 1 April 1977 to 31 March 1978, and (b) 1 April 1978 to 31 December 1978?

Reply by the Minister of Veterans Affairs:

(a) WVA/CWA recipients assisted—31 March 1978

WVA		CWA		Total
Veterans	Widows Orphans	Civilians	Widows Orphans
51,442	39,321	3,230	1,228	95,221

Of these 28,184 were Assistance Fund recipients.

(b) WVA/CWA recipients assisted—31 December 1978

WVA		CWA		Total
Veterans	Widows Orphans	Civilians	Widows Orphans
51,210	39,304	3,219	1,254	94,987

Of these 26,814 were Assistance Fund recipients.

(a) WVA/CWA Expenditures

Period	WVA	CWA	Total
1-4-77 to 31-3-78	$204,668,155	$11,310,397	$215,978,552
1-4-78 to 31-12-78	$166,227,197	$ 9,045,608	$175,272,805

(b) Assistance Fund Expenditures

Period	WVA	CWA	Total
1-4-77 to 31-3-78	$ 12,365,455	$ 875,824	$ 13,241,279
1-4-78 to 31-12-78	$ 9,461,278	$ 667,232	$ 10,128,510

CHILDREN OF WAR DEAD (EDUCATION ASSISTANCE) ACT—
QUESTION ON THE ORDER PAPER ANSWERED

Question No. 50—By Senator Marshall:

1. Under the Children of War Dead (Education Assistance) Act, how many children of veterans were enrolled in educational programs from (a) 1 April 1977 to 31 March 1978, and (b) as of 31 December 1978?

2. By what means does the Department of Veterans Affairs bring to the attention of veterans the benefits under the foregoing Act?

Reply by the Minister of Veterans Affairs:

1. (a) 704.

(b) 631.

2. Following awards of pensions to widows and orphans by the Canadian Pension Commission, the deceased veteran's departmental files are reviewed to determine if there are children who may be eligible for benefits under the Children of War Dead (Education Assistance) Act. This information is then passed to our District Offices, who in turn contact the surviving parent or guardian and orphan to acquaint them with the assistance available, and to assist them to make the best possible use of the opportunities provided by the legislation.

VETERANS STILL ELIGIBLE FOR RE-ESTABLISHMENT CREDIT—
QUESTION ON THE ORDER PAPER ANSWERED

Question No. 51—By Senator Marshall:

1. How many veterans are still eligible for Re-establishment Credit?

2. How many veterans who were eligible for Re-establishment Credit have balances unexpended and what is the balance as of 31 December 1978?

Reply by the Minister of Veterans Affairs:

1. This information is not available because of the relationship between extant eligibility for Re-establishment Credits and the cancellation of Certificates of Qualification or termination of contracts under the Veterans' Land Act.

2. This information is not available because it is not known what Veterans' Land Act contracts are expected to terminate and where benefits received under the Veterans' Land Act are deemed to be less than the amount of credit the veteran would have been eligible for under the War Service Grants Act.

WVA/CWA APPLICATIONS—QUESTION ON THE ORDER PAPER ANSWERED

Question No. 52—By Senator Marshall:

1. How many applications were handled by the War Veterans Allowances Board from

(a) 1 April 1977 to 31 March 1978 and

(b) 1 April 1978 to 31 December 1978, by Regional Office?

2. Does the Regional Officer have the authority to approve applications for WVA/CWA allowances?

3. Under what circumstances does an application for WVA/CWA allowances have to be forwarded to Central Headquarters for decision?

Reply by the Minister of Veterans Affairs:

1. The War Veterans Allowance Board does not handle applications.

2. Although Regional Directors have been appointed, the Regional Offices are not yet fully operational and all WVA/CWA applications are still being adjudicated upon by District Authorities. It is intended that Regional Directors have this authority.

3. None. Departmental Headquarters is not involved in the adjudication of WVA/CWA applications.

VETERANS HOUSING ASSISTANCE PROGRAM—QUESTION ON THE ORDER PAPER ANSWERED

Question No. 54—By Senator Marshall:

1. How many applications were received by the Veterans' Land Administration from individual veterans and veterans organizations, by year, since the inception of the Veterans Housing Assistance Program (VHOP) and low rental housing?

2. How many grants were (a) approved
(b) turned down?

3. What was the amount of the average grant?

4. How many homes, by type, were built by

(a) individual veterans, and

(b) veterans organizations?

5. Is it the intention to continue the program and, if not, why not?

6. Is any consideration being given to initiating a Home Repair (RRAP) program for veterans, and, if not, why not?

Reply by the Minister of Veterans Affairs:

1. Individual Veterans—AHOP/VHAP

Applications for grant assistance under the Veterans Housing Assistance Program (VHAP) are made concurrently with applications for assistance under CMHC's Assisted Home Ownership Program, (AHOP) and the applications are forwarded to CMHC offices for processing. As VLA only receives notice of those veterans whose applications have been approved, we have no way of knowing the gross number of applications which may have been made.

Veterans Organizations—(VHAP Low-Rental Housing Applications Received)

April 1975—March 1976—6

April 1976—March 1977—4

April 1977—March 1978—4

April 1978—Jan. 1979—0

2. Individual Veterans—AHOP/VHAP

(a) From inception of the VHA Program in 1975, grants have been approved on behalf of 256 veteran applicants.

(b) As stated in question 1 above, applications for VHAP grants are processed through various CMHC offices across Canada. We have no means to determine how many applicants may have been turned down.

Veterans Organizations—VHAP—Low-Rental Housing

Since inception of the low-rental provisions of the VHA Program in 1975, 14 applications have been received requesting grant assistance. Of these, one was declined outright before approval, one was cancelled after approval as veteran occupancy requirements could not be met, and a third was terminated by the applicant. As of this date, 11 projects have either been completed or are under construction.

3. Individual Veterans—VHAP

The average grant to individual veterans under VHAP is $492.00 per annum.

The average grant to veterans organizations under the low-rental provision of VHAP for the 11 approved projects is $149,612.00.

4. (a) 256 individual veterans have been established under VHAP since inception. We cannot, however, distinguish between those houses constructed by veteran applicants and those purchased ready built.

(b) The 11 low-rental projects under VHAP constructed or acquired under sponsorship of veterans organizations include:

1—100 bed hostel residence

9—apartment complexes (totalling 586 units)

1—complex of 20 duplexes (40 units)

5. Continuation of the Veterans Housing Assistance Program (VHAP) has had to be reassessed in light of significant changes to the lending policies of CMHC, particularly as they affect their AHOP and low-rental housing programs. The situation is now under active review and a decision as to the future of VHAP may be expected in the near future.

6. There is no consideration being given by my Department to initiate a RRAP type program for veterans.

As has been stated on several occasions, it is considered that the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program (RRAP) administered by CMHC contains all the provisions necessary to meet the home repair needs of veterans in Canada. There is no reasonable basis for DVA to supplant or supplement the excellent provisions of the RRAP program particularly in light of the government's intent to avoid duplication and the attendant high costs.

COMMONWEALTH WAR GRAVES COMMISSION—QUESTION ON THE ORDER PAPER ANSWERED

Question No. 55—By Senator Marshall:

1. Where are the Canadian cemeteries and battlefield memorials located in Canada and Europe which are being maintained by the Commonwealth War Graves Commission?

2. How much money was expended by Canada for maintenance and care from

(a) 1 April 1977 to 31 March 1978 and

(b) 1 April to 31 December 1978?

3. Are any Canadians on the staff of the CWGC, and by whom are they paid?

Reply by the Minister of Veterans Affairs:

1. The Canadian casualties for the First and Second World Wars total 109,980 and are buried or commemorated on memorials to the Missing; 82,241 burials and 27,559 commemorations in 71 countries throughout the world. In Canada, there is a total of 18,178 burials and commemorations located at 2,992 sites and a further 952 burials at 447 sites in the United States all of which are the responsibility of the Canadian Agency of the Commonwealth War Graves Commission.

The Commonwealth War Graves Commission has erected three memorials to the Missing in Canada, the Air Forces Memorial at Ottawa and the Naval Memorials at Halifax and Victoria. In France and Belgium there are thirteen First World War memorials (eight for Canada and five for Newfoundland) which were erected by Canada and are maintained on a repayment basis by the Commonwealth War Graves Commission.

Where the majority of graves in one of the 2400 War Cemeteries in the Commission's care are Canadian, or the site was originally developed by the Canadian Forces, that cemetery may have been designated as a Canadian War Cemetery or have "Canadian" in its title. However, this does not preclude there being graves of other Commonwealth casualties in the cemetery; nor does it follow that all Canadian war casualties are buried in Canadian War Cemeteries.

2. (a) *$406,552.20.

(b) $318,735.28.

3. Yes. There are four Canadians on the CWGC staff, three are with the Canadian Agency plus one Head Gardener serving with France Area of the Commission. Salaries are paid by the CWGC. In addition, two DVA employees are located at Vimy and Beaumont-Hamel to supervise the Canadian Memorials at those sites. Their salaries are paid by the Department of Veterans Affairs.

*In 1977-78 a further $132,211.50 was spent for major renovations at Vimy Memorial.

TRANSFER OF VETERANS HOSPITALS AND DEPARTMENTAL HOMES—QUESTION ON THE ORDER PAPER ANSWERED

Question No. 69—By Senator Marshall:

1. What are the Veterans Hospitals or Departmental Homes (a) administered by the Department of Veterans Affairs, (b) transferred to provincial or municipal authority, and (c) in the process of being transferred?

2. In each case what is the number of beds provided exclusively for veterans for (a) acute care, and (b) other care?

Reply by the Minister of Veterans Affairs:

1. (a) Ste Anne's Hospital, Ste Anne de Bellevue, Quebec; Rideau Veterans Home, Ottawa, Ontario; Deer Lodge Hospital, Winnipeg, Manitoba; Saskatoon Veterans Home, Saskatoon, Saskatchewan; Colonel Belcher Hospital, Calgary, Alberta; Edmonton Veterans Home, Edmonton, Alberta.

(b) Veterans Pavilion, The General Hospital, St. John's, Newfoundland (presently part of the General Hospital Health Sciences Centre);

Camp Hill Hospital, Halifax, Nova Scotia;

Lancaster Hospital, Saint John, New Brunswick (presently part of the West Saint John Community Hospital);

Ste Foy Hospital, Ste Foy, Quebec (presently part of Le Centre Hospitalier de l'Université Laval);

Queen Mary Veterans Hospital, Montreal, Quebec (renamed Le Centre Hospitalier Côte des Neiges);

Sunnybrook Hospital, Toronto, Ontario (renamed Sunnybrook Medical Centre)

Westminster Hospital, London, Ontario (part of the Victoria Hospital Corporation)

Shaughnessy Hospital, Vancouver, British Columbia

Veterans Hospital, Victoria, British Columbia (part of the Royal Jubilee Hospital)

(c) Negotiations have been initiated for the transfer of: Rideau Veterans Home; Colonel Belcher Hospital; Edmonton Veterans Home.

2. Hospitals and Homes administered by the Department of Veterans Affairs:

	Rated Bed Capacity
	(a) Acute	(b) Chronic and Domiciliary	Total
—Ste Anne's Hospital	—	1,130	1,130
—Rideau Veterans Home	—	140	140
—Deer Lodge Hospital	187	169	356
—Saskatoon Veterans Home	—	79	79
—Colonel Belcher Hospital	205	155	360
—Edmonton Veterans Home	—	149	149

Hospitals and Homes transferred to provincial authority:

The number of beds indicated in each case represents the total number of DVA priority use beds provided for in the transfer agreement. Some of these beds may be allocated to other hospitals in the region or province.

	D.V.A. Priority Use Beds
	(a) Acute	(b) Chronic and Domiciliary	Total
—The General Hospital Health Sciences Centre	25	59	84
—Camp Hill Hospital	50	235	285
—Lancaster Hospital	3	197	200
—Le Centre Hospitalier de l'Université Laval	—	150	150
—Le Centre Hospitalier Côte des Neiges	55	—	55
—Sunnybrook Medical Centre	630	570	1,200
—Westminster Hospital	155	727	882
—Shaughnessy Hospital	270	600	870
—Royal Jubilee Hospital	32	138	170

DOMICILIARY CARE FOR ENTITLED VETERANS—QUESTION ON THE ORDER PAPER ANSWERED

Question No. 70—By Senator Marshall:

1. Have any consultations taken place between the Department of Veterans Affairs and the provinces to provide domiciliary care for entitled veterans in areas far distant from veterans' hospitals, either those still under federal jurisdiction or those transferred to other authority?

2. If so, what are the (a) provinces and (b) areas concerned?

Reply by the Minister of Veterans Affairs:

1. Yes.

2. (a) and (b).

The Department of Veterans Affairs has recently been involved in specific discussions with the Province of New Brunswick, and New Brunswick veterans organizations, on the distribution of nursing home beds for veterans in northern and eastern New Brunswick. The result of these discussions will be the development of priority use beds for eligible veterans in the Moncton and Campbellton regions. The province of Nova Scotia also has indicated a desire to allocate part of the capital grant provided in the Camp Hill Hospital transfer agreement to develop priority extended care beds for veterans in the Cape Breton area.

No discussions have taken place to date with other provinces on the matter of providing domiciliary care in facilities other than departmental or contract hospitals.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, one or two speeches that had been anticipated for this evening have been rescheduled. For that reason, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Senator Flynn: In any event, it is a better sitting than we had last Friday.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, March 21, 1979

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

NEWFOUNDLAND AND LABRADOR

BOUNDARY WITH QUEBEC—QUESTION

Senator Forsey: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government if he is aware of the existence of a document which I hold in my hand. I rise, I may say, in my capacity of a sort of supernumerary senator from Newfoundland. The document in question is being delivered to every automobile licence holder in the Province of Quebec. It shows the whole of Labrador as part of the Province of Quebec with a tiny inscription along the 52nd parallel saying:

[Translation]

1927 limits (Privy Council). Not definitive boundary.

[English]

How much more definitive the frontier could be than it is when it is laid down in strict terms in the British North America (No. 1) Act, 1949, I don't know.

In the list of places in Quebec on the same document which was furnished to me by a friend from Quebec, you will find—

Senator Flynn: Not a friend of Quebec!

Senator Forsey: No, a friend in Quebec. Whether he is a friend of Quebec, I leave it to him to say. But among those places listed as being places in Quebec are Churchill Falls, Goose Bay and Labrador City.

I wonder if the Leader of the Government is aware of the existence of this interesting document.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, inquiries will be forwarded with respect to what could have been an error by the printer or—

Senator Flynn: Hah! That's rich!

Senator Perrault: —or some other error of some other kind. I would ask the honourable senator whether portions of any other provinces or territories are included on that document as well.

Senator Forsey: No, that is all. They gave no special status to any other province.

I might add that I was informed this morning by another friend from Quebec that the Government of Quebec has been running advertisements in a series of newspapers recently, showing the same sort of map with the inscription: "Ici on parle français."

[Translation]

"French spoken here."

[English]

Senator Marshall: I have a supplementary question. I wonder if we could advise the Government of Quebec that, if they think they own Labrador, they are living under the same kind of delusions they have with respect to thinking they are going to achieve sovereignty association.

Senator Flynn: The misunderstanding about the French expression, "Ici on parle français,"

[Translation]

"French spoken here"

[English]

arises from Senator Forsey's excellent French.

[Translation]

Senator Forsey: It is to give me information.

[English]

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE PROGRAM—QUESTION

Senator Bosa: Honourable senators, I should like to put a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Considerable attention has been focused on the fact that a number of doctors have left the medicare plan in some provinces. Could the Leader of the Government inform us whether the principle of universality is to some extent being undermined?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I can say that the Government of Canada is most concerned about reports emanating from a number of provinces with respect to certain actions taken by members of the medical profession. The government long ago expressed its support for the principle of universal medical care and the hospital care program. The government does not want to see that principle undermined.

Senator Haidasz: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question of the Leader of the Government. What is the government's stand on the problem that has arisen in various provinces which have introduced extra charges and deterrent fees for medical services?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the question is under study at the present time, and I hope that it may be possible for me to bring a report to the Senate in the very near future.

Senator Marshall: Honourable senators, I wonder if the Leader of the Government can advise whether it is the intention of the Minister of National Health and Welfare to convene a federal-provincial conference on this very serious matter?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I can only repeat that the matter is under study by the minister and her colleagues at the present time. No course of action has yet been set. However, it may be possible for me to bring a statement to the Senate tomorrow afternoon. Indeed, I will ask the minister for a statement that can be presented to the house.

Senator Asselin: I wonder if any action will be taken before the general election?

Senator Perrault: No one knows the day or the hour of that event.

Senator Flynn: Not even the Prime Minister.

COMPENSATION FOR PHYSICIANS IN NOVA SCOTIA—QUESTION

Senator Smith (Colchester): Honourable senators, in relation to the same general subject, but not as a supplementary, may I ask the Leader of the Government whether the government is aware of the claim said to have been made on Monday last on behalf of the Medical Society of Nova Scotia to the Government of Nova Scotia that the Government of Canada, for the fiscal year 1979-80, has earmarked for compensation for physicians in Nova Scotia the approximate sum of $5 million?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I am not aware of that information. I appreciate the fact that the honourable senator has brought the matter to the attention of the Senate, and it will be part of the inquiry that will go forward to the minister.

Senator Smith (Colchester): As a supplementary question, may I ask the Leader of the Government if he will be good enough to ascertain whether that kind of information has been conveyed to the Medical Society in Nova Scotia by any official or employee of the Government of Canada?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, an inquiry will go forward immediately.

ENERGY

NORTHERN PIPELINE—QUESTION

Senator Olson: Honourable senators, I wonder if I could ask the leader if he knows whether the government has received a request from the Government of the United States for a major change in the Canadian procurement policy for the Northern Pipeline.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, no information of that kind has been brought to the attention of the Leader of the Government in the Senate. However, an inquiry will go forward.

THE SENATE

WINDOWS IN CLERESTORY OF CHAMBER—QUESTION

Senator Riley: Honourable senators, I should like to inquire of the leader what is being done about the windows in the chamber. I notice that new windows have been installed, but they do not seem to have lessened the discomfort caused to members on the other side by the sun.

[Senator Marshall.]

I ask the question not only because of my concern for the present opposition members, but because some of us may be sitting over there when the next Parliament convenes.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, the government is actively involved in a campaign to bring more light to the opposition. I hope that we may be succeeding in some small way.

Senator Flynn: I am not too sure that this is the way to do it. If the outcome of the general election is the one I hope for, then better results will follow.

Senator Perrault: Are you suggesting that you wish to be in the dark?

Senator Flynn: I don't know if we will be in the dark, but at least we will be able to see you.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

PROTECTION AGAINST SPILLS FROM OIL TANKERS—QUESTION ANSWERED

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I promised yesterday to supply some information with respect to the British tanker Kurdistan. I now have an updated report that has just been made available.

The Kurdistan was badly holed in hard ice on Thursday afternoon, March 15, about 27 miles east of the northern tip of Cape Breton Island. At 2119 hours Atlantic standard time the ship broke into two parts and lost 7,914 tonnes of hot bunker C oil, 52,750 barrels or 1,846,600 gallons.

The bow section carries 7,411 tonnes of oil; the stern section carries 15,140 tonnes of oil.

Since break-up, relays of coast guard ships and Eastern Canada Towing Company tugs have accompanied and towed both sections of the Kurdistan with a view to sinking the bow in deep water off the continental shelf and possibly towing the stern section into calm waters to salvage the cargo and this structurally sound part of the ship.

● (1410)

The Canadian coast guard assumed the lead agency role on behalf of the federal government late on March 15. Support and advisory departments are: DOE, also representing DFO in the regional departmental environmental emergency team; Energy, Mines and Resources; National Defence; and Justice. Several interdepartmental meetings have been held to develop recommendations for suitable operational, environmental and legal conditions to be imposed on the salvor for disposal of the bow section and possible salvage of the stern section. The consensus of federal agencies has also been presented to the proposed salvors, Eastern Canada Towing Company Ltd.

Further meetings were to be held Tuesday, March 20, to prepare for ministers the DOT and DOE proposals for conditions to be imposed on the salvor, if the stern section is to be towed into Port Hawkesbury in the Strait of Canso. The proposed conditions will address operational safety, environmental concerns, and liability and compensation arrangements. The departmental proposals were expected in Ottawa yesterday afternoon for presentation to ministers late yesterday. The consensus of federal agencies is that the stern section should be towed to Port Hawkesbury rather than being sunk at sea. It is considered that this will cause less environmental damage than would result from sinking the vessel, provided all DOT and DOE conditions are met.

Over the past five days, the two sections of the Kurdistan have drifted about 80 miles in a southeasterly direction under the control of tugs. At this time the bow section is 97 miles east of the entrance to Chedabucto Bay. The stern section lies 140 miles east-north-east of Chedabucto Bay.

Bad weather and poor visibility have frustrated all efforts to relocate a small oil slick that was last sighted on Sunday afternoon about 120 miles from Chedabucto Bay. When this slick was first sighted it was about six miles to the east of the bow section.

It is intended to tow the bow section along a prescribed route to a deep sea disposal area bounded by the triangulation points 44 degrees north 58 degrees west, 44 degrees north 56 degrees west and 43 degrees north 57 degrees west. An additional tow line to facilitate this task will be placed aboard the bow section as soon as conditions permit.

If it is decided that the stern section should be towed to Port Hawkesbury, then a new bridle for towing will be attached. A crew, including coast guard personnel, will be placed on board. The vessel will be towed along a route prescribed by DOE and DFO, following the 50 fathom contour, towards a predetermined point offshore. The salvor will wait until he has a clear 60-hour weather window, and the vessel will then be towed into port for offloading of cargo.

Detailed DOT and DOE conditions will be prepared and forwarded to Ottawa, at which time ministerial approval of the recommended course of action will be sought.

Honourable senators, I have further information that has just come to hand. It has been decided this afternoon that the bow will be disposed of as planned. A ministerial decision has not yet been made regarding the stern section; however, hopefully that decision will be made.

The weather forecast in the area for the next few days is as follows: moderate northwest winds, visibility good, tomorrow. Friday and Saturday, March 23 and 24, moderate southerly winds, visibility good.

Honourable senators, that is as complete a report as I have been able to obtain to this point.

Senator Flynn: Are you going to give that report every day?

Senator Perrault: The weather forecast.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Honourable senators, I thank the honourable leader for his full report. With reference to the conditions he mentioned as now being formulated, as I understood him, regarding possible salvage of the stern section, is one of those conditions to the effect that the proposed salvor would put up a bond of some $50 million to protect against something—I am not quite sure what?

Senator Perrault: There is no mention of bonding in this memorandum that I received from the department; however, I would expect that in the normal course of events that would be a requirement.

The question will be taken as notice, and we shall determine what the facts are.

Senator Smith (Colchester): I thank the honourable leader. Perhaps I could enlarge a little upon my request. With reference to that condition about the bond, I understand—and I cannot certify as to the accuracy of the report—that the amount of $50 million is the one under discussion. I understand also that the probable value of the ship and its cargo is only a fraction of that sum. I find it a little difficult, therefore, to understand why a salvor would put up a bond for an amount greatly in excess of the possible value of the salvage, though I can understand, of course, the desire to protect the environment. If my information is correct, then there seems to be something that requires explanation concerning the amount of the bond and who is supposed to put it up.

Senator Perrault: It may be because of the possibility of some unanticipated and unforeseen serious environmental damage that could be caused by a further spill.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Perhaps the honourable leader would include what he can about that in his further inquiries.

Senator Perrault: I will do so.

Senator Marshall: The Leader of the Government omitted one matter. I recognize that this may require a lengthy answer, but does the Government of Canada have any contingency plan, or is it conducting any studies, respecting the protection that will surely be required if we permit the use of unseaworthy tankers which will cause spills that destroy the environment, particularly the marine stocks of our nation?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, as yet I have not received a reply to that larger and most important question. However, that information will be provided as soon as it is received.

Senator Macdonald: Honourable senators, I wonder if it has been determined where they are going to sink the bow section of that ship. Has the government any plans to prevent these glorified tin cans which operate in icy conditions from carrying oil?

Senator Perrault: The honourable senator asked about the bow section. I did give certain triangulation points which I will be glad to make available to him. We do know that a light tow-line is attached from the tug Point Gilbert, and that the coast guard ships Alert and Cornwallis are standing by. With regard to the stern section, a good tow-line is attached from the tug Point Valiant, and the coast guard ship Sir William Alexander is standing by. The tug Point Carrol is in transit to the area, probably to relieve the Point Valiant at the stern section. I will be glad to give the honourable senator these triangulation points.

Senator Macdonald: It is pretty close to Cape Breton.

ENERGY

FUEL FOR MOTOR VEHICLES—QUESTION

Senator Smith (Colchester): Honourable senators, I wonder if I might ask another question of the Leader of the Government which is directly related to energy. Is he or the government aware of a statement said to have been made by Mr. J. Frank Roberts, the chairman and president of VIA Rail Canada, on Monday last in Toronto to the effect that, in order to reduce energy requirements in the transportation sector of our economy, the country's dependence on the automobile must be reduced. Does the Government of Canada hold that opinion?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I too read that report in the media. However, I have no official document which sets forth either the complete speech attributed to Mr. Roberts nor any official position document from the Minister of Transport.

Senator Smith (Colchester): As a supplementary, might I ask the leader if the Government of Canada has addressed itself to the possibility of reducing the demands for energy in the country by reducing the demands of motor vehicles?

Senator Perrault: An inquiry will go forward.

TRADEMARK BILL, 1979

SECOND READING—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Godfrey, seconded by the Honourable Senator Rizzuto, for the second reading of the Bill S-11, intitled: "An Act relating to trademarks and unfair competition".—(Honourable Senator Grosart).

Senator Grosart: Honourable senators, it is not my intention to speak in the debate at this time. Therefore, I will phrase my remarks in the form of a question to the sponsor, Senator Godfrey, in order to protect any rights I might have to speak at a later date.

● (1420)

I ask Senator Godfrey: Is it the intention of the government to introduce amendments to Bill S-11 when it is before the Senate or when it is before a committee of the Senate?

The reason I ask this is because this item has stood in my name as the first order of the day for some time. I want to make it clear that it is not, in any way, my intention to hold up discussion of the bill, but the facts appear to be that the government has initiated a number of seminars across the country to obtain the reactions of those who may be affected by the bill; that these seminars are now over; and that there seems to be no information coming forward on what the government's intention is respecting this bill.

[Senator Perrault.]

It is for that reason that I have allowed this order to stand in my name, but I would not want the impression to get abroad, if Parliament is dissolved, that I was responsible for holding up the bill. I am quite prepared to go ahead at any time the sponsor of the bill says the time is appropriate, in his view, for discussion of the question.

Order stands.

THE GENTLEMAN USHER OF THE BLACK ROD

MOTION TO APPOINT SPECIAL NOMINATING COMMITTEE— DEBATE CONTINUED

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Lang, seconded by the Honourable Senator Inman:

That a special committee of the Senate, consisting of three Senators, be appointed to search for and nominate a person to serve as Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod; and

That, notwithstanding Rule 66, the committee be composed of the Honourable Senators Flynn, Molson and Perrault.—(Honourable Senator Langlois).

Hon. Henry D. Hicks: Honourable senators, with the consent of Senator Langlois, I should like to continue this debate, if that is agreeable to the house.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Hicks: Honourable senators, the question of the relationship of the Senate to the election of its own Speaker and its control over the officers of the Senate has been the subject of debate in this house certainly since 1868, and perhaps even before that. Many times since 1868 and up to 1973, when the Honourable Senator Croll introduced an inquiry dealing with the subject, the Senate has addressed itself to these problems, but with little effect upon the prevailing practices at the time.

As early as 1867, according to Senator Dandurand, the Senate recognized the prerogative of the Crown in the appointment of certain officers. We are particularly concerned today with the office of the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod. Speaking in this chamber on June 4, 1925, as reported at page 376 of Hansard of that date, Senator Dandurand referred to a resolution which the Senate adopted in 1867, and he quoted it thus:

The Select Committee appointed to examine and report upon the Contingent Accounts of the Senate for the existing first Session, beg leave to make their first report,—

That with the exception of the appointment of the Clerk of the Senate, Usher of the Black Rod and Sergeant-at-Arms, which are considered to be Crown offices, all other offices of the Senate, as well as all salaries of officers, are and ought to be in the appointment of the Senate and under the control of the Senate.

That would seem to have been an acknowledgement, in the very year of Confederation, on the part of this house that the prerogative of the Crown on the advice of the Governor General in Council, in relation to the appointment of these officers of the Senate, including the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, was accepted by the Senate.

In the next year, 1868, there was a resolution in the Senate by the Honourable Senator Letellier de St.-Just that the Senate should go on record as favouring the election of the Speaker of the Senate and, by inference, should control certain other officers of the Senate, though this latter proposition was referred to in greater detail in some of the subsequent debates to which I shall not refer this afternoon.

There was an interesting debate on the motion of Senator Letellier de St.-Just, and it was finally resolved by having him withdraw his motion for the time being, there being an acknowledgment by a number of the senators then present that this was only the end of the first year of the Canadian Confederation, that there had not been a sufficient time to see how the Constitution was working at this stage, and that they could deal with the question of the election of the Speaker of the Senate and some other matters at a later date. While there was a good deal of talk about it at subsequent dates, in fact nothing was done.

Senator Flynn: What else is new?

Senator Hicks: The first debate on the question of the Black Rod took place in this chamber between June 2 and June 11 in 1925. The Honourable J. W. Daniel, then Chairman of the Committee on Internal Economy, moved:

That in the opinion of the Senate the appointment of all officers occupying seats on the floor of the Senate, to whom the Civil Service Act applies, should be selected and appointed by the Senate, and that the Civil Service Commission should be asked to exclude those positions from the operation of the Civil Service Act.

This referred specifically to the office of the Black Rod in the subsequent remarks Senator Daniel made because Colonel Chambers, the incumbent of that office, had died previously thereto, and it was felt necessary that there should be a replacement before consent to a supply bill would be sought in the very near future.

Here it is interesting to note that, from 1867 until the passage of the Civil Service Act in 1918, there apparently was no question that the prerogative of appointing these officers belonged to the Crown on the advice of the Governor General in Council, and modified in relation to some of these offices, including that of the Black Rod and the offices of Parliament, to one of the prerogatives of the Prime Minister, so it was the Prime Minister who gave the advice to His Excellency directly, rather than the normal process of an order in council.

In any event, by section 34 of the Civil Service Act of 1918, the following was enacted:

—wherever any action is authorized or directed to be taken by the Governor in Council or by order in council, such action, with respect to the officers, clerks and employees of the Senate or the House of Commons, shall be taken by the Senate or the House of Commons, as the case may be, by resolution; . . . or, if such action is required during the recess of Parliament, by the Governor in Council, subject to ratification by the Senate, House of Commons, or both Houses, as the case may be, at the next ensuing session.

Therefore, it was acknowledged in the Civil Service Act of 1918 that these offices ought only to be dealt with following resolutions of the Senate or the House of Commons, as the case may be. I think that no question arose in relation thereto, certainly insofar as the Black Rod was concerned, until the death of Colonel Chambers and some action to replace him was necessary.

It is very interesting, now that I am referring to this particular section of the act of 1918, to point out to you that virtually the same wording was used in section 72 of the Civil Service Act, which is chapter 57 of the Statutes of 1960-61. So, as late as that time, Parliament acknowledged this obligation in relation to the views of the Senate and the House of Commons concerning these offices to which I have made reference, including the office of the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod.

• (1430)

Interestingly enough, however, when the Public Service Employment Act was passed in 1967, it being chapter 71 of the statutes of 1966-67, all reference to these powers of Parliament, including both the House of Commons and the Senate, was omitted. Apparently, honourable senators, we did not protect ourselves in relation to these matters in the 1967 act.

Senator Flynn: We never used them.

Senator Hicks: They had never been used, that is quite right, but whereas at least they had been there before, they have now disappeared from our statutes and no longer exist. Nor are they in the present Public Service Employment Act, except for a brief reference that the Governor in Council may appoint and fix remuneration. Section 38 of the present act names a number of people, including the Clerk of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Commons.

Where then does that leave us at the present time? In his speech given in 1925, Senator Daniel referred to the position of the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod. While it is not particularly germane to his appointment, I think it is interesting enough to read. He stated:

The position of Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod is a peculiar one, so peculiar, indeed, that there is no other position of the same kind in the whole Civil Service. It is, as it were, sui generis. I might read from the classification published some years ago the qualifications and duties of the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod:

To act as director of ceremonies at state and parliamentary functions and receptions to distinguished public visitors; to advise federal and provincial authorities and rule on matters of precedence and official social practice; to be in attendance during sessions of Parliament on the floor of the Senate; to summon the House of Commons to the Senate Chamber at the opening and closing of Parliament, when assent is being given to Bills, and on like occasions; and to perform other related work as required.

He then paid some compliments to the many other duties that were discharged so well by Colonel Chambers, and I am sure all honourable senators will agree that we can refer to our present Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, Major Vandelay, in the same complimentary manner.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Hicks: The next change to which I wish to direct your attention is found in section 38B, chapter 22 of the act of 1921 amending the Civil Service Act. It reads as follows:

In any case where the Commission decides—

That is, the Civil Service Commission.

—that it is not practicable nor in the public interest to apply this Act to any position or positions, the Commission may, with the approval of the Governor in Council, exclude such position or positions in whole or in part from the operation of the Act, and make such regulations as are deemed advisable prescribing how such position or positions are to be dealt with.

This, again, constitutes a change from the act of 1918 without repealing the relevant section by suggesting that when the Civil Service Commission decides it is in the public interest that they should not make these appointments directly, they should prescribe how such position or positions are to be dealt with.

The actions that were taken in May and June of 1925 are rather interesting. On May 26, before this debate had taken place in the Senate, the Privy Council had, notwithstanding the change in the act, asked the Civil Service Commission to exclude the appointment of the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod from the prerogatives of the Civil Service Commission.

On May 28, 1925, again before the debate took place in the Senate, although this was not known to honourable senators at that time, the Civil Service Commission wrote to the office of the Privy Council, as follows:

Civil Service Commission
Canada
Office of the Secretary

Ottawa, 28th May, 1925

Dear Mr. Lemaire,—

I beg to advise you that your letter of the 26th instant, with reference to the office of the Gentleman Usher of the

[Senator Hicks.]

Black Rod, was to-day under consideration by the Commissioners; and that it was resolved

1. That it is not in the public interest to apply the Civil Service Act to the appointment of an officer to the position of Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod;

2. That the said position, so far as the impending appointment is concerned, be wholly excluded from the operation of the Civil Service Act;

3. That the appointment thereto be vested in the competent authority in that behalf to be determined and nominated by the Law Officers of the Crown.

A memorandum, embodying the above resolution, and recommending the exclusion of the position from the operation of the Civil Service Act under the provisions of Section 38B of the said Act, is enclosed herewith for the approval of the Governor General in Council.

Yours sincerely,
(Sgd.) Wm. Foran,
Secretary.

E. J. Lemaire, Esq.,
Clerk of the Privy Council,
Ottawa, Ont.

It would appear from this that the Civil Service Commission passed the buck as to the procedures of appointment to the law officers of the Crown. The debate in the Senate on how this should be done continued, and reference was made, of course, to the 1918 act, which suggested that resolutions of the Senate would be relevant to this appointment.

In the meantime, Mr. Mackenzie King, the then Prime Minister, initialled this memorandum and sent it on to the Governor General in Council. On June 3, 1925, P.C. 877 was passed on the basis of a Minute of a Meeting of the Committee of the Privy Council, approved by His Excellency the Governor General on that date. This does yet a different thing. It reads as follows:

The Committee of the Privy Council have had before them a Report, dated 2nd June, 1925, from the Right Honourable W. L. Mackenzie King, the Prime Minister, submitting a recommendation of the Civil Service Commission, under Section 38B of the Civil Service Act of 1918 as amended, that the following position of the staff of the Senate of Canada be wholly excluded from the operation of the Civil Service Act, viz. Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod.

The Civil Service Commission are of the opinion that it is not in the public interest to apply the Civil Service Act to the appointment of an officer to the position of Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, and have therefore recommended that the said position be wholly excluded from the operation of the said Act.

The Committee concur in the foregoing and submit the same for Your Excellency's approval.

E. J. Lemaire,
Clerk of the Privy Council.

In this there is no reference to the procedure of appointment at all. The method of appointment was not dealt with; it was merely that it be excluded from the Civil Service Act.

In the meantime, however, the Senate continued its debate and suggested that their Law Clerk should participate in the discussions with the law officers of the Crown as to how this appointment should be made.

Though the order in council did not require it, there was in fact a reference to the law officers of the Crown, and the Deputy Minister of Justice reported on June 8, 1925, which report was read into the Debates of the Senate of June 11, 1925, at pages 448 and 449. What this in effect did was to say that the office, having been excluded from appointment by the Civil Service Commission, should revert to appointment by the Governor General in Council. As we will see from subsequent modifications, this function of the Governor General in Council has been stated to be one of the prerogatives of the Prime Minister. So, the Prime Minister advises the Governor General.

The argument was made by Mr. Creighton, the then Law Clerk of the Senate, that the provisions of the 1918 act should apply; that there should be resolutions of the Senate having to do with these appointments. In essence these arguments were not accepted.

● (1440)

The report by W. Stuart Edwards, the then Deputy Minister of Justice, is set out, as I have said, on pages 448 and 449 of the Debates of the Senate of June 11, 1925. This report summarizes in a somewhat more formal way many of the things that I have been saying, and I think it might be of interest, honourable senators, if these pages were incorporated in our record today to bring them up to date again, and to make them more readily available to you. So with your permission I shall not read all of it into the record but shall ask instead that this report from the Deputy Minister of Justice in 1925 be either incorporated in my speech or printed as an appendix to the Debates of today.

Senator McIlraith: Why not incorporate it in your remarks?

Senator Hicks: If that is agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

[The report follows:]

Department of Justice
Canada

Ottawa, June 8th, 1925

Dear Sir,—

I have your letter of the 4th instant to the Minister of Justice submitting copies of an Order in Council (P.C.

877) of the 3rd instant with reference to the position of Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod. I infer from your letter that you desire to be advised generally as to the legality and effect of the Order in Council referred to, and in this connection I have had the advantage of discussing the matter fully with Mr. Creighton, the law clerk of the Senate.

In the first place, I may say that I think it unquestionable that the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod is an officer of the Senate; that up to the year 1918 he was appointed by the Crown; that the right of the Crown to make the appointment was undoubted and was recognized by the Senate itself by resolution in the year 1867; that he is a permanent officer of the Senate and that the provisions of the Civil Service Act regarding appointment are applicable to him by virtue of the provisions of sec. 34 thereof; and that, consequently, unless the position has been excluded from the operation of the Act under the provisions of sec. 38B thereof, the appointment would rest with the Civil Service Commission. I take it, therefore, that the questions as to which advice is required are whether the position has been validly excluded from the operation of the Civil Service Act, and if so, by whom and in what manner is the appointment to be made.

Sec. 38B of the Civil Service Act is as follows:

"38B. (1) In any case where the Commission decides that it is not practicable nor in the public interest to apply this Act to any position or positions, the Commission may, with the approval of the Governor in Council, exclude such position or positions in whole or in part from the operation of the Act and make such regulations as are deemed advisable prescribing how such position or positions are to be dealt with."

It will be observed that under this provision the Civil Service Commission has power to do two things: (a) exclude the position in whole or in part from the operation of the Act, and (b) make such regulations as are deemed advisable prescribing how such position is to be dealt with, the whole subject to the approval of the Governor in Council. With a view to the exercise of these powers the Commission made a recommendation to His Excellency in Council reading as follows:

"The Civil Service Commission recommends under section 38B of the Civil Service Act of 1918 as amended, that the following position on the staff of the Senate of Canada be wholly excluded from the operation of the Civil Service Act:

"Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod.

"In conformity with section 38B of the Act regulations are required, prescribing how such appointment shall be made:

"The Civil Service Commission recommends:

"1. That it is not in the public interest to apply the Civil Service Act to the appointment of an Officer to the position of Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod;

"2. That the said position, so far as the impending appointment is concerned, be wholly excluded from the operation of the Civil Service Act;

"3. That the appointment thereto be, and is hereby vested in the competent authority in that behalf to be determined and nominated by the Law Officers of the Crown."

and upon this recommendation the Order in Council above referred to was passed, reading as follows:

The Committee of the Privy Council have had before them a report, dated 2nd June, 1925, from the Right Honourable W. L. Mackenzie King, the Prime Minister, submitting a recommendation of the Civil Service Commission, under section 38B of the Civil Service Act of 1918 as amended, that the following position on the staff of the Senate of Canada be wholly excluded from the operation of the Civil Service Act, viz. Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod.

"The Civil Service Commission are of the opinion that it is not in the public interest to apply the Civil Service Act to the appointment of an officer to the position of Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod and have therefore recommended that the said position be wholly excluded from the operation of the said Act.

"The Committee concur in the foregoing and submit the same for Your Excellency's approval."

After careful consideration of the above provisions and of the representations ably presented by Mr. Creighton, the opinion of this Department is that the effect of what has been done is to wholly exclude the position in question from the operation of the Civil Service Act and to restore the power of appointment to the Governor in Council, where it formerly belonged.

Having thus stated the concluded view of the department, it may be useful to discuss the several objections advanced by Mr. Creighton and to state the departmental view regarding the same.

In the first place it was suggested that the recommendation of the Civil Service Commission should have been approved by a resolution of the Senate rather than by an order of the Governor in Council. Support for that view is said to be found in sec. 34 of the Civil Service Act, which provides in effect that whenever any action is authorized to be taken by the Governor in Council, such action, with respect to the officers, clerks and employees of the Senate, shall be taken by the Senate. It is recognized that there is some plausibility to this argument, but the department is unable to conclude that it is well founded. The provision in question relates only to action required in connection with appointments, transfers, promotions, salaries, increases and classification and has no reference to any action required in connection with the exclusion of any position or positions from the operation of the Act.

I may add that there are precedents for this view in the cases of the Assistant Clerk and the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Commons.

(2) Objection is also made that the Order in Council approving of the recommendation of the Commission does not recite the whole of the recommendation but merely refers to the provision thereof excluding the position wholly from the operation of the Civil Service Act. It is not thought in the Department, however, that this circumstance affects the validity of the recommendation or the Order in Council. The view of the Department is that the Order in Council by necessary implication approves the recommendation of the Civil Service Commission as submitted, and that the recommendation in any case does nothing more than exclude the position from the operation of the Act and to restore the power of appointment to the competent authority. Paragraph 1 does nothing more than state that it is not in the public interest to apply the Civil Service Act to the position in question. Paragraph 2 is of no effect because as the main part of the recommendation excludes the position altogether from the operation of the Act, it would necessarily follow that the said position, so far as the impending appointment is concerned, would be wholly excluded.

With regard to paragraph 3, objection was taken that this purports to authorize the law officers of the Crown to determine by whom the appointment is to be made. In the view of the Department, however, this is an erroneous interpretation, and that the paragraph, when properly construed, amounts to nothing more than that the appointment is to be made by whatever was the competent authority before the position was made subject to the provisions of the Act, and that upon that point of law officers of the Crown would be asked to advise.

(3) It was further suggested that the right of the Crown to make this appointment having been taken away by the Civil Service Act and vested in the Civil Service Commission, the excluding of the position from the operation of the Act in the manner above mentioned is not sufficient to restore the power of appointment to the Crown. In view, however, of what has been said above, the Department is unable to accept this view.

Yours faithfully,
W. Stuart Edwards,
D. M. of J.

Senator Hicks: Finally, Senator Dandurand who had read this report into the Senate record concluded his speech, as reported at page 449 of Senate Debates of June 11, 1925, by saying:

Regarding the appointment of Black Rod, I may say that I had a moment's conversation with the Prime Minister before I entered the Chamber, and he informed me that he would be most pleased to discuss the person to be appointed with the leaders of the Senate.

Whether in fact Prime Minister Mackenzie King ever did discuss this in any effective way with the leaders in the Senate, I am not prepared to say, and the record that I have before me does not show. However, this is an interesting indication of the willingness of the Prime Minister, more than 50 years ago, to consider the wishes of the Senate in making this appointment.

Senator Asselin: What about the Prime Minister of today?

Senator Hicks: I don't know, but I am going to make my conclusions, and I shall speculate about that, just a little.

Perhaps the Senate made its first mistake in acknowledging the prerogative of the Crown in relation to these appointments in 1867. Perhaps the Senate might have tried harder to proceed with Senator Letellier de St.-Just's motion in 1868 that the Senate should have the power to elect its own Speaker and, by inference—and more specifically dealt with in subsequent debates here in the years following that—the control of certain other offices in the Senate. Perhaps Senator Daniel withdrew his motion in 1925 rather sooner than he ought to have done, and perhaps he ought to have pressed it further. In any event, honourable senators, now that the question has risen again, my proposition is this: Let the Senate now affirm its desire to participate in the selection of this particular officer of the Senate, and, by inference extend its influence into the selection of other officers of the Senate, certainly all the floor officers of the Senate. I would venture to express the hope that if we adopt Senator Lang's motion today, the present Prime Minister might be as willing as, or even more willing than, Prime Minister Mackenzie King said he was in 1925 to consider the views of the Senate in relation to this appointment.

Senator Forsey: May I ask the honourable senator a question? Did I understand him to say that it is the prerogative of the Prime Minister to advise the Governor General on the appointment of the Gentlemen Usher of the Black Rod? If so, what was the basis of that assertion?

Senator Hicks: Honourable senators, perhaps I might cite the following:

The most recent minute of Council on this subject is P.C. 3374 of October 25, 1935, which reads as follows:

"The Committee of the Privy Council, on the recommendation of the Right Honourable W. L. Mackenzie King, the Prime Minister, submit the following Memorandum regarding certain of the functions of the Prime Minister—

1. A Meeting of a Committee of the Privy Council is at the call of the Prime Minister and, in his absence, of that of the senior Privy Councillor, if the President of the Council be absent;

2. A quorum of the Council being four, no submission, for approval to the Governor General, can be made with a less number than the quorum;

3. A Minister cannot make recommendations to Council affecting the discipline of the Department of another Minister;

4. The following recommendations are the special prerogative of the Prime Minister:

Dissolution and Convocation of Parliament:

Appointment of—

Privy Councillors;

Cabinet Ministers;

Lieutenant-Governors;

(including leave of absence to same);

Provincial Administrators;

Speaker of the Senate;

Chief Justices of all Courts;

Senators;

Sub-Committees of Council;

Treasury Board;

Committee of Internal Economy, House of Commons;

Deputy Heads of Departments;

Librarians of Parliament;

Crown Appointments in both Houses of Parliament;

Governor General's Secretary's Staff—

And I take it that that includes the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod. That is from a paper in The Canadian Journal of Economics and Political Science, Vol. 12, No. 3, 1946, written by Arnold D. P. Heeney.

Senator Forsey: Honourable senators, may I ask the honourable senator if he would read—I don't mean aloud but for his own edification—the exact terms of that minute of Council. It is, of course, an almost exact transcription of the first such minute passed by the government of Sir Charles Tupper on May 1, 1896, the only change, as Mr. Mackenzie King pointed out in 1935, being the omission from the list of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council which had ceased to exist. I think a strict reading will show that the prerogatives of the Prime Minister listed there are to recommend to Council, not to advise the Governor General.

Some little time ago, I may remark parenthetically, I asked the late Minister of Justice about the appointment of chief justices of provincial superior courts. I said, "Was this done on the advice of the Prime Minister or on the advice of the cabinet?" And he replied by letter, categorically, that it was done on the advice of the cabinet. But, of course, the recommendations to the cabinet are the sole prerogative of the Prime Minister under those minutes. But I think that it is a misinterpretation to say that those minutes, the successive ones passed by the governments of Sir Charles Tupper, Sir Robert Borden, twice—as head of the Conservative government and head of the Union government—Mr. Meighen in 1920 and possibly one other—I think it is a misinterpretation to say that the prerogative of the Prime Minister is to advise the Governor General on these matters. It is his prerogative to recommend to Council, which is a rather different thing.

It is not very important in this particular context but I suggest it is very important constitutionally in regard to some of the other matters, because you might get what should be recommendations to the cabinet, which would be subject to cabinet scrutiny and cabinet judgment, going direct to the Governor General without any such scrutiny or such judgment. Indeed I was informed by a former member of Mr. Diefenbaker's government that on one occasion what should have been a recommendation to cabinet on the appointment of a senator went directly as advice to the Governor General, resulting in a most unfortunate appointment because of a confusion in names, and somebody thoroughly unsuitable was appointed instead of somebody who would have been an ornament to this chamber.

Senator Hicks: Honourable senators, I should like to reply to Senator Forsey while we are still on this point. I think there may be some confusion in it, but I submit that it is fairly well accepted that the right of the Prime Minister to advise the Governor General directly about the dissolution and convocation of Parliament is his right, and is not a recommendation which the Prime Minister makes to other members of the Privy Council. Since that is at the head of the list of prerogatives of the Prime Minister, and since it is generally conceded that that is a recommendation he makes directly to His Excellency the Governor General, I infer that the other rights of appointment set out in P.C. 3374 of 1935 are rights of the Prime Minister to recommend directly to His Excellency. But I agree with my honourable friend, Senator Forsey, that it is not stated as clearly as it might be.

● (1450)

As Senator Forsey has acknowledged, the practice has been that the Prime Minister does on many occasions that we know of, and perhaps on a great many others we do not know of, make these recommendations directly to His Excellency.

Senator Forsey: If I may just make an observation in reply to that answer to my question, honourable senators, I think it is true to say that it is only since 1953 that the convocation and dissolution of Parliament and the appointment of members of the Privy Council and members of the cabinet has been done by an Instrument of Advice and not by an order in council. Down to 1953 the dissolution of Parliament was contained in a proclamation by the Governor General on the advice of "our Privy Council for Canada." After that it was changed. I think it was changed by a misinterpretation of this order in council, which, however, as far as I know, did not apply to other matters in that list. I think it was changed so that the dissolution and convocation of Parliament—though, curiously enough, not the prorogation—and the appointment of members of the Privy Council and the appointment of members of the cabinet became a matter for a different kind of instrument, not an order in council as traditionally but a new thing called an Instrument of Advice.

[Senator Forsey.]

So what the honourable senator is referring to in this matter, I think, is an innovation and, in my judgment, of rather dubious desirability, in relatively recent years long subsequent to the date of the minute of council he was quoting.

Senator Hicks: I have no quarrel with my honourable friend, except to say that he may be adopting the interpretation that he would like to place upon this authority or this prerogative, whereas I think my statement comes closer to the actual practice. I am not saying it is right. In fact, quite the contrary. I think I agree with most of the observations Senator Forsey has made about this.

Senator van Roggen: I hope the honourable senator will accept another question, but I should like first to compliment him on the exhaustive review he has given us on this matter.

Is there anything, Senator Hicks, in your investigations of the history lying behind this that would indicate to you that any custom, precedent or law exists which would prohibit the Senate from appointing a committee, such as is suggested in the motion, to consider the matter of an appropriate appointment for this office and then to consult with the proper authorities, whether that be the Prime Minister or the cabinet, with respect to the appointment. Is there anything that you have found that would make that an improper procedure for the Senate to follow?

Senator Hicks: I agree entirely with Senator van Roggen that there is certainly no prohibition on our setting up a committee and making recommendations. Perhaps most of the remarks I made this afternoon had to do with the authoritative nature, or rather the lack of authoritative nature, of the recommendations that this committee might make. But even if the committee can only make a recommendation to either the Privy Council or the Prime Minister, I still think that it would be a good practice for us to adopt.

Senator Thompson: Honourable senators, I move the adjournment of the debate.

Senator Flynn: That's a good idea!

Senator Grosart: Honourable senators, before the question is put I should like to make an observation on a comment made by Senator Forsey. Like other senators, I have great respect for Senator Forsey's knowledge of constitutional practice, but I think he would be the first to admit that he is not always right.

Senator Forsey: Hear, hear.

Senator Grosart: I believe that in one statement he made today he was wrong, unfair and indiscreet. He made the statement, on hearsay, that an appointment made to this chamber by Mr. Diefenbaker resulted in an unfortunate appointment and the denial of the position in the Senate to somebody he regarded as a better appointment, and he attributes this—purely on hearsay—to the failure of the Prime Minister to follow a constitutional practice of which he would approve but which has certainly not in any way been definitively determined.

I am not to say whether that is so or not, but, fortunately, my name is such that it is not likely that my appointment was a mistake. It must have been some other person.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Grosart: However, the inference is there, in what I regard as a most unfortunate and unfair remark based only on hearsay, and I hope Senator Forsey will retract it.

Senator Forsey: So far as hearsay is concerned, I got the statement from a member of the cabinet concerned who was very exercised about what he regarded as a breach of constitutional propriety. I can say at once that the people concerned in the story that he told me are now all gone to their reward.

I am sorry if my reference to that particular appointment, which I thought had been a matter of common discussion at various times, is regarded as indiscreet. I am afraid that I have not a great reputation for discretion, and I am glad to yield to the Honourable Senator Grosart on that point and say that I am very sorry that I mentioned that illustration.

As for hearsay, I got it direct from a member of the cabinet who was greatly exercised about the subject and came to me and asked me whether I didn't think he was right in considering this a breach of constitutional practice.

Senator Grosart: It is still hearsay.

On motion of Senator Thompson, debate adjourned.

PUBLIC BILLS

MOTION TO SUSPEND RULES 44, 45 AND 78 WITHDRAWN

On the Motion:

That until Friday, 13th April, 1979, rules 44, 45 and 78 be suspended in so far as they relate to public bills.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, before this motion is put I would say that when I gave notice last evening I noted, together with other honourable senators, the concern expressed by the Honourable Leader of the Opposition with respect to the proposal to suspend certain rules. Since then I have had an opportunity to speak with the Honourable Leader of the Opposition and other honourable senators, and I think I now understand some of the concerns the Honourable Leader of the Opposition felt last night.

The reason for the notice of motion was the great concern of the government to have a key piece of legislation in place before the weekend. I refer to Bill C-42, the Energy Supplies Emergency Bill. That bill is being debated now in the other place and a vote has been scheduled for six o'clock this evening. It is the hope of the government that this bill will be passed in the other place at six o'clock this evening, and barring completely unforeseen circumstances that vote will proceed. It is the hope that the measure can be passed by the Senate by Friday with royal assent later that day.

May I suggest, then, that in order to achieve that goal the Senate might wish to agree to the introduction of the bill here tomorrow, if it is not possible for honourable senators to meet tonight because of previous commitments. If the bill comes to us tomorrow afternoon, the sponsor of the measure, Honourable Senator McDonald, would make his introductory speech at that time.

● (1500)

In all probability, the senator's speech would be followed by other speeches from opposition and government members who may wish to participate in the debate. Second reading debate could occupy tomorrow, with the bill being referred to committee for study perhaps on Friday morning.

Honourable senators, I have discussed with the Honourable Alastair Gillespie, the minister responsible for the bill, the possibility of having him appear before a Committee of the Whole to answer honourable senators' questions. The minister has agreed to come to the Senate, should honourable senators wish him to do so. He has stated that he would be available to appear in committee tomorrow morning. He has a number of important commitments out of Ottawa tomorrow afternoon, but would be available between—

Senator Roblin: Is the Leader of the Government referring to tomorrow or Friday?

Senator Perrault: I am giving the complete possible chronology for the next two days. The minister is available all day on Friday, but he is also available tomorrow morning and until 12.30 p.m. So the minister is available during that time frame.

I would appreciate the views of honourable senators on the way that this bill might be handled. As I have said, second reading debate would continue tomorrow following introduction of the bill, and it would then be referred to committee for study.

The minister will not be available tomorrow afternoon. Following debate on second reading, the bill could well be referred to the Standing Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce. However, if we so wish the bill could be referred to a Committee of the Whole on Friday morning, and third reading and royal assent could be given later that day.

If this suggested handling of the bill meets with general support and agreement I shall not proceed with the motion before us because it would not be necessary at this time.

In any event, the only reason why I gave notice of motion yesterday was because of the government's concern regarding Bill C-42 and the importance, in its view, of having the legislation in place during what could be a dissolution of Parliament. In saying that, dissolution could come at any time. That is no mystery to the experienced parliamentarians in this chamber.

Senator Asselin: Some story, but wrong time.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, I first wish to confirm that the conversations to which the Honourable Leader of the Government referred took place in the perspective he has outlined. As my good friend, Senator Asselin, remarked, we have been operating under these conditions for over a year now, and it is not a very satisfactory way for the Senate to discharge its responsibilities. The possibility of dissolution is clearer at this time, however, than it was a year ago—at least, I hope so.

With regard to the proposed legislation, I have consulted with my colleagues. After taking into account our number and views, I am of the opinion that in two days, following the procedure mentioned by the Leader of the Government, we will be able to do what we consider to be our duty—again taking into consideration the circumstances.

I believe that I am speaking for all members of the opposition—we discussed the matter this morning—in saying that we would agree that second reading should take place, and could be completed, tomorrow. If necessary, we could go until, midnight. The bill could then be referred to Committee of the Whole on Friday morning and third reading completed on Friday afternoon.

However, since the Leader of the Government gave notice yesterday that he wanted to suspend rules 44, 45 and 78 of the Rules of the Senate for this very purpose, he should now tell us that if we proceed in the way he has indicated he will withdraw his motion.

I do not want any sword of Damocles hanging over our heads for the next three weeks. We may very well be sitting again next week, with the threat of dissolution ever present.

I do not want to have to operate under such circumstances for the sake of just any bill that may come before us. Since the government wants Bill C-42 for the election—I believe that is the government's main objective: to have it for the election—in order to clear the deck and allow the Prime Minister to summon the courage to call an election, we are willing to proceed in this way. But I do not want this threat to apply to all bills that may come to us next week or in the following weeks, if Parliament is still sitting.

I can understand that dissolution comes closer and closer each day that we sit. But we could sit here well beyond April 13. The way this government operates it could very well postpone the election until next year. Parliament will die on July 28 this year if nothing is done. But nothing in the Constitution requires our courageous Prime Minister to call the election at any time, except that the next Parliament would have to meet within one year of the date of the expiration of this Parliament.

Under those circumstances, if the Prime Minister wants to call a general election on Saturday, we are willing to give him this bill on Friday afternoon, after we have said what we think of it. But, as a condition for the Senate to proceed in this way, I ask that the Leader of the Government withdraw his motion. He can always bring it back next week. I have seen him do worse things than that; so he should not be too offended by this condition, or by the prospect of again having to change his mind.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, that was generally a constructive statement made by the Leader of the Opposition, although there were certain particulars with which I would take umbrage. I was fascinated by the possible election scenario that he set out. Certainly the government has never contemplated the idea of having the election postponed to a year from July 28 next, but perhaps the Leader of the Opposition might provide us with the Conservative caucus analysis on the subject that we could study. Perhaps it is a course of action which the government should examine. It almost suggested to me, honourable senators, that this is the kind of scenario devoutly to be wished by the present supporters of the Conservative Party, in view of certain poll results.

Having said that, I am certainly prepared to withdraw my motion—a motion which, incidentally, is not quite the closure it was said to be yesterday. It is a procedure which has been followed by numerous governments in the past before the Easter and Christmas break, and before dissolution and prorogation.

● (1510)

Honourable senators, I am quite willing to withdraw that motion in return for an order of the house that we proceed according to the schedule that I described earlier.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is the honourable senator withdrawing the motion?

Senator Perrault: Yes.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is ordered:

That when the Bill C-42, intituled: "An Act to provide a means to conserve the supplies of energy within Canada during periods of national emergency caused by shortages or market disturbances affecting the national security and welfare and the economic stability of Canada," reaches the Senate tomorrow, Thursday, 22nd March 1979, the second reading stage of the said Bill be concluded the same day, and that the remaining stages be concluded on Friday, 23rd March 1979.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, March 22, 1979

The Senate met at 2 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

ENERGY SUPPLIES EMERGENCY BILL, 1979

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-42, to provide a means to conserve the supplies of energy within Canada during periods of national emergency caused by shortages or market disturbances affecting the national security and welfare and the economic stability of Canada.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, with leave, I move that this bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading later this day.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Report of the Anti-Inflation Board to the Governor in Council, dated March 16, 1979, pursuant to section 17(2) of the Anti-Inflation Act, Chapter 75, Statutes of Canada, 1974-75-76, reporting its reference to the Administrator of the said Act of certain proposed changes in compensation plan of the Canada Steamship Lines (1975) Limited and its employees represented by the Brotherhood of Railway, Airline and Steamship Clerks.

Report of the Governor of the Bank of Canada, including statement of accounts certified by the Auditors, for the year ended December 31, 1978, pursuant to section 26(3) of the Bank of Canada Act, Chapter B-2, R.S.C., 1970.

Report entitled "A Time to Speak: The Views of the Public," dated March 1979, of the Task Force on Canadian Unity, appointed by Orders in Council of 5 July 1977, P.C. 1977-1910, 24 August 1977, P.C. 1977-2361 and P.C. 1977-2362, and 28 February 1978, P.C. 1978-573, pursuant to Part I of the Inquiries Act (Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin, P.C. and Hon. John P. Robarts, P.C., Co-Chairmen).

[Translation]

VISITORS IN GALLERY

Senator Rizzuto: Honourable senators, I am pleased to welcome a delegation of the Canadian-Italian Business and Professional Men's Association of Quebec for the Montreal area which is with us today on a visit to the Canadian Parliament. The delegation is led by its president, Mr. Fagnoli, whom I wish to welcome. I hope they are enjoying their day in Ottawa.

[English]

PUBLIC SERVICE

EMPLOYMENT OF IMMIGRANTS—QUESTION

Senator Haidasz: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government a question on an important matter of which I gave him notice earlier this day. Can the government leader assure us that security clearance directives from the cabinet or the Solicitor General affecting immigrants or descendants of immigrants, or people not born in Canada, will not affect them adversely in seeking employment within the Public Service of Canada, or promotion therein?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I appreciate the fact that the honourable senator gave notice of his question earlier this day. However, I have not yet had an opportunity to develop and research a full answer, the kind of answer the question deserves.

It can be said, however, that section 12 of the Public Service Employment Act specifically bans discrimination on the basis of race, religion, or ethnic origin, as well as on other grounds. The question is now under active study by at least two government departments. I hope to bring a fuller reply to the honourable senator at a later sitting of the Senate.

● (1400)

Senator Bosa: Honourable senators, may I ask a supplementary question? Does Senator Haidasz have any instances or any reasons for bringing this matter to the attention to the Leader of the Government?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I do not have the exact number of complaints received if, indeed, any official complaints have been received. There has been publicity given to this in a number of newspaper columns. The allegations are of concern. These representations are now being studied. I shall commit myself to giving a fuller explanation just as soon as one is available.

[Translation]

SPORTS

REQUEST THAT EDMONTON, WINNIPEG AND QUEBEC CITY BE ADMITTED TO NATIONAL HOCKEY LEAGUE—MOTION

Senator Asselin: Honourable senators, I should like to put a question to the Leader of the Government in the Senate. Last week I brought up the matter of a merger between the National Hockey League and the World Hockey Association and made a few remarks on the subject. It seems that yesterday the matter was raised anew in the other place where unanimous consent was given to presenting to the directors of the NHL, who are now holding a meeting, the recommendation that they accept in their ranks the hockey teams of Quebec City, Winnipeg and Edmonton as members of the NHL.

As Parliament is still made up of the Senate and the House of Commons, would it not be indicated and proper for the Senate also to support that recommendation, and that it send a message to the directors of the NHL asking them to accept, in the ranks of the National Hockey League, the teams of the three cities I have just mentioned?

[English]

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, if any member of the Senate wishes to make a motion that this house express its support for the merger of the World Hockey Association and the National Hockey League, he is free to do so.

Of course, there are many aspects to this proposed merger, most of a very tough, pragmatic, financial nature. I rather doubt that the WHA or the NHL will make their decision on sentimental grounds. However, I see no objection to any resolution or sentiment similar to that supported in the other place being expressed by this chamber. Indeed, I support the merger, as I am sure many other senators do. In the ultimate, I think a practical decision will be made by members of the World Hockey Association whether, indeed, they are prepared to accept the terms offered to them by the National Hockey League. It is a complex question. Certainly, there may be adequate sentiment here to support the senator's motion should he wish to advance it.

Senator Asselin: If I receive unanimous consent from the chamber, I am ready to make my motion now. Would that be proper?

Senator Argue: It must be by agreement.

Senator Perrault: You must seek leave.

Senator Flynn: Have the motion seconded by Senator Everett.

Senator Asselin: Very well. My motion is before the house.

An Hon. Senator: What is the wording of the motion?

● (1410)

Senator Perrault: Look at the motion passed in the other place yesterday.

Senator Argue: We will have our own motion.

Senator Asselin: In the other place the motion read:

[Translation]

That the House express the wish that the cities of Edmonton, Winnipeg and Quebec be admitted to the National Hockey League and that the representatives of the Montreal Canadiens, Toronto Maple Leafs and Vancouver Canucks support the admission of those three Canadian cities.

[English]

Senator Perrault: Reference was made to the Vancouver Canucks—

Senator Flynn: The question on the motion has not been put.

Senator Asselin: This is not debatable.

Senator Robichaud: Honourable senators—

Some Hon. Senators: Order.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Asselin, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Everett:

[Translation]

That the Senate express the wish that the cities of Edmonton, Winnipeg and Quebec be admitted to the National Hockey League and that the representatives of the Montreal Canadiens, Toronto Maple Leafs and Vancouver Canucks support the admission of those three Canadian cities.

[English]

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Senator Macdonald: Honourable senators, is there not a team in the United States that wishes to get into the act also? Should we include them?

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, according to the CBC news at noon the governors of the National Hockey League are meeting in Chicago to consider this matter. I wonder if the honourable senator would include something to the effect that they meet in Canada instead of Chicago.

Senator Argue: Simultaneously.

Senator McIlraith: Honourable senators, it seems to me that we have lost a bit of perspective here in seeking to set aside the ordinary business of Parliament—

Senator Flynn: Leave was granted. It is too late for that.

Senator McIlraith: No.

Senator Flynn: Oh yes.

Senator McIlraith: Hear me out until I make the point. Perhaps I will be wrong, perhaps I will be right.

Senator Flynn: But you will take up much more time.

Senator McIlraith: In any event, I am entitled to be heard, even by the Honourable Leader of Her Majesty's loyal opposition in the Senate.

The point I wish to make is that it seems to me, as a matter of judgment, we are losing our perspective if we set aside the rather important business slated to come before this chamber of Parliament today for discussion and consideration in order to discuss this measure which, at best, on its merits is quite popular in the country, and also quite violently opposed in the country, on an emotional basis, and strictly on an emotional basis. It is doubtful whether we will be acting properly in interfering in the internal operation of some businessmen of rather substantial means, who have gone into the business of operating professional hockey teams on this continent, and whether we should be expressing an opinion without evidence.

Senator Flynn: You are not dealing with a question of order. You are dealing with the motion itself now.

Senator Asselin: The motion has been made and the question has been put.

Senator McIlraith: The motion was put.

Senator Flynn: When you started by objecting to the motion I thought you were objecting to the motion being put.

Senator McIlraith: No, no. I am not objecting to the motion that has been put.

Senator Flynn: I thought you were objecting to the motion being put.

Senator McIlraith: The honourable senator proposing the motion obtained the consent of the Senate to have his motion put and it was put, and I am now speaking to the motion, as I have a right to.

Senator Flynn: Of course.

Senator McIlraith: It seems to me a very doubtful proposition for the Senate to pass judgment on a commercial enterprise carried out by the very able financial interests involved in professional hockey today. I have been very fond of professional hockey, but I dislike the game that is now being played because too often there is a total disregard for the rules. Fights are deliberately started by one team to weaken the other team, and such practices as keeping an opponent out of the play by holding his stick are rampant. These rule infractions show up clearly on television.

I am not sure that it would be a good thing for the government to be promoting this merger in light of the way in which the game of hockey is played today. Certainly, it is not something that should be supported in this manner without further consideration. Even after consideration, it would have to be decided whether we would be justified in meddling in a private enterprise properly and legally operating for commercial profit. There are times when Parliament should refrain from expressing an opinion.

There is very strong sentiment in the cities concerned in favour of playing as part of the National Hockey League. Quite some time ago when Ottawa had a team in the National Hockey League I had a record of never missing a game season after season; but why we should be preoccupied with this today and asked to take a decision on it without evidence and without in-depth consideration is beyond me. I would hope that the Senate would either delay action or omit taking action on the measure.

[Translation]

Senator Robichaud: Honourable senators, as a hockey supporter for many years, and indeed a hockey fan, I am very interested in the future of the national sport in Canada, which is hockey. To what extent should provincial and federal legislators intervene in that still remains a question not yet resolved.

[English]

I had thought at one time of introducing a motion similar to that which has been introduced by my good friend Senator Asselin, but I hesitated to do so because, even though I agree in principle with the merger of three World Hockey Association teams with the NHL, I am not sure that the terms now being offered to those teams are acceptable. For instance, teams in those cities would only be allowed to protect four players and they would then have to restaff their lineups with other players on the market. There might be great competition in hockey in Canada if that should be the case.

● (1420)

Honourable senators, for that reason I am in favour in principle of a merger of the two leagues, but the terms have to be acceptable to the World Hockey Association. As legislators we can say as much as we want that we favour the merger, but these businessmen will never agree to a merger if the terms are not acceptable to them. I think it is premature to vote on the motion; we can only say that we favour the principle of merger but not the terms that are being dictated at the moment.

Senator Everett: Honourable senators, if I understood Senator Asselin's motion correctly, I do not think he is attempting to interfere with a contractual arrangement that may or may not exist between the NHL and the WHA. He, like Senator McIlraith, I think, has faith in the fact that those businessmen are quite capable of looking after themselves and that they may or may not make a deal.

I suggest to you what he is trying to do is to say that in the best interests of Canadian hockey, the merger between the WHA and the NHL would be a good thing. What he is trying to reflect is a very emotional condition that exists in Winnipeg, Edmonton and Quebec City over the cavalier treatment that those people got at the hands of the NHL and the NHL owners—not American NHL teams but Canadian NHL teams, Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver. And if anybody thinks the matter is not serious, I suggest he come to Winnipeg or Edmonton or, I assume, Quebec City, where he will find that people are extremely upset.

All Senator Asselin is asking is that this house go on record as saying that such a merger would be in the best interests of Canada.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I hope that we are not going to spend too long on this subject. Nevertheless, I intend to support the motion. Let me say, however, that there is very little sentiment in this process of attempting to merge the National Hockey League and certain teams of the World Hockey Association.

Let us recall the facts. A few years ago the owners of the World Hockey Association—all multimillionaires in their own right—decided to establish a league to compete on a full and equal basis with the National Hockey League. They said, “We are not going to pay any fees to get into the NHL. We are going to take the equivalent of these entry fees—$6 million per team—and we are going to raid the NHL rosters. Then we are going to buy up other hockey players in the country, including underage juniors, and establish a fully competitive major hockey league.”

Again, I repeat, I do not oppose the motion but I suggest that we should not register our support without knowing the facts and with only naive enthusiasm to inspire us. The WHA owners took their gamble, a decision to establish a rivalry with the NHL. They said they would compete fully with the NHL. They raided the NHL rosters and hired away so many players that the average player salary in the NHL has been escalated to $95,000 a year, while ticket prices have soared.

The World Hockey Association has not worked out. Many teams have folded. The league is in serious trouble, as are some NHL teams, because of the battle for players and markets.

Honourable senators, this is not child’s play. These owners are neither athletic philanthropists nor are they athletic or financial amateurs. We are dealing here with big business of the very largest kind. If this merger deal is put together it will be done on the basis of profit and loss or proposed profit and loss. There has been very little sentiment in this entire process. Both leagues are in trouble because of the constant competition for players and markets and television revenue. Let us not delude ourselves. For one, I should like to see this competitive insanity come to an end and some sort of single viable major league established with as many Canadian teams in it as possible, but let none of us support this motion because of naive or misguided enthusiasm in the belief that somehow we are supporting a great, patriotic, all-Canadian initiative, one which will advance the horizons of Canadian amateur sport. These are very highly paid players and very rich owners who are in hockey to make a very great deal of money if they can.

Senator Flynn: May I put this question to the Leader of the Government? I have no objection to his expressing himself as he has, but when he says, “Let us not get excited,” is it not true that the government is excited when it makes a promise of a grant of $5 million to each city? The government is involved to that extent, and I don’t think the honourable leader is giving us the government’s view at this time. I thought that Senator McIlraith changed the subject, but I think you are doing worse.

[Senator Everett.]

Senator Perrault: Well, senators, as I have pointed out on other occasions, the proposal to assist the improvement of certain arena facilities in this country is intended to help both amateur sport and the professional teams that may use those facilities.

Senator Flynn: I know that.

Senator Perrault: I say again that I think this resolution should be supported, but let us have no illusions. These meetings in Chicago are going to be held on the basis of dollars and cents.

Senator van Roggen: Honourable senators, I would first like to make the point that although the motion has now been put, there were several rather vociferous voices from this part of the chamber against giving unanimous consent. Be that as it may, I suppose as a Canadian I would agree that it would be of some benefit to Canada to see these squabbling leagues put together in some form; but I think it is a travesty of the dignity of Parliament to come forward—and I do not care what they did in the other place—with a resolution that can only be based on emotion. Nobody has brought to me any evidence of what this is all about, nor has anyone explained it to me. Not one of our committees has considered the matter.

There are some big, very cold-blooded, very cold-eyed businessmen, dealing in millions and millions of dollars making their deals without any emotion whatever, and we are now proposing to dignify what I can only categorize, from what I have seen of them, as their totally commercial enterprises, by involving Parliament in this process on a purely emotional basis. I think it is most unfortunate that, as Senator McIlraith has said, we should be putting aside the important business that Parliament has to transact in order to deal with this type of thing. I rather object to being asked to support something of this nature, of which I have, basically, no knowledge whatever. If I had some such knowledge, I might well support it.

Senator Flynn: But the government does have knowledge. This is the problem.

Senator van Roggen: I don’t know that the government has such knowledge; but just because the House of Commons does something of this sort—

Senator Flynn: Not only the House of Commons, but the government.

Senator van Roggen: This motion is put by someone on your side today.

Senator Flynn: We are supporting the government’s policy. If you tell me that the government is wrong, I am going to support you.

Senator van Roggen: The government may have much more knowledge than I have, and perhaps it is perfectly correct. I just do not like being asked to support a motion on an emotional basis, without having more knowledge of why we are doing so. I am not going to support it.

Senator Buckwold: Honourable senators, I would like to take a moment, as Chairman of the Parliamentary Committee on International Hockey, to tell you that I support Senator Asselin's motion, because all it does is indicate a wish that this thing take place. It is not an order, but an expression of support for the idea that it would be desirable in this country to have these Canadian teams playing in the National Hockey League, not only from the point of view of the teams but of the fans, the people who watch hockey games on television. You may recall that the Committee on International Hockey, consisting of four members of the House of Commons and myself as chairman, sat last year, and time and again the committee heard evidence to the effect that it was unfair that a large number of Canadians were being denied the opportunity to see their own teams on national television. It was impossible for them to see games other than those played in Vancouver, Toronto and Montreal.

● (1430)

So without in any way getting into the merits, financial or otherwise, of this so-called merger, or of bringing Canadian teams into the Canadian National Hockey League orbit, certainly in principle I don't see how anyone cannot support the desirability of it, and I read that as the motion of Senator Asselin.

Some Hon. Senators: Question!

Senator Grosart: May I ask that the motion be read before the question is put so that further discussion may take place if honourable senators so desire.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Asselin, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Everett:

That the Senate express the wish that the cities of Edmonton, Winnipeg and Quebec be admitted to the National Hockey League and that the representatives of the Montreal Canadiens, Toronto Maple Leafs and Vancouver Canucks support the admission of those three Canadian cities.

It is your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Some Hon. Senators: No, no.

Senator Guay: Honourable senators, the way in which the motion reads is not the way in which it was explained to us by Senator Everett, Senator Perrault, and Senator Buckwold, who was Chairman of the Committee on International Hockey. If I understood the motion correctly as it was read by Her Honour the Speaker, it was to the effect that three WHA teams should be admitted to the NHL, but I would say that the motion explained earlier was to the effect that consideration be given to having those teams admitted.

Senator Buckwold: The motion expresses the wish that this should happen. The motion that was adopted in the other place, if I may respond—

Senator Grosart: Are you making a second speech, senator?

Senator Buckwold: Is there some opposition to my trying to explain the motion?

Senator Grosart: I am simply asking if you are going to make a second speech.

Senator Buckwold: If you object, then I won't. All I am saying is that the motion expresses a wish that a certain thing should be done. That is all that is said in the motion that was adopted unanimously in the other place without debate, and certainly I don't see anything wrong with it in principle right now.

Senator Flynn: May I move the adjournment of the debate until later this day?

Senator Argue: The meeting in Chicago will be over then.

On motion of Senator Flynn, debate adjourned.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

SALE OF VICTORIA CROSS—QUESTION

Senator Marshall: Honourable senators, I would like to direct a question to the Leader of the Government about the reported sale of a Victoria Cross. The decoration was described as being "sold to help a widow." I am wondering if the leader could extract an undertaking from the Minister of Veterans Affairs to investigate and determine if, indeed, in the case of a winner of the Victoria Cross—the highest award for valour in the Commonwealth—the pension or help given his widow by the government was such that she had to sell his Victoria Cross.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I shall be most pleased to discuss with my colleague, the Minister of Veterans Affairs, the question raised by the honourable senator.

The honourable senator referred to the Victoria Cross being sold—and I think the amount was $40,000—but I would point out that this award is never capable of being sold. The honour remains. Only the piece of metal may be sold, as much as some of us may regret and deplore such transactions. It is unfortunate that economic necessity may arise that compels such sales.

PARLIAMENT

OFFICIAL REPORT (HANSARD)—PRICE INCREASE—QUESTION

Senator Buckwold: I should like to pose a question to the Leader of the Government. Another senator and I asked about the price of Hansard, and were advised by the leader that information would be forthcoming regarding the proposal reported in the newspapers that the price for Hansard is to be $65 per year. Some information I have received indicates that is now an established policy of the government. A copy of a letter that was sent to me by one of those who is upset by this substantial and prohibitive increase indicates that the Minister of Supply and Services has supported it.

My question then to the leader is: May we receive an answer to this question since it does concern many Canadians who are very upset at the great increase?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I have received some preliminary information with respect to the matter, and I understand that certain copies of the journals of this and the other place will continue to be made available at nominal cost or on a gratis basis, while in certain other distribution categories additional charges will be levied.

I have some information from the Minister of Supply and Services. His explanation reads as follows:

Current restraint necessitates that choices be made amongst competing claims on limited public resources. All possible alternatives having been thoroughly explored, a final decision was made to remove the subsidy for parliamentary documents. The effect of this decision is that rather than being subsidized with public funds, the price of parliamentary documents will more closely reflect production costs.

In addition, organizations such as federal government departments, senior public servants and special interest groups, which have resources to purchase Government publications, will no longer have free ordering privileges.

Funds thus released will enable public and educational institution libraries, serving a large number of users within the community, to continue receiving Government publications, including parliamentary papers, free of charge. In this way, the availability of government information to Canadians will be maximized.

That is the only information I have available at the present time. There is no reference, however, to the $65 amount or any other amount.

Senator Buckwold: I think the Canadian public should be given that information as soon as possible. There are many Canadians who subscribe to Hansard who pay a modest sum to receive it. They find that is the best way of receiving information about Parliament. They certainly do not receive it from the press or TV normally. I think we should be told as soon as possible what the subscription cost will be for the ordinary citizen.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, further information will be sought. I believe many honourable senators agree that $65 a year for parliamentary journals is a large amount for many individuals and families in this country. However, such amounts may be necessary in view of escalating printing costs.

ENERGY

NORTHERN PIPELINE—QUESTION

Senator Olson: I should like to ask the Leader of the Government if he has received a report to the effect that the United States government is asking Canada to change its procurement policy for the northern pipeline or if this remains in the category of press speculation that I have seen.

● (1440)

Senator Perrault: That information is currently being sought. No information has yet come on the subject. I hope that it will be here shortly.

[Senator Buckwold.]

REPORT OF NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD—QUESTION

Senator Austin: I should like to ask the leader whether the government will shortly be announcing a conclusion to its consideration of the report of the National Energy Board on the export of natural gas from the province of Alberta.

Senator Perrault: I will take the question as notice.

AIR CANADA

REDUCED FARE MARKETING PROGRAM—QUESTION

Senator Smith (Colchester): I wonder if I might ask the Leader of the Government if there is anything he can say with reference to the apparent difference of opinion between the Civil Aeronautics Board in the United States and the similar authority in Canada about the so-called reduced fare marketing program of Air Canada.

Senator Perrault: My understanding, honourable senators, is that the situation is fluid at the present time. No final determination has been made. However, that information will be brought to the house.

Senator Marshall: It is still up in the air.

POST OFFICE ACT

REGULATIONS—QUESTION

Senator Grosart: I should like to put a question to the Leader of the Government with respect to a document that is headed: "Regulations Respecting Second Class Mail," as amended 1st of April, 1978. For the short title it says: "These regulations may be cited as the Second Class Mail Regulations." This is followed by an interpretation clause and then some other operative clauses. Finally, there is Schedule A. Paragraph 1 reads: "Notwithstanding section 11 of the Post Office Act, the rates . . ." et cetera.

Can the Leader of the Government indicate in due course, or as soon as possible, the authority under which regulations can set aside the Post Office Act?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, that information will be obtained.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

DVA PUBLICATIONS—QUESTION ON THE ORDER PAPER ANSWERED

Question No. 37—By Senator Marshall:

1. When was the DVA publication Pension for Disability and Death Related to Military Service printed?
2. How many copies were printed?
3. What was the cost of printing?
4. How many were distributed, and to whom?
5. By what means were they distributed?
6. Has the publication been revised as a result of amendments to legislation, and, if so, on what date is the revised publication expected to be released?

Reply by the Minister of Veterans Affairs:

1. September 1971.
2. 257,000.
3. $20,676.28.
4. 219,000 to veterans and the general public, veterans organizations, senators and members of Parliament.
5. By mail and personal requests.
6. Currently being revised.

TRADEMARK BILL, 1979

SECOND READING—ORDER STANDS

On the Order:

Resuming the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Godfrey, seconded by the Honourable Senator Rizzuto, for the second reading of the Bill S-11, intituled: "An Act relating to trademarks and unfair competition."—(Honourable Senator Grosart).

Senator Grosart: I yield to Senator Godfrey.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Godfrey: Honourable senators, I just want to take this opportunity of replying to a question asked by Senator Grosart yesterday as to what the intention of the government is with respect to this bill.

The government does not want to proceed with the bill in this session. Seminars have been held across the country and some useful suggestions have been made by the trademark experts who attended them.

I have seen a draft of a letter, which it is expected will go out today or tomorrow to trademark agents across the country, advising them that the matter will not be referred to a committee of the Senate in this session and asking them to make representations to the department by May 31. The department will consider those over the summer and reintroduce the bill next fall.

The indications are that there are some useful suggestions that have been made which will help to improve the bill.

Senator Grosart: In view of the statement just made by Senator Godfrey, may I ask the Leader of the Government if it is the intention to remove Item No. 1 from the Order Paper?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Senator Godfrey: May I comment on that suggestion? It might be useful to leave the item on the Order Paper in case any senator wishes to speak and suggest improvements to the bill.

For example, when I introduced this measure and brought it to the attention of the Senate, Senator Grosart made a useful point concerning the use of the word "otherwise" in clause 11. I think some useful purpose is served by leaving it on the Order Paper. If any honourable senator receives a representation respecting this legislation and wishes to speak to it, then it is on the Order Paper.

Senator Perrault: I think Senator Godfrey has advanced a splendid suggestion. I know all honourable senators would welcome a contribution by Senator Grosart to this debate. I am sure he has a number of ideas on the subject, and we would be delighted to hear them.

Senator Grosart: On the contrary, I suggest to the Leader of the Government, in view of the facts now before us, that if this order is to stand it stand in his name and not in mine.

The Hon. the Speaker: The order stands in the name of the Honourable Senator Perrault.

Order stands.

ENERGY SUPPLIES EMERGENCY BILL, 1979

SECOND READING

Hon. A. Hamilton McDonald moved the second reading of Bill C-42, to provide a means to conserve the supplies of energy within Canada during periods of national emergency caused by shortages or market disturbances affecting the national security and welfare and the economic stability of Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, before attempting an explanation of Bill C-42, it might be apropos if I say something with respect to the background of energy problems in Canada and in the Western World. I should like to begin by saying that once again we are faced with uncertainty associated with petroleum supply and distribution affecting the non-communist world.

The revolution in Iran has created a major supply difficulty. Iran, the second largest OPEC oil producer, has exported little crude oil since December 26, 1978. Six million barrels a day of Iranian production, roughly 20 per cent of OPEC production, has not been available since that date to OPEC customers. Some of that shortfall has been made up on a temporary basis by other OPEC producers. The net shortfall, in terms of non-communist world consumption, is about 5 per cent.

Our hope is that political stability in Iran will be restored quickly and that Iranian oil will once again flow freely to world markets, but we cannot be sure when that will occur. There are disturbing signs that it may be many months, and perhaps years. In view of these disturbing signs it seems to me that we cannot be certain of what policies other OPEC nations will adopt, or whether other events will intervene.

If Parliament were to be in continuous session, it might be wise to postpone this legislation; but given the fact that the dissolution will occur this year—I hope—

Senator Flynn: Hah!

Senator McDonald: —the government believes it wise to secure the necessary authority now to deal with an energy emergency which could arise after Parliament has been dissolved. Its introduction now is a precautionary measure to protect Canadian energy supplies.

Canada is a net importer of oil. Since the 1973-74 crisis, we have been able to reduce the dependence of eastern Canada on imported supplies. In 1973-74 Quebec and Atlantic Canada imported close to 800,000 barrels of oil a day. The government took measures to have an oil pipeline built to carry Canadian crude to the Montreal market. At the present time that pipeline is carrying something over 300,000 barrels a day of Canadian crude, thus reducing the total exposure of eastern Canada to importation to approximately 500,000 barrels a day. About one-fifth of those 500,000 barrels a day came from Iran before the shutdown. Another 200,000 barrels a day came from other Middle East and non-western hemisphere sources. Approximately 200,000 barrels a day were sourced in Venezuela. Altogether our imports of 500,000 barrels a day are equivalent to about 30 per cent of our total requirements.

● (1450)

The companies affected have been able to offset their shortfalls temporarily through alternative overseas sources as well as increased production from our own domestic sources. Increased domestic supply has reached eastern Canadian refineries through exchange agreements with companies in the United States. The National Energy Board has been asked to authorize such exchanges to meet demonstrated shortfalls in our imports with a view to assuring oil supply for Canadian consumers and the maintenance of our inventories.

The government has been in touch with the provincial governments on these matters, and everything is being done to ensure maximum utilization of western Canadian crude in eastern provinces which are vulnerable to this import disruption. We should be particularly appreciative of the co-operation which the Government of Alberta and its agencies have given the country.

But these measures are not enough. The government may have to take further action by imposing demand restraints, and perhaps allocation of crude oil and petroleum products. What the government seeks is the necessary legislation authorizing it to take these steps, if necessary.

I am therefore proposing Bill C-42, to provide the means to allocate available energy within Canada during periods of supply disruptions caused by shortages or market disturbances outside our control. These measures would be necessary to fulfil our commitment under the agreement on an international energy program or in any national energy emergency unrelated to the triggering of the international energy oil sharing system.

I am sure that all honourable senators are aware that in the aftermath of the 1973-74 Arab oil embargo and production cutbacks, Canada, the United States and 14 other member countries of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, or OECD, got together to see what could be done to deal collectively with possible future crises. In November 1974 those countries entered into an agreement on an international energy program. Three other countries subsequently joined and the membership may soon increase to 20, since Australia has applied to join.

[Senator McDonald.]

A central feature of the agreement is an emergency oil sharing system which provides for the equitable distribution of available oil in an emergency. The fair sharing is based on the historical consumption and net imports of each member country. The sharing system is triggered when a formal finding is made that the group of countries has suffered a loss in its oil supply equal to 7 per cent or more of its average consumption.

The agreement commits each member country to have in place adequate legislative authority to permit the imposition of mandatory control over the use and consumption of oil during an emergency, and to have by 1980 reserves of petroleum equal to 90 days of its net petroleum imports.

Canada has already met this emergency oil reserves commitment to the International Energy Agency. This is because we import only about 200,000 barrels a day on a net basis. Our imports, as I mentioned earlier, are about 500,000 barrels a day. This is partly offset by exports of oil and natural gas liquids of nearly 300,000 barrels a day. Yet our whole national oil inventory, of perhaps 130 million barrels, is counted toward our International Energy Agency commitment.

However, that amount of 130 million barrels is equivalent to only 75 days' supply when measured against our total consumption rate rather than our net imports. We must not, therefore, plan to rely on oil stocks for an indefinite period to meet overseas supply shortfalls. For one thing, they cannot be drawn down to zero days without serious shortages occurring. For another, they are distributed right across our very large country, whereas supplies are likely to be hit on a regional basis.

We must not be complacent as a result of what may, in statistical terms, appear to be a strong stock position. Adequate legislation is needed to enable us to deal with petroleum emergencies by means of allocation and, if necessary, rationing programs.

Honourable senators will recall that we had the Energy Supplies Emergency Act, Bill C-236, assented to on January 14, 1974, which, after a life span of two-and-a-half years, lapsed on June 30, 1976. That bill was created in response to the Arab oil embargo and production cutbacks in late 1973 and early 1974. The present bill is essentially the same as the previous act, with some minor changes, to which I shall draw honourable senators' attention.

First let me outline the principal features of the bill. The bill would create legislation to deal with emergency shortfalls of petroleum and certain alternative fuels such as coal and natural gas. Such shortfalls could occur as a result of disruptions in supply due to shortages or market disturbances affecting the national security and welfare and the economic stability of Canada. The actual causes of such a shortfall or disturbance could be natural disasters, technical problems, strikes, embargoes, or any other kind of emergency, including, of course, events far beyond our borders and quite outside the control of the Government of Canada.

The allocation powers provided in the bill would be invoked by the Governor in Council when, in his opinion, by reason of shortages or market disturbances, the national security, welfare or economic stability of Canada is affected to the point where, in the national interest, it is necessary to conserve our supplies of petroleum products.

The legislation authorizes the Governor in Council to appoint an Energy Supplies Allocation Board composed of up to seven members including a chairman. Under the previous act there were five members including a chairman. It is envisaged that appointments to the board would reflect the interests of producing and consuming provinces, the consuming public and the petroleum industry.

In the event of an emergency being declared by the Governor in Council, it will be the board's job to implement a mandatory allocation program to assure sufficient supplies of all oil products and their equitable distribution. This is provided for in Part I of the bill. Among other things, this activity would include: first, designating the regions of Canada in which the program is to be implemented, if the whole country is not to be involved; second, specifying the petroleum products that are to be controlled; third, providing for the systematic allocation of the controlled products on a priority basis; and, fourth, setting up an appeal system to hear possible complaints.

Under the planning which has already been done, three degrees of priority are recognized: first, critical—that is, dealing, for example, with health services, security and food production; second, essential services—having to do with manufacturing industry and employment; and, third, non-essential uses—for example, leisure activities.

Honourable senators will recognize, of course, that price control is a necessary part of any allocation scheme. The board, therefore, will also be empowered to make regulations prescribing the price at which, or the range of prices within which, any controlled product may be sold. This authority, like all other regulations made by the board, will require the approval of the Governor in Council.

• (1500)

Part II of the bill relates to the rationing of controlled products. This part will be activated when the Governor in Council instructs the board to extend the mandatory allocation program if it appears that the supplies of a controlled product are, or are likely to be, so short as to cause a mandatory allocation plan to fail. A rationing program for motor gasoline has already been developed under the previous act and can be implemented with a lead time ranging from three to six months.

One change in the bill from the former Energy Supplies Emergency Act relates to this rationing program. This envisages the use of the chartered banks in the administration of the program by handling coupons and coupon accounts, and they have agreed to do this. The banks are enabled to take part in the scheme, despite any provisions in the Bank Act that may prevent them from doing so. The post offices will be used for the primary distribution of coupons to the public.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Did you say that the Post Office will be distributing something urgently?

Senator McDonald: The post offices will be used for the primary distribution of coupons to the public.

Senator Phillips: How is the Post Office going to distribute coupons?

Senator McDonald: If honourable senators will hold their questions until I have completed my remarks, I shall be pleased to try to answer them.

Senator Phillips: You cannot.

Senator McDonald: The emphasis in any allocation program will be on practicality and simplicity in implementation. The Energy Supply Allocation Board, therefore, will have to seek the advice of oil companies. This may involve the companies in collective discussions of such advice to the board and in co-operative action. With this in view, special provision is made in the bill in case the companies are required—and I must emphasize the word “required”—to enter into agreements, arrangements or courses of action which might involve contravention of the Combines Investigation Act. The board may exempt, in those circumstances—and only after consultation with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs—an applicant and such other persons as it deems necessary from the provisions of the Combines Investigation Act, but only to the extent required to enable the applicant to comply with the allocation program.

The legislation empowers the board, in order to make better use of the available supplies of a controlled product, to make special regulations providing for a temporary relaxation of certain laws that currently restrict the emission of sulphur pollutants into the atmosphere. However, this would be done upon the issue of short-term permits and only after consultation with the Ministers of the Environment and Health and Welfare.

There are also provisions in the bill to enable the National Energy Board and the Canadian Transport Commission to co-operate with the Energy Supplies Allocation Board, which will be co-ordinating programs in order to ensure that petroleum products may be moved as directed by the board in order to relieve anticipated shortages.

Finally, this law will require the compulsory termination of a mandatory allocation program after 12 months, unless such a program is extended by the order of the Governor in Council, with the approval of Parliament. However, no such order may extend the mandatory allocation program for longer than 12 months at a time. The bill requires that a motion to adopt an extension order be tabled in each house of Parliament within seven days after it has been made. If the House of Commons negates the motion, the allocation program shall thereupon terminate.

Allocation and rationing plans have been developed since 1974 by the then Energy Supplies Allocation Board and, since its demise, by officials of the department. These plans would form the basis of programs to be implemented by a recreated Energy Supplies Allocation Board. They have been evolved as a result of extensive consultation with provincial governments, the petroleum industry and representatives of petroleum-consuming interests. I would expect this process of consultation to be continued by a new Energy Supplies Allocation Board. As I have already indicated, membership on the board itself would reflect provincial, private consumer and industrial interests.

I referred earlier to the political developments in Iran and the cessation of oil exports from that country. This incident has brought home once again the fact that an interruption in the supply of offshore oil can occur with little warning. If the current disruption continues for several more months, the total shortage of supply could cause the activation of the Emergency Oil Sharing Plan by the International Energy Agency. By participation in this agreement, Canada is committed to have ready at all times a program of contingent oil demand restraint measures enabling us to reduce our rate of consumption. Some International Energy Agency member countries have already publicly announced measures to deal with disruptions of oil supply to their countries. As far as we are concerned, we have the necessary plans in place. What is urgently required now is the legislative authority to move quickly, if we have to, to implement our allocation and rationing plans.

When the allocation program is ready, crude oil allocation could be implemented in seven days. The petroleum product allocation program would take 60 days to implement, and the motor gasoline rationing program would require a lead time of up to six months. What is needed now is legislation in place to enable the government to implement these programs without delay should we face a serious shortage of supply.

It is on this basis that I commend Bill C-42, the Energy Supplies Emergency Act, 1979, to the Senate.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, I do not want to call my honourable friend's remarks a tirade, for lack of a better name, but at certain times he mentioned seven days as being required for certain types of oil and a different period for another type of oil. May I have those periods explained again? I should say that I do not wish to embarrass my honourable friend by asking this question.

Senator McDonald: I can assure my honourable friend that I am not embarrassed, and I can also assure him that if I were going to give a tirade my remarks would have been much longer and louder than they were.

However, in reply to the question, I said that the program to allocate oil across Canada could be brought into effect in seven days if this legislation is passed. The petroleum products allocation program would take up to 60 days to implement, and to implement the rationing program respecting gasoline for automobiles will take anywhere from three to six months.

Senator Phillips: Without this legislation, how many days would it take to allocate the amounts of fuel required for various people?

Senator McDonald: Without this legislation there is no authority to allocate petroleum products. This legislation gives the government the power to allocate petroleum products.

[Senator McDonald.]

Hon. Duff Roblin: Honourable senators, one of my colleagues, for whom I have high regard and who shall be entirely nameless, reminded me that those who love law and sausages should never watch them being made. I thought that observation entirely appropriate to the discussion of this bill, because I confess the reading of Bill C-42 was a very melancholy exercise for me. So, I am at one with my friend on the law, although I am not so sure he is right on the sausage, but I will take his word for it.

However that may be, the reading of this bill was a melancholy exercise for me because of the nature of the bill itself and because of the reflections that it prompts on the state of Canada's oil supply in this year of grace 1979, for I would have thought that three international oil supply and price crises in the past half decade or so might have sufficiently concentrated our minds to produce an energy supply policy for Canada that would be sufficiently effective so that a bill of this kind would not be needed insofar as our domestic arrangements are concerned.

● (1510)

Instead of such a desirable situation, we are asked to support Bill C-42 on the one hand, and, on the other, to contemplate with some nationalistic satisfaction the exchange of views between our Minister of Energy and one of the more ham-handed of the seven sisters. Neither of those exercises, I suggest, will add much to the security of oil resources for the people of Canada. It seems to me that if we ever needed any evidence of the fact that Canada is not immune to the precarious nature of world oil supplies we have it here; and we have evidence, if further evidence is needed, that the people in the Atlantic provinces in particular, of all Canadians, are most seriously exposed to the instability of Middle East politics.

So, under these circumstances, I find it my duty to examine with some care the principles, the modus operandi and some of the spillover effects that we find in Bill C-42, and I must ask the indulgence of my colleagues to deal with the subject, which is dry in the normal view of people who have to listen to an analysis of legislation of this nature, but which nevertheless might have some importance to those who value our system of parliamentary and representative government, and who are concerned about the power of unrestricted and autocratic bureaucratic initiatives respecting the problems that we face in our country today.

Whatever may be the real need for Bill C-42—and there may be some—it is plain to see that we do not need Bill C-42 to deal with the present emergency, if it can be called that. There is a variety of powers at the disposal of the government, some of which they are using, to shore up the supplies of oil to Atlantic Canada. We have the swap arrangements; negotiations with Venezuela and Mexico, and conservation measures that could be proposed; the possibility of dedicating gas supplies through the extension of the pipeline, if the government should decide to do it; the question of export and import of oil and gas; and the moderation of energy cost impact. These are all matters that can be handled without the invocation of the powers of Bill C-42.

There was an interesting analysis of the situation by W. A. Wilson that caught my notice. I like Mr. Bill Wilson, because he usually has a very straightforward and commonsense approach to problems, and though I do not find him supportive of all the principles and policies that I would be inclined to support, he is a good touchstone on many matters. He said:

The energy bill is very sweeping, virtually a War Measures Act in the field of fuel. To maintain a sense of perspective, the full range of powers provided in this bill can be placed against the far more limited powers actually employed during the period in 1973 when supplies were upset by the Arab boycott. A bill of this sort was not found necessary then, and this inevitably raises the question as to why the government now considers it necessary to bring such sweeping powers into being on a standby basis.

While I don't regard his argument as watertight—because I am going to refer to it later on—I think it does represent a legitimate approach to the problems that this bill raises.

My honourable friend who introduced the bill gave us, I think, a helpful explanation of the International Energy Agency, and that certainly must be considered in the context of this legislation. I agree with him on that point. He told us that it was established in 1973 after the OPEC price crisis, under the aegis of the United States Secretary of State, Dr. Kissinger, under which some 20-odd nations have agreed to band together. The main purpose of this activity was to present a common front against the OPEC system, and to have a common consideration of the oil energy supplies, and perhaps other energy supplies as well, that were of concern to them.

The agreement provides for the sharing of supplies of oil in times of emergency, which has been described in part by my honourable friend; it provides for the promotion of oil conservation; it provides for the stimulation of research into alternative energy supplies; it provides for research and development in this field; and it provides for governments, at regular intervals, having their policies and practices surveyed by representatives of this organization so that some independent judgment may be exercised as to their efficacy.

This International Energy Agency agreement led to the passage of a bill in 1974, to which my honourable friend has referred, which gave the power to implement Canada's undertakings under this agreement. It is indeed true, as my honourable friend said, that three years ago or less the bill lapsed, and it must be a matter of comment that it was able to stay lapsed—if I can use that expression—for a period of more or less three years, in which apparently we had no authority to discharge obligations that we had taken under the International Energy Agency.

I suppose that one could make an argument for Bill C-42, saying that current events have underlined the need to restate that power in the federal government, because among the most important provisions of the agency was this question of sharing supplies. If any member suffers a loss of 7 per cent, it triggers certain activity among the rest in order to help the member who has suffered the loss through a time of difficulty. Such decline triggers certain obligations with respect to the sharing of supplies among the whole group.

The fact is, of course, that if world supplies fall far enough, then a very serious obligation is imposed upon the Canadian nation, because if those supplies fall so far that they reach a very low level of availability, then nations like Canada, who have domestic sources of supply, are called upon under this agreement to share their domestic sources of supply with the other members of the International Energy Agency. That is a very important international undertaking that we have assumed, and I have to confess that it was not until recently that I was aware of the serious nature of this obligation.

It may be said, I think with some force, that while that is provided for in the agreement, it is unlikely to happen, because it would mean such a catastrophic fall in supplies of oil as to be a matter of grave international concern—and, of course, that is right. It is perhaps optimistic, or perhaps in order, to say that we never envisaged that there should be such a decline in international oil supplies as to invoke this part of the International Energy Agency agreement. But I have to remark that we did not envisage the current crisis in Iran either, and it is not today beyond the bounds of possibility to think that such a shortfall in world energy resources might indeed be contemplated. If one reads the reports of the CIA in the United States—which is not really recommended reading, I suppose, for Canadian parliamentarians—they make the point quite clearly. I think we had a story about that in the morning papers, which indicates how serious the matter could become.

There is no need to be unduly gloomy about it, but it is necessary to recognize that that possibility remains, that under this agreement we may be asked to share the domestic product that we produce in Alberta and elsewhere in this country with other nations in the International Energy Agency. We must be clear that this agreement certainly cuts across the constitutional division of powers between the federal and provincial governments; that it affects what is probably one of the most sensitive areas of constitutional discussion today, that of natural resources.

● (1520)

While the sponsor of the bill did not say so, it must be clear that this bill rests on the "peace, order and good government" powers of the federal authority. That seems to be the constitutional basis on which it could be considered here. The potential problems of reconciling the situation that I have described and the consequences of the provisions of this legislation with respect to legitimate provincial interests and legitimate federal interests is a matter which can only be hinted at, although certainly they are entrenched upon. I was pleased to hear my honourable friend make some reference to the co-operation the federal government has received from one of the oil-producing provinces in the present situation.

If that is the justification of the bill—and it is certainly one of the justifications—let us see how the federal government proposes to implement the powers contained in Bill C-42. I would like to describe this bill as Draconian. That is a word that should be used with some reservation, but, on examination of its clauses, the bill is indeed a Draconian measure. It extends the fullest plenitude of power to those who are responsible for managing the energy supply situation in the country. I could use a phrase that is popular in the United States today and say it is the moral equivalent of war in this field, and indeed I believe it is.

There are several ways in which this bill goes about its business. First of all, it provides for a mandatory allocation of energy supplies, and we should be clear that under this mandatory allocation those in authority may discriminate or, to use a less emotionally loaded word, choose or select among the different regions of Canada, among the products that are going to be controlled in terms of priorities and quantities. In addition, "supplies of energy" is defined on a relatively broad basis. It covers oil in the first instance, but it can be extended to gas and coal. There is a very interesting reference to extending the powers of the bill to electricity although, for reasons which are logically obscure to me, it is dealt with on quite a different basis from other forms of energy that we have talked about. Perhaps we will receive some explanation during consideration in Committee of the Whole as to what is intended in that respect.

It should be clear that any item manufactured in whole or in part from any of these prescribed energy supplies may be included in the control measures that are laid down. We can envisage not just oil and natural gas coming under attention, but fertilizer, plastic or synthetic fibre manufacturers—the whole host of petrochemical products would come within the ambit of this legislation.

That is the mandatory allocation of energy supplies. If that is deemed inadequate to do the job, there is then rationing. The power is granted to impose rationing on all and sundry, including the ultimate consumer. Those are the two main operative clauses of the bill.

With respect to the powers contained in the bill, it is proposed that these operations be dealt with mainly by regulation; the power of regulation assisted—and I am going to come back to this with some emphasis—assisted by the power of delegation. I don't suppose there are many of us who care much about regulation and delegation and other esoteric matters of that kind, but I am one of those who think they are important matters.

Honourable senators will see set out under clause 16 a list of the regulatory powers provided with respect to the mandatory allocation of energy supplies. In their endeavour to cover everything, the draftsmen have set down a list from (a) to (r), and if one reads those paragraphs, one gets the impression that they are thorough, if nothing else. But just to make doubly sure, when we get to the bottom of clause 16, after providing that the Governor in Council "may make such regulations as may be necessary in the opinion of the Board to carry out effectively a mandatory allocation program for any controlled product and, without limiting the generality of the foregoing, may make regulations", following which are paragraphs (a) to (r), we then have paragraph (s):

[Senator Roblin.]

(s) respecting such other matters or things, whether or not of a like kind to those referred to in paragraphs (a) to (r), as the Board considers necessary for the purpose of carrying out a mandatory allocation program for a controlled product.

It is hard to imagine anything more sweeping or more inclusive than that. There is no requirement that it have anything to do with the items covered in the regulation section proper. It simply takes in the whole wide world at one sweep of the draftsman's pen. I think that is worthy of the attention of this house.

I do not know of any other piece of legislation, other than perhaps the War Measures Act, which contains such a sweeping proposal, and this is not the only instance where one finds it. Under Part II, clause 20, honourable senators will find that they go from paragraph (a) to paragraph (k) in dealing with the regulations that are detailed and specific, and then we come to paragraph (l), which is the same good old catch-all provision. It reads:

(l) respecting such other matters or things, whether or not of a like kind to those referred to in paragraphs (a) to (k), as the Board considers necessary for the purpose of carrying out a rationing program.

That takes in the whole wide world. I think one could regulate a great many things under this provision which were never meant to be so dealt with. I am one of those who have always felt that the power of regulation, which is in effect the power to make law, has to be handled with great care.

Senator Forsey: Hear, hear.

Senator Roblin: It seems to me that the two paragraphs I have quoted certainly go far beyond anything that could be reasonably required.

If this weren't enough, there are many more powers given. For example, this proposed act can set aside and override quite a number of acts of the Parliament of Canada and the regulations of boards. The National Energy Board Act may be set aside, as may the Railway Act, the National Transportation Act, the Canada Shipping Act, the Motor Vehicle Transport Act, any provincial statute, any municipal regulation, property and civil rights, private contracts, environmental protective measures—and my honourable friend mentioned that category in introducing the bill—and also, believe it or not, as he also mentioned, the Bank Act and the Post Office Act. These acts are all superseded by what goes on by regulation, if you please, under this particular piece of legislation. I am wondering whether or not we are giving the power under this bill to actually legislate as opposed to making subordinate regulations under the law.

The National Energy Board is invested with additional powers. Subclause 26(5) reads:

The National Energy Board is hereby vested with all such powers, in addition to its powers under the National Energy Board Act, as are necessary to enable the National Energy Board to carry out or enforce a direction of the Energy Supplies Allocation Board.

Very few of these matters—and I will come to them in detail later on—are subject to concurrence by Parliament. A few may be laid before Parliament—there are two to be concurred in and a few laid before Parliament—but there is no reference to informing Parliament of this super-overriding of the law such as is indicated in the clauses I have referred to.

“The National Energy Board is hereby invested with all such powers . . .” You cannot do much better than that. But they have. They kept a climax. Not only are these powers of regulation subsumed in the bill, not only are these statutes specifically overridden by this bill, not only can the National Energy Board do anything it wishes in order to comply with the orders of the people who are operating this bill, but these powers can also be delegated.

● (1530)

Now, that, I think, requires our attention because it is one of the great principles of the parliamentary system that a delegate should not be allowed to delegate his power to somebody else. It is subclause 9(2) of the bill that covers this, and it says:

The Board may by order delegate, in whole or in part, to any person, body or authority any of the powers or duties of the Board arising out of any regulation under this Act, and such delegated person, body or authority may exercise the powers and shall perform the duties so delegated.

Well, it is a little hard to beat that. I would like to meet the draftsman of that clause and shake his hand. He certainly covered the waterfront.

I have to warn you that I am not the best authority in constitutional matters. The best such authority in this house is sitting behind me, and he, I am sure, will be able to fill in any lacunae that I leave in my exposition of this particular question. If you want, however, to have some idea of the implications of the subdelegation of regulation-making powers such as is provided for here, you should take a look at one of the documents that this house has dealt with on previous occasions. I am referring to the report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, presented to this house on February 3, 1977. I dare say the report was concurred in by all the members of this house without dissent; indeed, I would take my Bible oath on it, and I dare say the same thing happened in the House of Commons—or the other place, as we call it—as well. But there we are. The principle of delegatus non potest delegare is fundamental to our law. Thank goodness they have included a translation of that Latin phrase, because I am going to share it with you. The phrase means “a delegate cannot delegate.” That is a fundamental principle of the parliamentary system as we know it today.

I do not ignore the fact that it is a principle that is not always honoured either in the legislative activities of this house or in those of other legislatures in this land, but it ought to be. I submit that the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, which Senator Forsey has something to do with, made the case very well indeed when they presented to this house their findings on this matter of the delegation of rule-making powers. They dealt with the language of delegation, and with the historic development of the doctrine as it comes down to us from the revolutionary settlement of 1688. In paragraph 95 of the report to which I am referring, the committee expressed their views as follows:

The Committee believes that the precise limits of the law-making power which Parliament intends to confer on a delegate should always be expressly defined in clear language by the statute which confers it: when discretion is conferred, its limits should be defined with equal clarity. No statute should enable a delegate to declare the true intent of Parliament or the scope and nature of the delegation of law-making power.

When you add that sentence to their prohibition against the proposition that a delegate should be enabled to delegate in his own right, you get some idea of why I feel that this is a highly questionable provision that we are being asked to approve. In this clause we have powers of delegation which, in my experience, are unexampled. I have never seen quite such a sweeping measure offered before.

In addition to that we have a power expressly set out in the bill which instructs the body referred to, if it wishes, to delegate its power to someone else. The bill does not say who that is. It can be anybody at all. I was going to say that it could be the City of Winnipeg, but they are such an enlightened and obviously sensible set of Canadian legislators that I would like to choose another city, though I suppose it would be dangerous to do so. Under this proposed statute, however, you could give this power to any municipality.

Senator Grosart: Or even the NHL.

Senator Roblin: Yes, even the NHL. That is a very sound observation. We could give the NHL the power to regulate under the provisions of this bill. I hasten to say that perhaps the suggestion of the NHL by my honourable friend is a rather romantic one. I would not accuse the government of attempting any such thing. I am simply saying that we are invited to confer these extraordinary powers, and I myself find them objectionable.

What is the role of Parliament in all of this? We have the responsibility of passing the bill, do we not? We have to deal with that, and that is what we are doing right now. The bill also provides that when it is passed Parliament has the right to concur or not to concur in an order establishing the mandatory program. Such mandatory programs—and this is something in the bill that I heartily approve of—lapse after 12 months, so that if it is decided to reinstate one, it has to be concurred in again by Parliament.

Let us be clear about this. Parliament does concur in the mandatory program. Unfortunately, however, there is no provision in the bill which says what they are concurring in. The actual content of the program, as I read the legislation, is not to be part of the order, so that will not be debated in the house. Perhaps when the minister is here tomorrow he can clarify that, but it seems to me that the bill ought to be explicit, and to say that the actual content of the mandatory allocation program is what Parliament ought to be asked to approve, and ought to deal with. As the bill stands now I very much doubt that that is the case, since they may simply bring in a statement saying, "We need an allocation program," and that is the end of it; but the substance, the meaning, the force, the effect, is not, apparently, the concern of Parliament. I find that a strange way of discharging our responsibilities.

There is another provision in respect of these mandatory programs that is of some interest to parliamentarians, because it has a built-in guillotine. This is a refinement which, I must confess, I have not seen in any other bill either, though it may exist. We have a three-day guillotine built into this legislation. Certainly Parliament is going to have to make up its mind in the circumstances envisioned in this bill a little faster than is sometimes the case in dealing with other matters—and I can see the point of that in certain instances—but when we learn that matters like the rationing program take from three to six months to put into effect, and when we know the bureaucratic time lag that is involved in these other measures that are proposed, I think we could certainly allow Parliament a little more than three days in which to deal with this, and we should take this built-in guillotine out. We have a guillotine anyway. If we want to use it we can always bring it down. Why enshrine it in the legislation, for goodness' sake? That would be a mistake.

I also note that if there is a rationing order, Parliament does not get to approve that. The rationing order is laid before Parliament, mind you, but there is no procedure by which Parliament can have any say as to whether the rationing order is good or bad in the direct sense that would be the case if Parliament were asked to concur in it. Goodness knows that a rationing order is a pretty sensitive device. I would have thought that it would be as well for Parliament to be asked to concur in such a piece of legislation as well. If you tamper with environmental legislation, and allow somebody to discharge sulphur who ordinarily would not be allowed to do so, that is laid before Parliament; but unless I have misread the bill and am not quite accurate in my understanding of it, all that gets to Parliament is concurrence in the two cases I have mentioned, and laying before Parliament in the others.

It seems to me that when you give power to change all the laws in the various statutes that I have mentioned, when you give such sweeping powers of regulation, when you allow the National Energy Board to amend its own act, as it were, in order to do what it is told to do by this board, the least you can do is place these regulations, and in fact the whole thing, before Parliament. If Parliament is to be asked to approve of legislation that is so Draconian in its impact on the ordinary procedures of the legislature, I see no reason why we cannot fairly suggest that these various actions that may be taken by the board in their legislation-making capacity—because that is what it really is, since they are making the law—surely ought to go to Parliament at least for scrutiny, if nothing else, and I would like to see them go there for more than that.

[Senator Roblin.]

Nevertheless, the four cases I have mentioned seem to be all the protection that this legislation gives. These are the weak trammels that are provided against unfettered executive power, and that is what this bill is—unfettered executive power.

The only other recourse that might soften the blow has been mentioned by the honourable senator who introduced the bill, and I thank him for doing so. He referred to the appeal procedures that we find in the bill, and these are worth looking at. They are contained in clause 22, which indicates what the nature of this appeal procedure is.

I would like to draw special attention to this, because it is seriously defective as a device to protect the public from the abuse of arbitrary power. Clause 22 reads as follows:

The Governor in Council may make regulations providing for the establishment and conduct of a tribunal for the hearing and determination of complaints of deprivation of property occasioned by any regulation under this Act, prescribing the time within which complaints may be made and the procedure to be followed thereon, and respecting the determination and payment of compensation for such deprivation of property.

There are a couple of points to be noted. First, this is entirely optional. I would expect that the government would say to me "Well, we intend to do it, for sure. We are going to have this appeal board." If so, I would suggest that they put "shall" into the law. That, I think, is a much sounder basis on which to operate. It should not be left to the discretion of the executive as to whether to allow anyone to appeal on monetary matters against what goes on under this act; it should be established as a provision in the act. It also provides that the Governor in Council shall make all the rules. Well, I suppose somebody has to, so I shall pass over that one rather lightly.

• (1540)

Then it comes down to what you can appeal about, and what you can appeal about is whether or not you have been deprived of property by any regulation under this act. There is not a word in this permissive clause, which I think should be mandatory, as to whether it should be just and fair compensation. And is there a man or woman here who has appeared at any time before these boards or who has watched them in action—I have never appeared before them because I am not a lawyer but I have certainly watched them in action—who does not feel that some statement should be required about just and fair compensation? Because otherwise there is really no standard to go on except the whim of those who seem to be presiding over the board.

But it is worse than that, to my mind. What is so sacred about property that it gets an appeal in this way, defective as it is? What is so sacred about that? There is not a single statutory word about any other matter such as right or equity or justice under this act. And when you consider the wide sweep of the powers that are established here, surely we should state that those are considerations that ought to be included in any right of appeal under the tribunal that may be set up. I suggest that we ought to ask the minister if he can accommodate us in making sure that this clause is expanded in a way that seems to do right and justice and equity to a greater extent than the present arrangements do here.

I would go a step further, honourable senators. I do not think it is sufficient to have an appeal to this bureaucratic ministerial board at all. I have found on many occasions that these boards—while I do not impugn their motives or their integrity or their intentions I sometimes impugn their actions which lead to a gross miscarriage of justice—meet out unfair treatment to the ordinary citizen, or perhaps the multinational corporation, since it could be both that come before tribunals of this kind. I would very much recommend that the minister consider allowing an appeal from this tribunal to some court or other body of the same like or nature so as to see that justice is not only done but is fully perceived to be done by those who are affected by the legislation before us.

Honourable senators, I have spoken far too long, and I thank you for your attention. I have touched only on the highlights of this law. A clause-by-clause or detailed study of the bill will disclose other areas where the policy is dubious and the equity is questionable. But I believe I have said enough to make the point that the bill in its present form is not good law; it is not immediately essential to the national interest at this juncture of energy management; and it is worded in such an extreme way that it goes far beyond the form that is necessary to meet the evident need in a manner which respects the role of Parliament, in a manner that provides for some appeal from arbitrary government, in a manner that meets the test of reason, equity and necessity—and I do not underestimate the word “necessity”.

I say to my honourable colleagues, however, that we in the Senate should not be satisfied with this emergency stop-gap measure alone, even if it is amended to suit the merits of the case. I think it should be accompanied, if not now then certainly in the near future, by a well considered and coherent plan through which we may work for a co-ordinated policy with the provinces and others to secure that degree of national self-sufficiency in the supply of energy resources that our national heritage makes obviously and necessarily possible. Then we can do our duty, and all sections of Canada can be protected and the interests of the nation can be preserved. I shall appeal to those in authority to make this a good bill, a bill that meets the need and does not extend to the executive branch of government powers which are excessive and uncalled for in the case.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I regret that the sponsor of the bill has found it necessary to leave the chamber for a few moments—

Senator Langlois: He is only out for a minute or two to accept a telephone call.

Senator Phillips: I realize that. I have been around here longer than you have and I realize that at times you can be called out. I regret his departure at this time because somehow or other I had the idea from our friendship over the years that perhaps Senator McDonald was not a member of the NDP. I think from our conversations, as I recall them, he was far more opposed in his descriptions of the NDP than I could ever be. Much to my surprise I find him sponsoring this bill which is essentially NDP-authored.

I am sure honourable senators will ask about the origin of this bill, and in fact some honourable senators opposite may attempt to apply a different terminology to its origin.

Honourable senators, let us go back a little; let us go back to last fall. Last fall, I admit, I was in hospital, and I had time to watch the House of Commons proceedings on television, and I had far more time to watch news broadcasts than I normally have. It was no secret that an oil crisis was in the offing. CBC, CTV and Global all referred to the oil situation. But it was not until Mr. Stanfield, a former Leader of the Opposition, raised a question in the House of Commons that it became a public issue. Up until then the Grit strategy committee, which includes quite a number of absent senators, was looking around for something which the government could suddenly decide to make an issue. This Grit organization was suddenly resurrected—and it didn't matter whether it was in Jerusalem or Ottawa, but it was resurrected—and in addition it gave the Grits the opportunity to continue with their policy of dividing Canada.

● (1550)

For years the Grits were elected by dividing Quebec against English-speaking Canada. That has become outmoded. Now they have a different opportunity, according to their strategists; they can now play Alberta against the rest of Canada and hope to get elected that way. Let me say to honourable senators, “If you have to get elected on division, you do not deserve to be elected.”

Senator Flynn: They don't agree. They would rather be elected without deserving it.

Senator Phillips: It does not matter so long as they are elected. Whether it is “Petro” or “Perrault”, it is the same thing.

Honourable senators, I am going to ask you to go back with me for a moment and consider what Liberal strategists have decided has become an oil or energy crisis. In our democratic Canadian parliamentary system certain people are responsible for various ministries. When I review this, I am referring only to ministers of Quebec and the Atlantic provinces, with one exception, and that is the Minister of Energy.

The first person one normally thinks of as being responsible in Canada—I doubt whether he is responsible—is the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister did not seem to be aware of any oil problem. After all, Mr. Goldfarb, the public relations individual who has been prompting him for months, did not furnish him with any results of public opinion polls, so you cannot expect the Prime Minister to be interested unless he has had information resulting from a public opinion poll.

I am not so sure, honourable senators, that the Prime Minister learned anything about the problem later on. When he made his pilgrimage to the United States—one that he sought and begged for: "Jimmy, if you can't see me in New York, let me at least see you in Washington"—he talked to the President about selling Canadian oil and gas to the United States. Not once did the Prime Minister mention to the President of the United States that multinational corporations were diverting oil from Quebec and Atlantic Canada.

Senator Perrault: Were you at the meeting? How do you know?

Senator Phillips: Neither one of us was there.

Senator Perrault: I think I know more than you know.

Senator Smith (Colchester): I am not sure if the Prime Minister mentioned it.

Senator Phillips: I saw the Prime Minister.

Senator Perrault: On television?

Senator Phillips: Yes, when he made a brief announcement concerning the western pipeline. He was almost into his car when he remembered: "Ye gods, I should have spoken in French," and he dashed back. Were you there when he did that?

Senator Perrault: That is not relevant to the debate.

Senator Phillips: Pardon?

Senator Perrault: That is not relevant to the subject matter under discussion.

Senator Smith (Colchester): It is relevant to the silly question.

Senator Phillips: It is relevant to your stupid question.

Senator Perrault: That is unparliamentary.

Senator Langlois: Don't show your lack of education.

Senator Phillips: If you are referring to my lack of education, mine is far superior to yours.

Senator Langlois: If you say so, there is no doubt about it. It is almost a compliment that you pay me.

Senator Phillips: Let us consider the people responsible for our oil imports. I am not asking you to consider the situation across Canada; I am asking you in particular, Senator Petten, to follow along with me while I go through the Atlantic provinces and Quebec.

As I said, the first person we would think of as being interested would be the Prime Minister. There were no Gallup polls. CTV did not give him advance information, so I suppose, Senator Petten, it is rather unfair for me to expect him to be interested in the oil situation in the Atlantic provinces.

Senator Petten: I resent that.

Senator Phillips: I don't care if you resent it or not; it really doesn't matter.

Senator Petten: Don't tell people what I am thinking, or put words in my mouth.

Senator Phillips: I did not try to put any words in your mouth. I would tell you, Senator Petten, as a dentist, if I did, and I would charge you for it.

Senator Petten: I have another dentist.

Senator Phillips: The Prime Minister did not know anything about this because there was no Gallup poll, and I am not sure that he has learned anything about this matter since. He went to Washington after a lot of negotiation, but he did get to see President Carter and went through the usual photography sessions. Senator Davey told him that was necessary. Then he talked about a western pipeline to send Canadian fuel to the United States, but not once did the Prime Minister discuss the Atlantic situation.

● (1600)

Senator Perrault: No?

Senator Phillips: Not once did the Prime Minister talk about Exxon—Imperial—with President Carter.

Senator Perrault: Garbage!

Senator Phillips: Garbage? That is exactly the way I would describe it, Senator Perrault. Garbage! It was nothing but a photography session and garbage!

The next person in the House of Commons who comes in the order of priority is the Deputy Prime Minister.

Senator Perrault: Hear, hear.

Senator Phillips: I have great regard for him, Senator Perrault. I felt very sorry for the honourable member when Mr. Stanfield asked him, "Who is assuming the responsibility for the diversion of the oil shipments designated for the Atlantic provinces?" It is not unusual for the cabinet to appear dumbfounded, but never, never, honourable senators, had they been as dumbfounded as they were on the day Mr. Stanfield asked that question. There was no answer; no responsibility was assumed, but the Deputy Prime Minister stated publicly afterwards that he was resentful of the fact that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources knew about the situation three weeks to a month before it even occurred to him that the Deputy Prime Minister would be interested.

Then let us go on, Senator Petten, to the man in the cabinet who represents your province. In case you have forgotten, he is the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Senator Petten: And a good minister.

Senator Phillips: Surely, honourable senators, if there is anyone who should have been informed of the international oil situation it should have been Mr. Jamieson, but then, I suppose, he has visited so many exotic countries that Newfoundland has become rather mundane to him.

Senator Flynn: Has become?

Senator Phillips: You know, why think of Newfoundland, when you can think of Tahiti?

Senator Petten: And Prince Edward Island?

Senator Phillips: Yes, I agree with you completely on that. But the minister had a different problem to concern him. The people in the Department of External Affairs in the Lester B. Pearson Building are putting in a $300,000 kitchen, and, you know, honourable senators, any good housewife will tell you that you cannot supervise a $300,000 kitchen and at the same time put in time on the oil situation.

The Minister of Veterans Affairs, who comes from my province, proved that he could be just as dumbfounded as the rest of the cabinet. He didn't ask any questions either.

Let us proceed to the remaining Atlantic province. We have the Honourable Roméo LeBlanc representing New Brunswick in the cabinet.

Senator Perrault: You are being very political right now.

Senator Phillips: Very political, yes.

Senator Flynn: Just wait until we get to the other side, to Vancouver!

Senator Phillips: His job was to reorganize the government. He was so busy doing that that he forgot to pay attention to the fact, or someone forgot to tell him, that fishermen need fuel in order to run the motors on their boats.

You know, Senator Perrault—and I say this to you with the greatest respect, knowing how this government is always contracting out various tasks and collecting back 10 or 15 per cent of the fee for the Liberal Party—you really missed an opportunity. You could have had a study done there and got another 15 or 20 per cent contribution to your funds.

Let's move on to Quebec—

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, that kind of allegation is really quite improper. It is certainly unparliamentary.

Senator Phillips: Pardon me, senator, but—

Senator Perrault: If the honourable senator wishes to go to the front steps—

Senator Phillips: I have the floor, Senator Perrault.

Senator Perrault: I rise on a point of order.

Senator Roblin: It is not a point of order. It is a question of privilege.

Senator Perrault: On a point of privilege, then. If you wish, Senator Phillips, to make those kinds of charges against any member of the Senate or of this party, then go to the front steps of the Senate and make them publicly and lay yourself open to the full action of the law.

Senator Grosart: That is not a point of order!

Senator Phillips: Oh, go away! If you had had to do that, you would have been back with your inmates in British Columbia.

Then we come to the province of Quebec, honourable senators. Sometimes in the debate we forget that Quebec is associated with the Atlantic provinces. It is. It is closely associated with them in a good many ways. But let us return to the cabinet representation. I have already dealt with the Prime Minister. We have the Minister of Finance. I suppose when you bring in a budget every three months you haven't time to look at the oil situation and you haven't time to realize, Senator Perrault, that oil costs affect the economy.

Then, in addition, you have the Minister of Justice, who is responsible for Bill C-42. I could go on and elaborate, but I will be brief. I will just say that on Parliament Hill this group is known as "the awkward squad."

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, who is really responsible, took off on a "freebie." The taxpayers paid his expenses. He took off for Venezuela and Mexico. After a couple of weeks down there during the Christmas break, he returned suntanned and very optimistic, saying that both Venezuela and Mexico were going to continue to sell us the same amount of oil.

• (1610)

In the meantime, honourable senators, officials of the National Energy Board and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources were saying, "We have arranged swap agreements. We will export more oil to the midwest United States, and, in turn, the United States will divert more oil to eastern Canada."

Again I emphasize that not one Grit knew anything about it until the Honourable Robert Stanfield raised the question. Not one Grit assumed responsibility. Then, honourable senators, Imperial notified them of the changes, the swaps, and it was accepted by the government with full knowledge and consent.

Golden Eagle, basically a Quebec firm, received permits from the National Energy Board to export over one million gallons of fuel. Their dealers had to take the Golden Eagle Corporation to court to have their contracts honoured. Not a word from the government; not a word from the dumbfounded cabinet.

Those projects were approved by the National Energy Board. I could elaborate on that. However, I have looked at the clock and at my notes, and I see that I shall have to do some condensing. I am sure that Senator Perrault would agree with that.

The bureaucrats in the National Energy Board and the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources received pay increases of from $6,000 to $7,000 per year. When we give someone a pay increase of $7,000 a year, we must have some satisfaction in what that person is doing.

Throughout the debate on Bill C-42, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources did not really want to touch on the authoritative measures in the bill, but, rather, boasted about the necessity of keeping Petro-Canada.

If I may, I shall spend the next few minutes dealing with Petro-Canada. One would have thought that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, having listened to the debate in the House of Commons and in committee concerning Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, would have learned something; that he would have learned to keep clear of this type of situation. But perhaps he can repeat the words in a song that comes, I believe, from Oklahoma, "I saw what I liked and I liked what I saw", and I see the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources pushing Petro-Canada into the same mistakes which Atomic Energy of Canada Limited made.

Honourable senators, I will conclude on the subject of Petro-Canada by drawing your attention to this pamphlet. I am sure that Senator Perrault is familiar with it because he tabled it. It is entitled An Energy Future for Canadians. Not once in that pamphlet is Petro-Canada mentioned. If it was important in November 1978, why is the situation not the same today?

Honourable senators, as a maritimer, I have certain reservations about trusting my oil future to Petro-Canada. I do not need to tell you that Petro-Canada has never drilled a well, has never found a drop of oil, has never even sniffed gas. I shall not go into that—I shall skip that—but let us look at the situation.

Last fall, when the international oil situation was developing as a result of events in Iran, Petro-Canada was busy bouncing around like a golf ball out of bounds attempting to buy an oil company; and it finally found one in western Canada. But, honourable senators, it was looking the wrong way. The shortage is in eastern Canada. It was not until two weeks ago that Petro-Canada looked to the east and then bought a very minor share in various leaseholds. Sending Petro-Canada to deal with various oil nations, as far as I am concerned, honourable senators, is like making Tommy Douglas president of Exxon. While I have great respect for Tommy Douglas' knowledge of the oil industry, I do not think the oil industry has the same respect.

● (1620)

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources presented the argument in the other place that we had to have an organization in Canada that would deal with a comparable organization in other governments. Honourable senators, I need not remind you that my good friend, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, who incidentally crossed the floor, and took a "freebie" to the Far East, spoke to China about their oil exports and their offshore development. If we are to follow the arguments of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources throughout, we shall have to have a communist agency in Canada so that we can deal with China. I notice that Senator Lamontagne is smiling. Even he agrees that it is absurd.

Iran has now become an Islamic republic. Let us thank God the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources did not go to Iran because he would have come back and told us we would have to become an Islamic republic in order to deal with them.

I do not accept the idea that Petro-Canada is essential to deal with other countries. The United States imports far more crude oil and far more natural gas than we do, yet I do not see a Petro-United States. I should like to take up with the sponsor of the bill the question of how Petro-Canada will proceed in the future. I should like to ask him whether it will operate through the Canadian embassy, with trade commissions which are used to dealing with government agencies, or whether Petro-Canada will establish its own offices in places such as Acapulco. I am betting on Acapulco because it ties in more with government restraint.

Honourable senators, when I look at my notes and then look at the time and see how much of it I have consumed, I must arrive at some kind of compromise. I am not so sure that the honourable senators opposite do not deserve to hear me from now until six o'clock, but as a friend I should not inflict that on them.

[Senator Phillips.]

When we speak of oil imports—and the Prime Minister did so yesterday—we must remember that there are certain difficulties. Every major oil exporting nation that supplies crude oil to the Western World is now undergoing communist infiltration. I am sure that Senator Austin, being a former deputy minister, will realize this and agree with me. We can no longer depend on our foreign sources for oil. Venezuela has reduced its amount of light crude by one-third during the past three years. Mexico has been unable to reach its objectives. In addition, it does not have harbour facilities to handle tankers. We have to stop and consider this policy we have developed whereby areas east of the Ottawa Valley line depend upon imported crude, and determine whether it is now practical. I do not think it is. If we, as Canadians, depend upon Canadian sources of oil, we must have some means of transporting the western oil to eastern Canada.

Honourable senators, when the National Energy Board reported that we had surplus gas, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources appeared on television with a map in the background showing a pipeline going to Gaspé, then going south through New Brunswick, and then continuing on to the eastern seaboard of the United States. He thought this was wonderful. I cannot agree with that, because the maps did not even show a diversion to Nova Scotia. I predict that some day a pipeline will be built east of Montreal, but it will be built from Montreal to New York in a southeast direction. That is the most populous and the most profitable route.

● (1630)

Yesterday, the Prime Minister, in his first speech in the other place since October 12, spent some time on energy policy. Perhaps he is not doing any better than I am. He spent his time talking about Montreal to Portland, Maine, and you cannot reverse that. Somebody should have told him that the United States has already rejected a proposal that liquefied Algerian gas be taken into New Brunswick and transported in its liquefied state to the eastern seaboard. That was turned down by the United States because they did not need it.

We in the Atlantic provinces need both oil and natural gas, and in all sincerity I suggest that we dispose of Petro-Canada. I don't care how many oil companies in the west they have bought, or how many portions of leaseholds in eastern Canada they have bought. Dispose of it and construct a pipeline to the maritimes.

Bill C-42 provides for alternative energy. Nova Scotia has coal mines. They were urged to close down the coal mines. In the meantime, Nova Scotia—I am sure Senator Austin agrees with me—at the insistence of and on the advice of the federal government and the then Minister of Energy, the late Senator Greene, developed oil-burning electricity generating plants, and oil imported from the Middle East and Venezuela was going to be cheaper than coal. Bill C-42 gives authority to direct that these oil-burning plants be converted to coal. But who is going to pay the cost? Will it be the experts in the National Energy Board? Will it be the experts in the department? Will it be the minister who dictated this? Certainly the province of Nova Scotia can't.

My notes mention Fundy tidal power. This project has been reviewed, studied and rejected so often that I have lost count. I just ask the Leader of the Government in the Senate: Has the government changed its mind, and are they now considering the Fundy tidal power project?

Bill C-42 provides for rationing. For rationing, Senator McDonald, there are extensive authorities granted in this bill, but the rationing does not apply all across Canada. I appeal to you particularly, Senator McDonald, because I know that you are far more familiar with farm operations than I am. We don't need to discuss the situation or consult computers or Mackenzie King's medium. We know where the rationing is going to take place. It is going to take place in Quebec and the Atlantic provinces.

Senator McDonald: Not necessarily so.

Senator Phillips: Tell me differently.

Senator McDonald: I will if you give me an opportunity.

Senator Phillips: I will give you an opportunity when I am through.

Does this mean that our fishermen on the east coast have to get along with less fuel than those on the Pacific coast? That is exactly the way it reads. Does it mean that our potato combines in Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick have to get along with less gasoline, while your prairie grain combines get along with their usual supplies?

Honourable senators, I am rather shocked at the length of time I have been. I will skip the cost and the guarantees until tomorrow morning.

• (1640)

The Province of Ontario appeared before the House of Commons committee and stated that certain aspects of this bill interfered with provincial jurisdiction. It is not my intention to suggest that we call the Province of Ontario to appear before our committee. After all, we have had recently introduced in the Senate the Bonnell-Frith formula which states that the Senate has nothing to learn from the provinces. But may I ask the massive majority opposite this: Will you not spend a few minutes to see if you have not seriously transgressed provincial authority?

I want to turn now to what I consider one of the most important aspects of this bill so far as the Senate is concerned, and that is the provision of clause 11 in relation to the period of time for which a motion under subclause 11(1) shall be debated. Whereas the House of Commons is allowed three days for such a debate, the Senate shall debate the motion for two days. We are receiving a direction from on high. We are having closure imposed upon us from outside this chamber.

Under subclause 11(10) an order for emergency supply is rescinded in the event that the House of Commons negatives the motion. However—and I would ask honourable senators, regardless of political affiliation, to consider this—there is no mention of what happens in the event that the Senate does not approve the motion. I would ask the Leader of the Government to tell us now what happens in the event that the Senate declines or negates the motion.

We have had too much of this type of legislation in the past. The government is saying, in effect, that regardless of how we vote on the matter after consideration, the measure will come into effect.

Clause 3 provides for the establishment of the Energy Supplies Allocation Board. Jean-Luc Pepin, formerly of Power Corporation, the Anti-Inflation Board and, more recently, the ludicrous National Unity Task Force, now finds himself unemployed for the third time in four years. I would like either the sponsor of the bill or, indeed, the Leader of the Government to advise us whether the order in council appointing Jean-Luc Pepin as Chairman of the Energy Supplies Allocation Board has been prepared.

Hon. A. Hamilton McDonald: Honourable senators, perhaps I might take this opportunity to answer the two questions that Senator Phillips asked during the course of his remarks. First, he wanted to know how Petro-Canada will proceed in the future. To my knowledge there are only two references to Petro-Canada in Bill C-42. The first reference deals with the fact that Petro-Canada will be a member of the Energy Supplies Allocation Board; the second reference is to the effect that Petro-Canada will be Canada's representative to the International Energy Agency. Whether Petro-Canada will work through our embassies or trade missions or have one commissioner in Acapulco, as suggested by the honourable senator, I do not know. If he requires further information in that regard, he shall have to seek it when we are in Committee of the Whole.

During the course of his remarks, Senator Phillips made the statement that he knew that rationing would be in the province of Quebec and Atlantic Canada, and he then went on to ask whether there would be less diesel fuel available for potato harvesters in New Brunswick or Prince Edward Island than would be available in Saskatchewan.

Senator Phillips: P.E.I. first, and then New Brunswick.

Senator McDonald: Well, it would apply to potato harvesters wherever they are used in Canada. In answer to the senator's question, I want to refer back to the remarks I made in introducing the bill earlier today. I quote:

In the event of an emergency being declared by the Governor in Council, it will be the board's job to implement a mandatory allocation program to assure sufficient supplies of oil products and their equitable distribution.

The bill, under "critical uses," deals, for example, with health services, security and food production. The whole purpose of this bill is to prevent the situation that the honourable senator has referred to. The purpose of the bill is to allocate equally the energy resources available to Canada among Canadians from east to west or west to east. There will not be oversupplies in one area and insufficient supplies in others if this bill becomes law. Without the bill, that could quite easily happen. But the whole purpose of this bill, or one of its main purposes, is to prevent the very thing the honourable senator is concerned about.

Senator Phillips: May I ask the sponsor of the bill why it specifies that there may be specific areas affected? If it is not going to apply all over, why is that clause in there?

Senator McDonald: Because there is a good deal of oil produced in western Canada and little or no oil produced in eastern Canada; eastern Canada is dependent, to a large extent, on importation of oil from outside Canada. So it is quite possible that you would have to bring in some controls over the use of western Canadian oil and its movement into eastern Canada if those supplies from outside were shut off to the areas of Canada to which you have referred; namely, Quebec and the maritimes. It is possible to have insufficient oil in one area and a surplus in others. This legislation gives the government the power to move that oil from wherever it is in a surplus position to areas where it is in a deficiency position.

● (1650)

Senator Smith (Colchester): I wonder if I could ask the honourable senator if he would mind directing us to the provision in the bill that does what I heard him say during his speech; namely, to make sure that there was a fair distribution of petroleum products to all parts of Canada.

Senator McDonald: I am sorry, honourable senator, I did not hear your question. Will you please repeat it?

Senator Smith (Colchester): I was just asking the honourable senator if he could direct our attention to that portion of the bill that provides for the requirement to the board that it carry out the fair allocation of petroleum products over the whole of the country, so that the situation envisaged by Senator Phillips could not exist.

Senator McDonald: Yes. If I can locate in the bill the duties of the board I will be able to answer the question. If you turn to page 6 you will see the headings "Part I", and "Mandatory Allocations of Supplies". If you follow that through on the continuing pages, 7 and 8, and to the top of page 9, you will see that that will give you the answer to your question.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, may I direct a question to the sponsor of the bill? Would he attempt to obtain an opinion from the law officers of the Crown concerning clause 11(10), which states that the House of Commons may negate—and I think that should be "negate"—the motion that such an order be concurred in, whereupon the order is revoked? The honourable senator will note that there is no mention of the Senate's participating in this. Before the minister appears before the committee tomorrow, would the sponsor of the bill kindly attempt to obtain the opinion of the law officers of the Crown on this matter?

Senator McDonald: Well, it seems to me that if the House of Commons were to take the action referred to in clause 11(10), the subject matter would never come before this house.

[Senator McDonald.]

Senator Flynn: But let us say it is affirmed, and negated by the Senate. What happens then?

Senator Phillips: That is exactly my point. If the House of Commons passes it, and the Senate negates it, then what? That is the question that I want answered by the law officers of the Crown.

Senator McDonald: That is a good question. I will attempt to get the answer.

Senator Smith (Colchester): I wonder if the honourable senator would let me ask another question arising out of the answer to the one I asked a moment ago. He referred to clause 12 of the bill, and as I understood his answer he was indicating that in his opinion that clause required such an allocation of petroleum products throughout the whole of the country that the situation envisaged, or mentioned, by Senator Phillips, could not arise; but with the greatest of respect I would like to ask him if he would consider the matter further, in the light of what I am about to say, and state whether or not he still is of the same opinion.

Clause 12, to which he referred—

Senator McDonald: Pardon me. I referred to clause 11, at the bottom of page 6.

Senator Forsey: It should have been clause 12.

Senator McDonald: I am referring to Part I, and the mandatory allocation of supplies.

Senator Forsey: It should have been clause 12.

Senator McDonald: I referred to the mandatory allocation of supplies on page 6, at clause 11(1).

Senator Smith (Colchester): I read all of that, and then I went to clause 12, which I think was also mentioned by the sponsor. Clause 12(1) requires the board to:

... immediately prepare a mandatory allocation program in respect of petroleum to assure sufficient supplies of that product in the various parts of Canada by providing for a national and equitable distribution of petroleum products from the suppliers to the wholesale customers thereof.

If one stopped there, one would agree with the view expressed, I think, by the sponsor of the bill; but when one reads a little further into clause 12, the other question arises. For instance, remember that clause 12(1) only requires the board to prepare a program. Then subclause (2) states:

(2) A mandatory allocation program shall

(a) designate the regions in which the program is to operate if it is not to extend to the whole of Canada;

(b) specify the petroleum products, the supplies of which are to be controlled under the program;

(c) set out the priorities of use of the controlled product; and

(d) provide for a systematic allocation of supplies of the controlled product.

One then goes on to subclause (4)(a), dealing with the powers of the Governor in Council to amend a mandatory allocation program:

(a) by providing that its operation be extended to other regions or all regions of Canada, or that its operation be reduced by excluding regions from the operation of the program;

That seems to me to call seriously into question what would appear from a first reading of clause 12(1).

Senator McDonald: I can understand the honourable senator's concern, but in reading back to clause 11, and then through to the subclauses under clause 12 to which you have referred, I was convinced that this would provide adequate authority for the allocation of petroleum or energy products, or their rationing, if need be, to serve all the needs of Canada. We may find ourselves, again, on the basis of my deduction from this legislation, in a position where all areas of Canada may not be affected at one time. It may be necessary to implement parts of these programs in one region in Canada, before having them apply to the whole country. That is a position in which we may find ourselves, not knowing whether an international oil crisis would affect the whole of the nation or only the maritime provinces and Quebec, for argument's sake. In that case this legislation could apply only to that region, in an endeavour to solve their problems. But who knows? In weeks or months thereafter the legislation may apply to the whole nation. However, I was satisfied with this legislation when I read it, and if the honourable senator is not satisfied with it I would ask that he question the minister when he is before the committee, because my knowledge of the bill only extends to my interpretation of its principles.

Senator Smith (Colchester): I thank the honourable senator. Of course, my knowledge of the bill extends no further than his, but such knowledge as I have gained from reading it does certainly raise this doubt in my mind, because there is no other reason that I know of for the bill to talk about designating regions in which the program is to operate, or giving the Governor in Council authority to exclude regions from the operation of the bill, unless it is intended that someone—the Governor in Council or the board—shall have power to say that this will apply to the Atlantic region and shall not apply to the rest of Canada, and so on. So it seems to me that the power exists to say that there shall be rationing in Atlantic Canada, or some portion of it, and there shall be no rationing in Alberta.

● (1700)

Senator McDonald: I think you are carrying it a little too far when you go to rationing. You are referring to petroleum allocation, and in clause 12(4)(a) it says:

(a) by providing that its operation be extended to other regions or all regions of Canada, or that its operation be reduced by excluding regions from the operation of the program;

I think that all this is attempting to do is to apply the legislation only in those areas where a situation demands it.

That may be the whole nation or it may be just parts of Canada, because neither our supply nor our storage in Canada is equally distributed across the nation. For instance, it is my understanding that a lot of oil that goes to the Atlantic provinces is refined in Montreal. Now if something were to happen to those refineries in Montreal, you would have a problem on your hands in Quebec and eastern Canada that might not apply to some parts of western Canada. And I think what the legislation attempts to do is to give enough leeway to deal with a situation of that kind which could be caused because of internal forces as well as external forces. Who knows, if there is a fire or—

Senator Flynn: You could have a national emergency.

Senator McDonald: Well, I suppose if Quebec and eastern Canada were out of energy supplies, it could be considered a national emergency.

Senator Phillips: Did I understand Senator McDonald to say that most of the oil consumed in the maritimes was refined in Montreal? Because, if he did, I would have to correct him. We have Point Tupper, Dartmouth, Halifax, and St. John's, Newfoundland.

Senator McDonald: That is not what I said. I said a lot of the oil for eastern Canada is refined in Montreal, as, in the west, a lot of the oil refined for western Canada is refined in Edmonton, and if the Edmonton plant were knocked out, then all of western Canada would be affected. The emergency would not be confined just to Edmonton or to Alberta.

Senator Smith (Colchester): I suppose I should try and make a speech on the subject rather than persist in questioning, but perhaps honourable senators would prefer me to limit myself to questions.

Does that not then bring us to the point where we have to acknowledge that for whatever reason there may be allocation in one part of the country and no allocation in another? This means to me almost inevitably that the part of the country in which the allocation is done is going to have less access to whatever the petroleum product is than the other parts of the country. Therefore the ability to use energy or petroleum products freely may be substantially restricted in the Atlantic provinces, for instance, when there are no restrictions at all in other parts of the country.

Senator McDonald: No, I would not envisage that as being the situation. Let us come back for a moment to the centres in Canada that are the main refining centres. They are located in relatively few places, when you look at the total refining capacity of the nation. This legislation not only makes provision for happening outside our own borders, but it also makes provision for catastrophes within Canada, in the energy field, that would make it necessary to allocate fuels or energy supplies, because of some internal problems in Canada. Leaving Montreal aside, I can refer to the refineries in Edmonton, Alberta. If for some unknown reason the capacity of those refineries was removed from western Canada, then you would need oil allocation, because those refineries in Edmonton supply a very large area of western Canada. I envisage the legislation as being able to take care of that problem whether it is in Montreal, the maritimes or western Canada in the event that you had to have allocation, because some of those large refineries were not available for whatever reason.

Senator Olson: I really think that what we are getting involved in here ought to be dealt with more properly in committee.

Senator Grosart: Senator Smith (Colchester) has the floor.

Senator Smith (Colchester): I was under the impression I had it for some time.

Senator Olson: Well then, let him make a speech.

The Hon. the Speaker: I should point out that Senator Olson has risen at least two or three times.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Well, honourable senators, I have asked questions several times, and all I got on my feet to do was to say that I did not wish to pursue the matter any further, but I did not wish that to be understood to mean that I was accepting or agreeing with the explanation given by the honourable senator.

Senator McDonald: I would much prefer, honourable senators, if we could leave these details to our committee study. The minister and his officials are far more capable than I am and have a better understanding of the petroleum industry or the energy industry than I do. My knowledge is limited to what is contained in this bill, and, of course, my interpretation of the bill. Of course, the bill is subject to your interpretation as well as mine, so I think it would be helpful if we were to leave it for study in committee.

Senator Smith (Colchester): I am prepared to do that, and that is what I rose the last time to say.

Hon. H. A. Olson: Honourable senators, I think it would be appropriate for me to say a few words on this bill, coming as I do from the region of Canada that supplies most of the petroleum energy for the country. One of the concerns that has been expressed by people involved in the industry there, as well as the provincial government, is this matter of the interpretation of the words, "What is a national emergency?" That is really what the whole bill, and the application of the whole bill hinges upon. It says in Part I on page 6 that there must first be a declaration of a national emergency, and then all of the other measures that the bill provides for follow on behind.

I suggest that while a great deal has been said about the so-called extreme measures involved in the bill, if a national emergency is declared only when there is a genuine national emergency in terms of shortage of supplies and that sort of thing, then I should think that Canadians generally would expect the board administering the allocation of supply, and even individual rationing if it should go that far, to administer it fairly uniformly across the country. If they are going to do that, then, of course, they have to have, I suggest, most of the powers contained in this bill, if and when it is necessary.

I am sure that every member of this chamber can find some agreement with the government in that. Because of the situation in the Middle East, particularly in Iran, if we go into a fairly long period when there is no Parliament in session, some authority is needed to deal with what might be an emergency.

[Senator McDonald.]

● (1710)

Senator Flynn: How long can Parliament not be in session? Two months and a half.

Senator Olson: If there is dissolution of Parliament, it is usually five months before Parliament is recalled.

Senator Flynn: It can be recalled before.

Senator Olson: It cannot be recalled until after the writs are returned, which is three or four weeks after election day. From the time the writs are issued until an election can be held is about eight weeks or 59 days. It usually adds up to much more than the number of days my honourable friend is suggesting. In any event, it is a practice, I think, for Parliament not to be recalled until the government has had time to put its program together. I am not being partisan.

Senator Flynn: It would have to be recalled under this act.

Senator Olson: I realize that, but I am not being partisan.

Senator Flynn: But you are ignorant.

Senator Olson: Whether the same government is returned or a new government is elected, that government needs some time to put a program together so it can meet Parliament in an orderly and intelligent way. The Honourable Leader of the Opposition shakes his head, but I can recall at least one case where his party met Parliament before they were prepared, and it was a bit of a disaster not only for Canada but for his party.

Senator Smith (Colchester): You are not thinking of Walter Gordon, are you?

Senator Olson: If you want to look at the history of the dates of dissolution, you will see that Parliament is recalled, honourable members, including the Leader of the Opposition, usually after about five months—about two months before election date and about three months after election date. Therefore it may be that we need the federal government to have some power to deal with an emergency if we are going to be away from here for five months or so during 1979 which, I agree, is a distinct possibility. I am not referring to the emergency; I am referring to the possibility of Parliament not being in session for about five months.

I am concerned about what conditions would exist to declare a national emergency. It is spelled out to some extent under Part I on page 6. Clause 11(1) talks about shortages of petroleum or disturbances in the petroleum market. It goes on to say:

... that affect or will affect the national security and welfare and the economic stability of Canada—

That broadens the interpretation quite a lot. I feel we have to be fair with all provinces and with all regions.

Certainly, the petroleum industry forms a very large and important part of the economies in the western provinces, particularly Alberta. Therefore, if there were an interpretation that the national economy or the stability of the national economy was upset, or a possibility of it being upset, and that you could then use this bill to control prices and to have allocation based on those prices, among other things, I would hope the government would not consider that as part of the use of this bill.

Quite frankly I am not so concerned that some government may be tempted to do that at the outset. If it were going to use this bill, I am sure it would have to perceive an emergency related to shortage of petroleum, but I am a little bit concerned that they might extend the application of the authority within this bill, including the extension of price control for reasons other than a shortage. In other words, if the price went up, that might take care of the shortage.

This is not a matter that Albertans generally regard as never having happened before, because it has happened once or twice. That region of Canada was asked to make a very significant contribution to fighting inflation all over Canada by taking something less than the world market price over an extended period so that there could be equalization of price all over the country. Alberta agreed to do that. I am not saying she willingly agreed to it, but she did, and that has been followed through. I think there is, therefore, some justifiable apprehension that they would not expect the producing provinces to carry on with that very significant financial contribution if prices in the international market did increase to some extent.

It is not a matter of allocating this only to energy prices in the fight against inflation; there are other commodities produced in this country that are just as important as energy to the total economy, and I might say there are some that are in an equally buoyant marketing situation at the moment. For example, look at the shortages in the pulp and paper industry. Their prices have improved significantly, and I am happy to say those companies are doing better than they were only a few months ago. To suggest that only the petroleum industry shall bear the brunt of trying to keep inflation under control is a little bit unfair.

I want to raise the concern that there are a great number of people in Alberta who believe that there is a temptation to single out energy as the culprit in all of this inflationary pressure. It probably got started with the OPEC agreement several years ago.

That is really all I wanted to suggest, honourable senators. I do not object to the government having this bill so that they can declare a national emergency, if a national emergency exists, on the basis of real shortages and prices being forced up and shortages of supply to some parts of the country. I think the people of Alberta would feel betrayed if it were used, as it has been once or twice in the past, as the major weapon in the fight against inflation.

With those remarks, I would hope that the minister tomorrow will give some detailed explanations of some of the questions that have been raised here. By and large I am sure that the people of the region that I come from would support this kind of bill, but only in conditions where there was a real emergency.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Eugene A. Forsey: Honourable senators, at this stage I have not very many observations to make about this bill. I shall have, when it comes before the Committee of the Whole, some 20-odd questions that I shall want to put to the minister unless, of course, somebody else puts them first and they are dealt with satisfactorily. But there are certain features of the bill that I should like to say something about on second reading.

I, unfortunately, could not be here to hear the speech of the Honourable Senator McDonald and, similarly, unfortunately could not be here to hear much and perhaps most of the speech of the Honourable Senator Roblin. This is something of a handicap for a variety of reasons, among them that I may possibly say something that has already been said much better or raise some question that has already been thoroughly dealt with. I make my apologies to honourable senators for that possibility.

● (1720)

There are certain matters which I think I should raise, even at the risk of being somewhat repetitive. There are one or two points that have been made that I should like to underline and even perhaps briefly elaborate upon.

With almost every word of what the Honourable Senator Roblin said I found myself in hearty agreement. I think there are a great many features of this bill which are highly questionable, from the point of view of proper legislative practice, particularly.

The first specific point I want to mention is that I am glad to see that in clause 2(2) it states:

In this Act, the expression "regulation under this Act" includes an order made by the Board pursuant to any regulations made under Part I or Part II by the Board, and a regulation under this Act and any order or direction of the Governor in Council or the Board under this Act shall be deemed to be a statutory instrument—

That is highly welcome to anyone who holds the position, as I do, of co-chairman of the Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments. This is good. I welcome it. But it seems to make clearer, on the other hand, that some delegated instruments—of which, as the Honourable Senator Roblin pointed out, there may be an enormous multitude—would not be statutory instruments and would therefore not come before the Statutory Instruments Committee. Or putting it another way, the fact that the regulations made under Part I or Part II by the board and any order or direction of the Governor in Council of the board are to be deemed statutory instruments, seems to me to put all the other instruments and documents which may come up in the operation of this act in limbo. They may never come before the Statutory Instruments Committee at all.

There are a number of specific questions I should like to ask about that, but I shall leave that until tomorrow.

The second point I want to draw attention to at this stage is one that has already been emphasized, certainly by Senator Phillips and I think also by Senator Roblin, if my memory serves. Under clause 11, subclause (10), the Senate plays no part whatsoever. This seems to me highly objectionable. I should add to that that under clause 19 there is no provision at all for any kind of parliamentary control.

Senator Flynn: That is right.

Senator Forsey: It specifies merely in subclause (2) of clause 19 that:

An order made under subsection (1) shall be laid before Parliament forthwith upon the making thereof or, if Parliament is not then sitting, on any of the first fifteen days next thereafter that Parliament is sitting.

Well, when I saw that, I was inclined to think, of course, that the next subclause would say something like what we have in clause 11, subclause (10), or better. But, no, there it stops. So far as I can see there is no provision for such orders to be subject to parliamentary approval whatsoever. That seems to me to be a serious gap in this legislation.

Then clause 21 seems to raise a question of principle. I should like to ask honourable senators learned in the law to consider seriously how far this Parliament can go in interfering in the field of contracts. I am not prepared to offer a lay opinion on that, but I should very much like to hear the opinions of honourable senators who are qualified professionally, as I am not. I should like also to know what exactly would make a contract fundamentally different from what the express terms of the contract would indicate. That seems to me a question that is of some considerable importance.

Clause 22. I endorse heartily all that Senator Roblin said on the subject of this clause. I think that he was perhaps even a little generous, a little gentle, a little easy in what he said. It seems to me that this clause is a very sweeping one and is a means of bypassing the courts. While I am not prepared to say that sometimes an administrative tribunal may not be superior to the courts for certain purposes, I am always inclined to regard with a good deal of suspicion anything that bypasses the courts or submits matters of this sort to an administrative tribunal rather than to the ordinary courts.

I should like to see some very strong reason presented why this question should not go before the ordinary courts. Possibly it would need some fairly elaborate statement, elaborate drafting, to put it satisfactorily before the courts, but the thing as it stands seems to leave an absolutely astounding breadth of discretion to the executive. That makes me decidedly uneasy.

I am trying to put my remarks in moderate terms. I could use much stronger terms, I think, in regard to that particular clause.

Now, and I think this is my final point, in clause 23, subclause (1)—and really some of the other subclauses as well are involved—there is a provision having to do with complying with any request in writing from the minister. I want to point out that there is no mention that I can discover in this act of who the minister is. I thought we might get it in the definition section, but we simply get “the Minister.” It says:

[Senator Forsey.]

Where, in order to comply with any request in writing from the Minister to develop an implementation plan or arrangement in relation to this Act—and so on —a person would be required to enter into any agreement, arrangement or course of action that might cause him to contravene the Combines Investigation Act, such person may apply to the Board for an order exempting him from that Act in respect of that particular agreement, arrangement or course of action.

I don't think the Honourable Senator Roblin mentioned the Combines Investigation Act in his list or catalogue of acts which might be overridden or deviated from, and I think it is an important point that is worth consideration.

Again it seems to confer, and this time on a single minister—not on the board or on the Governor in Council—a power without even specifying what minister it is. I suppose it would be the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, but subclause (2) refers to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. The thing seems to be rather loosely drafted and to empower some minister, unknown, to override in certain circumstances the provisions of the Combines Investigation Act. This may be necessary, but I think we should have some explanation of it. It is an additional case to those mentioned by the Honourable Senator Roblin in which the executive, in effect, is given very wide powers to override, by subordinate legislation, acts of the Parliament of Canada.

I see Senator Grosart looking often at the clock, as he always does during my remarks. I can assure him that I have now come to the end of what I want to say on second reading. But I say that without in any way limiting my intention to raise a considerable number of specific points, in specific terms, when we get the minister here and can ask him detailed questions on the particular points that I have noted in the notes which I have made on this bill. I think that that is a quite sufficient intervention of mine at this stage.

● (1730)

Senator Bell: Honourable senators, I shall not speak for long. I am very much concerned that no one seems to have mentioned compensation. In clause 22 there is reference to payment of compensation for deprivation of property, but there appears to be no mention of third party injury in the bill. I cannot see that we are setting a very good precedent. Even in wartime if property is expropriated or if, somehow or other, a business can no longer operate or is wiped out, there is provision for compensation. Am I wrong in that? Is there provision in the bill for recompensing injured parties? I cannot see how we can approve in principle these sweeping powers when there is no way of recompensing people or businesses that are injured.

Senator McDonald: Honourable senators, I am of the view that the questions which have been raised should be asked of the minister and his officials tomorrow. Believing that, I shall be moving, seconded by Senator Petten, that the bill be committed to a Committee of the Whole at the next sitting of the Senate.

Senator Flynn: After second reading.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by the Honourable Senator McDonald, seconded by the Honourable Senator Petten, that this bill be now read a second time.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Senator Flynn: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time, on division.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator McDonald: Honourable senators, I move, seconded by Senator Petten, that the bill be committed to a Committee of the Whole at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

BANK ACT QUEBEC SAVINGS BANKS ACT BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-49, to amend the Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Banks Act.

Bill read first time.

SECOND READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Senator McIlraith: Honourable senators, I move, seconded by Senator Langois, with leave of the Senate, that this bill be now read a second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. George J. McIlraith: Honourable senators, the bill is rather short and very direct in its purpose.

Senator Lamontagne: A simple bill.

Senator Flynn: Not simple. You will regret those words.

Senator McIlraith: Under the present act extending the provisions of the Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Banks Act, if the House of Commons is sitting next Wednesday, the charters of the chartered banks and the Quebec savings banks will expire on April 1 of this year. If Parliament is not sitting, the charters are extended until 60 days after the new session of Parliament. In that circumstance, it is prudent not to go to the eleventh hour and the fifty-ninth minute before seeking to extend the charters.

This new bill is in exactly the same terms as the act extending the charters, except for the change in date. It may be useful if I read directly from the bill rather than try to paraphrase it, because that is a more precise and accurate way of doing it. Clause 1 of the bill says:

Section 6 of the Bank Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"6. Subject to this Act,

(a) if Parliament sits on at least twenty days during the month of March, 1980, the bank may carry on the business of banking until the first day of April, 1980, and no longer;

If Parliament were still sitting next Wednesday, the charters of the banks would expire on April 1.

(b) if Parliament does not sit on at least twenty days during the month of March, 1980, the bank may carry on the business of banking until the sixtieth sitting day of Parliament next thereafter, and no longer."

Senator Flynn: Would you repeat the last part?

Senator McIlraith: Yes:

(b) if Parliament does not sit on at least twenty days during the month of March, 1980, the bank may carry on the business of banking until the sixtieth sitting day of Parliament next thereafter, and no longer."

That is exactly the same clause that is now in the amending act, and, of course, the clauses affecting the Quebec savings banks are identical.

That is the whole point of the measure. I do not know if there is much purpose in my trying to elaborate. It is at least direct and specific.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, I will not delay the second reading of this bill. It is quite obvious that Parliament cannot dispose of the Bank Act before the end of this month—I think March 28 is the relevant date—and therefore we need an extension.

I have always found it difficult to understand the process of extending the Bank Act up to April 1, or for 60 days in a new session if Parliament does not sit 20 days in March, as in the present legislation. I do not know why we do not have a fixed date. It would be much simpler. If Parliament were to adjourn today until the end of the month, we could benefit from the extension of 60 days in a new session of Parliament. In any event, this is the accepted device, and it has passed the other place in this manner.

I merely wanted to put those comments on the record.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Senator McIlraith moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

● (1740)

SPORTS

REQUEST THAT CITIES OF EDMONTON, QUEBEC AND WINNIPEG BE ADMITTED TO NHL—MOTION IN AMENDMENT ADOPTED

The Senate resumed from earlier this day the debate on the motion of the Honourable Senator Asselin, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Everett:

That the Senate express the wish that the cities of Edmonton, Winnipeg and Quebec be admitted to the National Hockey League and that the representatives of the Montreal Canadiens, Toronto Maple Leafs and Vancouver Canucks support the admission of those three Canadian cities.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, I think we made too much of a fuss about this motion earlier this afternoon. There was a point when it would have carried without too much difficulty. Senator Asselin's motion might be more acceptable if we were to amend it by deleting all the words after the word "League"; that is:

and that the representatives of the Montreal Canadiens, Toronto Maple Leafs and Vancouver Canucks support the admission of those three Canadian cities.

If we delete those words we will convey the idea that we are only expressing the wish that the cities of Edmonton, Winnipeg and Quebec be admitted to the National Hockey League. That and no more. We would not be urging anyone to do anything. We would be simply expressing a wish that the clubs of these cities be admitted to the National Hockey League. If that is agreeable, I will move that the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "League".

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Asselin, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Everett:

That the Senate express the wish that the cities of Edmonton, Winnipeg and Quebec be admitted to the National Hockey League and that the representatives of the Montreal Canadiens, Toronto Maple Leafs and Vancouver Canucks support the admission of those three Canadian cities.

In amendment, it is moved by the Honourable Senator Flynn, P.C., seconded by the Honourable Senator Grosart, that the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "League."

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion, as amended?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Motions:

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until tomorrow, Friday, March 23, 1979, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 10 a.m.

THE SENATE

Friday, March 23, 1979

The Senate met at 10 a.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Perrault tabled:

Report of the Canadian Transport Commission for the year ended December 31, 1978, pursuant to section 28(2) of the National Transportation Act, Chapter N-17, R.S.C., 1970.

Report on the operations of the Shipping Conferences Exemption Act for the year ended December 31, 1978, pursuant to section 12 of the said Act, Chapter 39 (1st Supplement), R.S.C., 1970.

Report on the Administration of the Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances Act for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1978, pursuant to section 35 of the said Act, Chapter 25, (1st Supplement), R.S.C., 1970.

Report of the Superintendent of Insurance for Canada, Volume III, Annual Statements of Life Insurance Companies and Fraternal Benefit Societies, for the year ended December 31, 1977, pursuant to section 8 of the Department of Insurance Act, Chapter I-17, R.S.C., 1970.

Report of the Postmaster General respecting Olympic coins for the period ending September 30, 1978, pursuant to sections 13(2) and 13(3) of the Olympic (1976) Act, Chapter 31, Statutes of Canada, 1973-74.

Report of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, together with a statement of accounts certified by the Auditors, for the year ended December 31, 1978, pursuant to section 33 of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act, Chapter C-16, and sections 75(3) and 77(3) of the Financial Administration Act, Chapter F-10, R.S.C., 1970.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

CUT IN GRANTS FOR BILINGUAL EDUCATION IN PROVINCES— QUESTION

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Leader of the Government a question respecting bilingualism. It has to do with the fact that the government decided recently to cut the grants to the provinces in the amount of $34 million that would provide funds for the promotion of bilingual education in the provinces.

My question is: Did the government have an opportunity to consult with the Commissioner of Official Languages before that policy was decided upon, and, if so, what was his advice?

Senator Perrault: The question will be taken as notice.

BONUS TO BILINGUAL PUBLIC SERVANTS—QUESTION

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I have a supplementary question on the same point. I notice that the government has decided to restore the bonus to bilingual public servants in the amount of $35 million, which is just about the same amount as the reduction for the educational grant. I would ask the same question on that point: Did the government consult with the Official Languages Commissioner on that point, and, if so, what was his advice?

Senator Perrault: As the honourable senator is aware, advice received from officials is not divulged in this context. Disclosure of advice tendered to any government by its officials would be highly unusual. It may be, however, that during his time as premier of the great province of Manitoba this procedure was followed and encouraged.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, I always notice that when my honourable friend does not want to answer a question as directly as one would wish, or he does not like the question, he attacks the questioner. That is called ad hominem, which I believe is a Latin expression meaning that if you do not like the question you attack the man.

I am rather interested in this little tactic of his, because it reveals a certain attitude of mind toward these problems which is really not conducive to the conduct of public affairs.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I raise the serious question whether or not, in the honourable senator's experience in public life, as a matter of course the advice received from officials has been divulged either in a question period or in some other form? I suggest the answer is no.

Senator Flynn: That is a question, not an answer.

Senator Roblin: Honourable senators, it depends entirely on the official of whom the question is asked. With respect to some officials, the answer might be yes; but with respect to the Official Languages Commissioner, whose function it is to deal with these questions of a bilingual nature, I think it would be reasonable to ascertain his view of the matter.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, may I also suggest to the honourable senator that he should feel free to contact the Official Languages Commissioner and put the question to him directly. Perhaps he will receive a speedier reply.

Senator Roblin: I am sure I will have a speedier reply if I do that.

● (1010)

Senator Flynn: If you won't tell us what the commissioner's opinion was, perhaps you could tell us what the government's reasons were for changing its mind?

Senator Perrault: There has been no change of mind with respect to the value of the use of a second language in this country, but the question will be taken as notice and it may be possible to bring additional information to the Senate, perhaps next week.

Senator Flynn: Perhaps!

VETERANS AFFAIRS

SALE OF VICTORIA CROSS—QUESTION

Senator Marshall: Honourable senators, may I ask a question further to the one I asked yesterday with regard to the selling or auctioning of a Victoria Cross? I should state that a Military Medal and a Military Cross were also included in that sale, together with service decorations.

It has also been revealed that the Canadian War Museum is getting rid of unclaimed and unawarded medals, which are being sold and then falling into unscrupulous hands. Could the Leader of the Government get some information on this in addition to the information he is going to get from the Minister of Veterans Affairs on the question I asked yesterday? This situation is serious and is a blight on the value of the service decorations received by veterans who served their country.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, that information has not been drawn to my attention until this time. Certainly an inquiry will go forward.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

SIGNING OF ISRAELI-EGYPTIAN PEACE TREATY—QUESTION

Senator Bosa: Honourable senators, may I ask the Leader of the Government if he is aware of any plans by the Government of Canada to participate in the celebration of the signing of the historic peace agreement between Israel and Egypt on the north lawn of the White House on Monday, March 26, 1979?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, there are no plans of which I am aware for Canada to be a participant in the signing of a document which will bring peace between Egypt and Israel. However, I think Canadians can derive great satisfaction from the fact that during the long and difficult relationship between these two Middle East countries, Canada has played an extremely constructive role in many areas.

Senator Grosart: Including the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

[Senator Perrault.]

HEALTH RESOURCES FUND ACT

IMPLEMENTATION OF REPORT OF THE STANDING SENATE COMMITTEE ON HEALTH, WELFARE AND SCIENCE—QUESTION

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, on several occasions in the past I have directed questions to the Leader of the Government concerning the recommendation of the Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science on Bill C-2, to amend the Health Resources Fund Act. Is the Honourable Leader of the Government now able to assure the Senate that the government has accepted this resolution? If so, can he give us that assurance before dissolution of Parliament?

Senator Perrault: Honourable senator, I stated some time ago that the minister was giving consideration to the Senate's recommendations, striving always to attempt to improve health services to the Canadian people wherever they may live.

Senator Flynn: The assurance will come during the campaign.

Senator Phillips: Have we any hope of getting an affirmative answer before dissolution?

Senator Perrault: There is always hope, with this ministry.

Senator Phillips: Always hope, but no action.

Senator Roblin: Hope deferred maketh the heart sick.

Senator Grosart: It springs eternal, though.

BANK ACT

QUEBEC SAVINGS BANKS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—THIRD READING

Senator McIlraith moved the third reading of Bill C-49, to amend the Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Banks Act.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it your pleasure to adopt the motion?

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, a few thoughts came to my mind with regard to this bill when it came in late yesterday. It is in the same form as the previous one, and technically there is no problem. But I am amused at the idea that if dissolution should take place this weekend, as has been suggested it might by the Leader of the Government and also by the sponsor of Bill C-42, yesterday, when we were dealing with the necessity to pass that bill, that if such an event were to take place, in principle the government would not need this bill. The banking legislation would be continued for 60 days after Parliament reconvened. The first session of Parliament would start, let us say, in September. I was toying with the idea that perhaps we could delay passage of third reading until Monday or Tuesday, if we are here. If we are not here, it is not important; it is not necessary. If we are here, we could wait until March 28, but I suppose that would bring jitters to the sponsor of the bill and to the government.

But then another idea came to me. Since it is very probable that we will have a new government in the next session, we should in fairness give that new government more time to bring in a better bill.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Goldenberg: Does the Honourable Senator Flynn want to take a chance? Perhaps the new government will not like the banks and will refuse to extend their charters.

Senator Flynn: But, at least, they will have more time to consider that possibility.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

ENERGY SUPPLIES EMERGENCY BILL, 1979

CONSIDERATION IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Pursuant to an Order of the Day, the Senate was adjourned during pleasure and put into Committee of the Whole on Bill C-42, to provide a means to conserve the supplies of energy within Canada during periods of national emergency caused by shortages or market disturbances affecting the national security and welfare and the economic stability of Canada, the Honourable Senator Neiman in the Chair.

Pursuant to rule 18 of the Rules of the Senate, the Honourable Alastair William Gillespie, P.C., Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and Minister of State for Science and Technology, was escorted to a seat in the Senate Chamber.

• (1020)

The Chairman: Mr. Minister, we are pleased to have you with us this morning.

Honourable senators, the Senate is in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-42, intitled: "An Act to provide a means to conserve the supplies of energy within Canada during periods of national emergency caused by shortages or market disturbances affecting the national security and welfare and the economic stability of Canada."

Shall discussion of the title of the bill be postponed?

Senator Thompson: Madam Chairman, I wish to ask the minister a question with respect to the words "periods of national emergency," in the title of the bill.

I notice that the IEA has a clear definition of what it considers an emergency, based on the fall to 7 per cent. I wonder if the minister has some trigger system that would indicate to the country what is a national emergency, similar to the IEA, or if he feels it is better to have the flexibility of not being restricted to a rigid definition whereby he has to make the very hard decision himself.

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: Madam Chairman, it is government's view that a degree of flexibility would be preferable as far as the domestic scene is concerned. Internationally, of course, we would be bound by our treaty obligations under the IEA, and 7 per cent is the trigger number. Honourable senators are aware that we are not far away from that number right now. The IEA member countries have agreed, even though it is not part of their treaty obligations, to accept demand restraint measures equivalent to 5 per cent, being the estimate right now of the shortfall caused by reduction of supply. So the 7 per cent is not all that far away.

As to other measures that might trigger the need to declare a national emergency for purposes of energy, I draw your attention to the fact that the judgment of the Governor in Council would be conditioned by not just one test but four tests. With your forbearance, I should like to draw them to your attention.

Section 11 states:

(1) When the Governor in Council is of the opinion that a national emergency exists by reason of actual or anticipated shortages of petroleum or disturbances in the petroleum markets that affect or will affect the national security and welfare and the economic stability of Canada, and that it is necessary in the national interest to conserve the supplies of petroleum products within Canada, the Governor in Council may—

Senator Roblin: May I ask the minister a question regarding the definition of a national emergency? This definition was prominently featured in the last round of the federal-provincial meetings in connection with the Constitution. At that time the definition of natural resources and the powers of the two levels of government with respect to them was reviewed. It appeared from discussions that "national emergency" was an expression that was not well defined or understood. In other words, there was a dispute about the exact implications of those words.

I think we have much the same question before us now as to what is the rule that will enable the Government of Canada to step in. While I sympathize with the minister in the difficulty of defining this thing to take into account all possibilities, I am wondering how far his concept of the definition really goes.

A point was raised in the Senate yesterday by one of my honourable colleagues, Senator Olson, who was concerned that the expression "economic stability" in this definition should result in the Government of Canada invoking this bill for purposes not related to an oil crisis per se but related to something on the lines of price and wage controls. We would be pleased to have some expression of opinion from the minister on that.

The other question I should like to ask with regard to the same definition relates to the application. Is the minister saying to us that all these conditions have to be present seriatim before the government would consider that the situation calls for an implementation of this clause? It is quite important to know whether all these factors have to come down on the same side of the balance to enable the government to act according to its likes under this clause.

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: Honourable senators, on the first point as to whether this bill could be used, as I understood the question, for purposes of introducing wage and price controls, the answer is no.

Regarding the second question, whether each of the four conditions that I earlier indicated would have to be involved in the declaration of a national emergency, the answer is yes.

If it would help honourable senators to consider some of the conditions that could occur which might provoke the need for this bill, I suppose one obvious not external one would be a major rupture in the interprovincial pipeline system. Honourable senators are aware that the interprovincial pipeline system does not go entirely through Canada. Indeed, there is an important section of that pipeline which goes through another country. There are a number of events which could occur with respect to that particular pipeline which might, in my view, trigger the need for this particular legislation.

Senator Roblin: I think the minister has given me a satisfactory answer. It will not be used as an economic tool but it will be used as a tool of oil policy, and also that these various conditions are seriatim; they are not either or. I think that improves my view of this particular clause.

However, the clause talks mainly of problems within Canada. I suppose it is not hard to say that a lack of oil supply outside Canada will reflect on the situation within Canada. Would the minister please explain to us what our obligations are under the International Energy Agency with respect to its effect on Canada's petroleum situation?

● (1030)

I know he has given us the 7 per cent trigger, and I understand that very well, but when discussing this matter in another place I inquired as to whether or not our domestic supplies might be called upon to make good shortfalls in the oil situation with respect to the agency under certain conditions. While agreeing in advance that it may be a little unlikely that the international situation would deteriorate to the extent that this would happen, I want to know whether we would have an obligation should that event arise.

The Chairman: Senator Roblin, I am wondering whether we are not getting beyond the first question, which was to postpone consideration of the title.

Senator Roblin: You are quite right, Madam Chairman. I will come back to that question later.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Madam Chairman, on the first question, I wonder whether the minister would be kind enough to indicate, with reference to the British North America Act, the precise heads under section 91 on which the constitutionality of this bill relies.

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: Madam Chairman, I am advised by my legal advisers that it is the "peace, order and good government" powers.

Senator Thompson: I wonder if I might ask a question for clarification, Madam Chairman. Senator Roblin has raised an important point, and while I realize it does not come under the title I am wondering what clause it will come under. I do not want it to go unanswered.

Senator Roblin: It will come under subclause 11(1).

The Chairman: Shall the title of the bill be postponed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators—

[Mr. Gillespie.]

The Chairman: Is your question related to the short title, clause 1, Senator Phillips?

Senator Flynn: It is the practice, Madam Chairman, to deal with the generalities of a bill under clause 1.

Senator Phillips: I presume we have the right to discuss the principle of the bill as opposed to just going through it clause by clause.

The Chairman: Not the principle, as I understand it, Senator Phillips, but the generalities.

Senator Phillips: The generalities, then. I am rather disturbed, Madam Chairman, that you are a little over-anxious to avoid questions.

In reading the Prime Minister's speech made in the other place on March 21—the first speech he has made in the House of Commons since October—I note he kept mentioning that we had a shortage of oil in Canada and that this was our problem.

I should like to ask the minister to detail the shortages east of the Ottawa Valley line of gasoline, home heating fuel, and kerosene.

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: There was quite a serious shortage of kerosene and oil used for heating purposes this winter in the Quebec market. It is generally regarded as stove oil. There are a number of reasons for this. I do not know whether honourable senators want me to go into the reasons. One of the main reasons was the shutdown of refineries in Montreal. There were two major problems involving both the Imperial and the Shell refineries. Then, as honourable senators may recall, there was a fire at the Gulf refinery, a major refinery in Montreal, which resulted in a loss of 40,000 barrels a day.

So there was a period when I do not think it is any exaggeration to say that we were faced with a really critical shortage in the Quebec market so far as stove oils were concerned and, to a lesser extent, with regard to other heating oils. Fortunately, measures were taken by the industry and by the government which saw us through that difficult period. I was concerned that a panic could have developed and people would have rushed to fill up their tanks, with the result that real shortages could have occurred during a very cold period. As you will remember, this winter has been an extremely cold one; the temperature was below average, and that aggravated the situation.

The federal government used a number of different techniques to alleviate the situation. We had the Department of National Defence pick up stove oil from the Strategic Naval Reserve at Stephenville in Newfoundland. Two cargoes were brought in, each of 50,000 to 55,000 barrels. Other measures were taken to seek the agreement of the airlines that they would switch from kerosene-type fuels to gasoline-type fuels, the hope being that this would make available more kerosene at this critical juncture. I don't know how successful that was, but the airlines indicated they would do what they could to co-operate.

We see now another dimension of that, in that a kerosene shortage exists in the United States, and there is no question but that some airlines are taking advantage of the situation in Canada, which is now relatively better, and trying to protect themselves by picking up a greater supply than they normally would in this country. I have asked, by letter, all the oil companies to inform me of their practices and of their inventory positions, and I have sought their co-operation so that we can protect Canada and Canadian airlines in this present situation.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, as a maritimer I want to advise the minister that when I speak of eastern Canada I am thinking of regions farther east than Montreal. What shortages were there in the maritime refineries?

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: If you are referring, senator, to the cutbacks caused by the Iranian shutdown, there were a number of reductions. I cannot quantify them here because I do not have a list, but I do know that there were serious shortages caused by reallocation by their supplier companies, and in many cases by their own parents. We were able, through the National Energy Board, to pick up some of those shortages. We have been able to do that through swap arrangements, authorizing additional reserve shut-in capacity in western Canada to move from western Canada to the Chicago market. The swap, which is arranged by the private company, then sells that particular Canadian oil in the Chicago market and then picks up the oil that would have gone into the Chicago market through the United States pipeline and moves that into the maritimes.

Through these swap arrangements we have been able to ensure that no one in the maritimes has gone short. It is also fair to say, though, that it has involved some rundown of inventories in some of these refineries, and that is a matter of continuing concern.

• (1040)

Senator Phillips: Were any of the maritime refineries forced to curtail their operations because they had no crude oil to refine?

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: I think they have been able to maintain their normal operations, as I have indicated, through a process of running down their inventories. That is a matter of concern, the concern being how far and how long a refinery can continue to run down its inventories. So far they have been able to maintain their production, I have been informed.

Senator Phillips: Mr. Minister, may I ask you how many export permits were granted for refineries east of the Ottawa Valley line? I should like to know the number of gallons of fuel involved.

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: Senator Smith, I would be very pleased to give you that information—

Senator Smith (Colchester): That is Senator Phillips. I am Senator Smith.

Senator Phillips: I am sorry, Mr. Minister, but I am Senator Phillips. That is Senator Smith down there. He is better looking than I am.

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: I should be pleased to try to obtain that information for you, senator. I do not have it at my fingertips right now. I will get it and provide it to you.

Senator Flynn: Madam Chairman, I should like to address a question to the minister. With regard to the general purpose of the bill, I was interested in the comments made by the minister with respect to the fact that some purely internal problems could trigger the declaration of a national emergency. I refer to internal problems such as a fire in a refinery, the breakdown of a pipeline, and I suppose we could also add the sinking of tankers. I assume that also would be in the area of internal causes.

It seems to me that, when this bill was introduced, the publicity that surrounded it had to do only with external problems. If that is not the case, why was the legislation delayed so long? All these internal factors have existed within Canada for years and years. It seems to me that, had this been done some years ago and on a permanent basis, that would have provided for a better bill and a better study of the bill. At this time, of course, there appears to be some electoral urgency, but with respect to the internal factors it seems to me they have existed for years and years.

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: Senator Flynn, I believe you are quite right when you say there is some electoral urgency. I think it would be quite irresponsible—

Senator Flynn: I don't know if you give the same meaning as I do to "electoral urgency."

Senator Phillips: "Electoral expediency" is the term.

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: I think you would agree with me, Senator Flynn, that it would be irresponsible for Parliament not to deal with this legislation, when during a period of dissolution the government of the day would not have the powers to deal with an emergency, and an emergency which was in every probability created externally rather than internally.

I have recited how close we are to the trigger mechanism in our treaty obligations, and that is a very recent development, the fact that we are at 5 per cent of world consumption. The shortfall being equivalent to 5 per cent of world consumption is something of really recent origin, since the introduction of this bill about a month ago. In fact, I am not sure whether, when it was introduced a month ago, anyone at that time was saying it was 5 per cent. It was not until shortly after that that the IEA addressed itself to the problem and that we agreed to the IEA figures.

I think it is quite fair to say that the possibility of any kind of emergency being created internally is pretty darned remote. I just wouldn't want to create the impression that that is a matter of any probability. For that reason I think you would agree with me that it was therefore unnecessary. The need for it has been created by an external situation.

You might ask if the external situation has changed? Yes, I would say it has. If we go back a little bit, it was in 1973-74 that honourable senators considered a bill very similar to this—in all essential respects the same bill. That was dealing with an external crisis at that time. You will recall as well that at that time there was a sunset provision. That sunset provision, I believe, was introduced by opposition members. The government accepted it, and I think that helped to speed its passage at that time. I think in retrospect we would now agree that that was a mistake. Indeed, we have drafted this bill a little differently, in the sense that we wanted to provide opportunities for parliamentary approval but wanted to have in permanent place the power to deal with an emergency.

The question might be: Then, after this sunset clause aborted the previous powers, why didn't the government deal directly with the problem then and introduce new legislation? At that time I do not think there was a perception of the international situation being as serious as it has since become. So that is the reason for introducing it now.

You mentioned one other thing, the possible sinking of a tanker as being something which would stimulate the declaration of an emergency. I would want to put your mind at rest on that one. I would certainly not think that that would be the kind of situation which could create the need for declaring a national emergency.

Senator Flynn: I was not thinking of just one tanker being sunk.

Senator Phillips: I am sorry to interrupt Senator Flynn's questioning, but the minister was kind enough to offer to obtain certain information for me. I refer to the export permits east of the Ottawa Valley line. Would he please give me some indication of when I might expect that information? I should like to have it during this committee meeting, if possible.

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: Senator Phillips, I cannot give you that answer right now, but I will seek to get it before this committee completes its work. While we are trying to get you the answer to that, can you tell me for over what period of time you would like to have that information?

Senator Phillips: I just want it for the last 12 months. That is all I ask, Mr. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: Thank you.

Senator Marshall: Honourable senators, I am interested in that aspect of the bill that is going to provide a means to conserve the supplies of energy within Canada during periods of national emergency. I know that one of the problems is the delivery of oil and the supply of oil to eastern Canada. I wonder why, when we are so concerned about the external situation, we do not think of the availability of alternative energy sources. I understand, for example, that in Newfoundland there is a potential output of 2,970 megawatts of hydroelectric power. That is equivalent to several million barrels of oil. In order to relieve this emergency, I wonder what effort the government is taking in extending the financial assistance required to develop that source of energy. When one considers that the Upper Churchill is providing $400 million a year to somebody other than Newfoundland, and that the potential in the Lower Churchill could relieve the situation so greatly, and when one considers that there are other sources of hydroelectric power in Atlantic Canada—which I hope other members will refer to—could the minister tell us what action the government is taking in this respect? The minister has given information in the other place at different times, but it seems that it is being delayed all the time. What action is the government taking to ensure that this is developed in order to relieve Atlantic Canada and the whole country?

● (1050)

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: I am delighted, senator, that you asked that question, because it deals with a project which has been close to my heart for a long time. I am talking about the Lower Churchill Development Corporation and the Gull Island project, to which I know you are referring. It is a matter of great satisfaction to the government, and, indeed, to the people of Newfoundland, and Canadians generally, that the Canadian government and the Newfoundland government have been able to reach an agreement to create the Lower Churchill Development Corporation.

It will be a unique kind of corporation because the federal government will be going in as an equity partner, an equity shareholder, with the Newfoundland government in the development of this huge renewable resource. The federal government will have a minority position, 48 per cent, and the Province of Newfoundland will have a majority position and will appoint the majority of the directors.

The project will involve a debt equity financing in the leverage that is associated with that. In other words, we would expect that with the relatively modest amounts of equity money it will be possible to finance very substantially with debt. I am thinking in the order of something like 10 per cent equity and 90 per cent debt, which debt will be placed in the private sector; and, of course, with the implied or explicit guarantees which one would associate with the two shareholders.

Something in the order of $2 billion, I would expect, would be the cost of the project, the development of Gull Island, with transmission to Newfoundland. That would not include additional transmission moving through Newfoundland or Labrador, through the province of Quebec.

I agree with you, senator, that it is massive, that it is very much consistent with our policy of reducing our dependence on foreign oil. I think that in energy terms, the energy from that particular project, if it had to be provided with petroleum, as much of the electrical generation on the east coast is, it would be equivalent to about 140,000 barrels a day. It is bigger than Syncrude—let us put it in those terms—in terms of reducing our dependence on petroleum.

So it is an extremely important project. I think it can help the whole of Atlantic Canada. It is my hope that another corporation, which we have been very active in developing with the three maritime provinces—I am referring now to the Maritime Energy Corporation, which again will be a first in terms of federal-provincial projects—will be incorporated by May of this year. That is the agreement I have with the three premiers. That particular corporation would be able to contract for the power from Gull Island, bringing that power through the province of Quebec, and using whatever power the maritimes would need; and any additional power that could be sold, the Maritime Energy Corporation would be in a position to do so.

So with those two projects, one can see an integration of the electrical power needs for the whole of Atlantic Canada.

Senator Marshall: Would the minister be able to give a general time limit on when we can expect to see some progress? How far down the road are we talking?

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: How soon can we expect progress on the Lower Churchill Development Corporation? I think it is moving forward very well. The officers have been appointed, the directors have been appointed, and the federal government has put money into it for the first stage. I am not sure whether the Newfoundland government has yet passed the particular provision that is needed, I believe, before it can assign the water rights, and concerning other questions that are all covered in the terms of the agreement, the articles of association in connection with the formation of the corporation. I think it is moving forward well.

Senator Smith (Colchester): With reference to the transmission of power eventually to be generated in the Lower Churchill-Gull Island project, I note that the minister referred to the possibility of transmitting it to the Atlantic provinces, or the maritime provinces, via the province of Quebec. I wonder if that is subject to the consent of the province of Quebec, and, if so, whether that consent has been obtained.

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: The position of the Quebec government, as I have heard it stated, is that it wishes to co-operate. I believe the Premier of Quebec has stated that publicly. I believe I was present on a public occasion when he stated that. The Quebec Minister responsible for Energy has done the same thing. The issue is whether it will be a wheeling agreement, whereby the power is transmitted at cost or close to cost, or whether it will be a buy-sell arrangement. That will be part of the negotiation. I believe there have been preliminary discussions on that.

There is always the possibility, of course, that we could run into difficulties. It is perhaps important in this respect to note that the federal government has the power constitutionally, with respect to interprovincial exchanges, power movements, energy movements—the National Energy Board is, of course, a reflection of that—to regulate interprovincial energy movements. So for all those reasons, I am optimistic.

Senator Smith (Colchester): With reference to the same problem of transmission, has any consideration been given to the possibility of transmission by under-water cable, as was once considered, the power created by the present operating facilities on the Churchill River?

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: Senator Smith, I believe there has been a fair amount of work done with respect to underwater cable, sometimes described as the Anglo Saxon route. I believe also that that work has indicated that it is likely to transmit power at a much higher cost than the alternative, which is through Quebec.

Senator Smith (Colchester): With reference to the negotiation with Quebec, would it be correct that the resulting price to consumers in the maritime provinces would be less with a wheeling arrangement than with a buy-sell arrangement?

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: It is too early to speculate on what the final numbers will be. The important point to be made is that these two huge projects—the Gull Island project and the Maritime Energy Corporation, because of what it anticipates in terms of future development for the maritimes—will provide more secure power and at a lower cost than any alternative way of going about getting it.

Senator Smith (Colchester): I have just one more question concerning Gull Island and the Lower Churchill. There was some publicity given fairly recently to an alleged comment by appropriate authorities in Newfoundland to the effect that Newfoundland was not interested in any arrangement that would result in the transmission of power generated from that project to the maritime provinces. I wonder if the minister is aware whether such an attitude exists or that a statement was made in relation to the project?

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: I am not aware of any views on the part of the Newfoundland government to the effect that they would not want to sell the power to the maritimes. On the contrary, any discussions I have had with the former premier and his colleagues have indicated to me that they see this as an important possibility in terms of the development of Atlantic Canada—in just the same way as the premiers of the three maritime provinces see this as an important resource from which they may be able to benefit.

These major projects will be very expensive; they are all risky; they all involve a long period of time; they are all beyond the capability or competence of any single province. It is only because of the fact that for the first time we have the federal government alongside in an equity way that these projects will come off. That is really the big breakthrough. It is the breakthrough, for example, that will permit the ultimate development of the Fundy Tides, in which so many people in the maritimes are interested. I see that as the first project that the Maritime Energy Corporation will take on. That has to be one of the more exciting new frontiers in the development of this country.

Senator Phillips: Senator Smith, I want to ask a question concerning the Fundy tidal project. If I am interrupting the honourable senator's questioning, I shall withdraw.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Please go ahead.

• (1100)

Senator Phillips: The minister referred to the Fundy tidal project. In the quarter of a century, more or less, that I have spent around here, I have seen the Fundy tidal project surveyed and consulted upon but always rejected. I note that Bill C-42 provides for alternative sources, and the minister has referred to this this morning; but, very disturbingly, he left the Fundy tidal project as a purely maritime matter. May I, honourable senators, ask the minister if the federal government now approves of the Fundy tidal project, whether the government will participate in funding it, and, if so, to what extent? Will the proportion be fifty-fifty, or will the whole of the funding be left to the maritime provinces?

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: The Maritime Energy Corporation has been set up on the basis that the federal government would provide 48 per cent and the provinces the balance. The principle is that it would be low with respect to equity in investment, the larger proportion of the funds for these projects being provided through debt. There are a number of important built-in provisions to ensure that there is a rate of return on the equity as well. It is anticipated that the financing of some of these projects would be on the same basis; that is to say, the federal government would be in a minority position, though it would be a large minority. The provinces would be in a majority position, and the funds provided by the provinces and the federal government would be in the order, say, of 5 to 10 per cent, the balance being raised through debt. I hope that answers the question.

Senator Phillips: I am sorry, honourable senators, but I had difficulty hearing the minister. May I ask him to repeat the explanation as to the funding?

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: Honourable senator, the principle is the same as in the case of the Lower Churchill Development Corporation with regard to debt and equity. This will be shared by the federal and provincial governments. The equity portion of the total financing would be in the order of 5 per cent, but not more than 10 per cent, of the total, the balance being picked up by way of debt. That debt would obviously have a series of securities or guarantees associated with the project itself from the power utilities themselves, the provinces and, ultimately, the federal government. The basic financing scheme would be, let us say, 5 to 10 per cent equity, 90 to 95 per cent debt.

Your other question, I believe, was with regard to the respective portions of the federal and provincial governments. The federal government would put up 48 per cent of the equity, the provincial governments, collectively, in the case of the Maritime Energy Corporation, 52 per cent.

Senator Riley: Madam Chairman, I would like to address a question to the minister with regard to the Maritime Energy Corporation. What is its present status? Have any nominations been made and has the department or the minister yet determined where the head office is going to be located?

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: Senator Riley, no appointments have been made to the board yet, nor has the decision with regard to the location of the head office been made. What has been determined is the set of principles, or articles of association, which will govern. These have been agreed to and formally signed by myself and the three premiers. Attached to that agreement is a list of heads of agreement on subcontracts and articles of association which would govern in the case of the corporation itself. Each province has appointed one person to be responsible for bringing the articles of association to the stage of being ready for signature, and we in the federal government have also appointed such a person. We have also designated in our agreement that May 1 would be the target date for the signature of these contracts.

[Senator Phillips.]

Senator Riley: I take it that the agreement once having been signed, there would be no need for legislation in order to set up the corporation.

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: I am not aware of any as far as the federal government is concerned, but it may be necessary for some of the provinces to do so.

Senator Marshall: I apologize if I seem to be straying from the subject a little, but some of the minister's answers have prompted me to ask about the progress being made between Quebec and Newfoundland with regard to the development of the Lower Churchill, which will mean so much in terms of conservation and supplies of energy.

I presume the minister is aware that in 1969 Newfoundland sold all Hydro Quebec's power to it, with the exception of 300 megawatts. In order to develop the Lower Churchill, Newfoundland is asking Quebec for 800 megawatts, which they refuse to supply unless that province is able to establish reservoirs on five rivers in Newfoundland.

I was a little surprised to hear the minister say in one of his answers that progress is being made in this connection. Has progress got to the point in the three-way discussions where there may be an agreement that this trade-off will happen?

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: No. I certainly would not want to invite that thought, nor is the federal government involved in any way in trying to reconcile the interests of the Government of Newfoundland, on the one hand, with the Government of Quebec on the other. That is a separate issue which stands on its own and is being negotiated on its own. What I was referring to was the comments of the Premier of Quebec and the comments of the Energy Minister of Quebec, when, at various times, they have indicated that they are anxious to co-operate in the movement of power from Gull Island to the province of Quebec. I think the most recent time when that happened was at the Economic Conference of First Ministers last fall.

Senator Argue: We realize that the oil industry in this country is basically, or in general, foreign owned, and I, for one, certainly welcome the initiative of Petro-Canada in the various projects it has underway. I think that it is very worthwhile that there should be a proportion of capital provided by the federal government in this area, both from the standpoint of the Canadian people and as an indication of the initiatives taken and the leadership provided by the government.

I welcome, too, association with provincial governments and also with the private oil industry, on an equity basis.

Having said that, my general question is as follows. Has any effort been made to involve the co-operative movement in providing some of the capital needed for equity? In the province of Saskatchewan we have a very successful and major co-operative oil refinery. The co-operative movement has done a little, but not a great deal, in the exploration field, and it seems to me that it would be most desirable to associate the co-operative movement and co-operative investments with any of these projects in any way possible.

● (1110)

I realize that the profile of the co-operative movement in oil exploration is not high, but there are many billion of dollars of capital in the co-operative movement in this country, and I think it would be desirable from many standpoints if the co-operative organizations could be associated in some way. This is particularly so in western Canada, where the organizations are very large and have access to very large pools of capital in their own right. This is something that might bear fruit. I do not know whether much, or any, consideration has been given to this, and whether there has been success, but I would appreciate the minister's comment.

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: I believe there has been some consideration of that. Probably most of that consideration has been given by the Province of Saskatchewan. Perhaps some has been given—and I am speculating now because I do not know—by Husky Oil. I would refer you to the events of last year when Petro-Canada made an unsuccessful attempt to acquire control of Husky Oil. That particular unsuccessful attempt occurred after it was apparent that it was not going to be possible to put together the kind of farm-in arrangements with Husky which would expedite the development of heavy oils in Saskatchewan. As a result of the Petro-Canada move, I think the objective has been secured—that is to say, even though Petro-Canada did not acquire Husky, the company that did, Alberta Gas Trunk, has announced a program with respect to heavy oils which is substantially greater than that which Husky by itself would be prepared to negotiate.

I have said that because the original concept was that Petro-Canada would be joining with, probably, Gulf Oil, Husky Oil and SaskOil which is, as you know, the vehicle of the Saskatchewan government. The Saskatchewan government is very anxious to involve SaskOil in this development. I do not know what part SaskOil is going to be playing with respect to farm-ins on the AGTL-controlled Husky now, but I believe that it has been increasing its interest with respect to oil developments in Saskatchewan, and I would expect, therefore, it would have in mind the kind of question that you put to me.

Senator Argue: I appreciate the minister's answer, and I just suggest to him, with great respect, that this is the kind of opportunity which might be studied by his department and by Petro-Canada and promoted wherever possible. For example, Federated Co-operatives in western Canada are the owners of an oil refinery. They have, I believe, some $300 million of assets and some 550,000 members.

Senator Flynn: They could buy Petro-Canada.

Senator Argue: I hear the interjection of the Leader of the Opposition. The co-operative movement in the province of Quebec could probably buy out a dozen Petro-Canadas, so his interjection is already correct.

The credit union movement of this country has assets of some $20 billion. This is the kind of positive thing that should be promoted. I think that without the kind of promotion the federal government has done with Petro-Canada nothing would happen, but with this kind of initiative many great things are happening. I suggest, with respect and with conviction, that this is the kind of thing that should be promoted and developed. I hope that in the days and years ahead the department will give this particular idea a real boost.

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: Honourable senator, I would be very pleased to take that representation under advisement. If there are ways that I can see to encourage the co-operative movement to become more involved, I shall certainly seek them out.

I agree with you that the development of our resources is non-conventional, particularly the resources of western Canada in heavy oils and tar sands, and that it is absolutely the key to our energy future. I do not think enough people yet understand that the producibility of our conventional oil resources is going down; that we have been using up more than we have been finding; and that our hope has to be focussed in these big projects. Those big projects are going to depend on a number of things: they are going to depend on people who are going to take a risk and put some money in; they are also going to depend on the provinces, the federal government, and the tax régimes that each adopts.

My concern right now is that there is not nearly the sense of urgency in Alberta which I would like to see. It is great news today that the Alberta government has at last authorized the expansion of GCOS, the first tar sands plant in Canada. However, we authorized our side of that way back in November or December, and it has taken them another four months to give this authorization.

A whole year has gone by with respect to the royalty arrangements on Cold Lake in connection with the oil sands plant that Shell wants to build. I am really very concerned about the fact that the pace of development is controlled by the royalty views of the provinces.

Senator Smith (Colchester): With reference to the Fundy power development, I wonder if I might ask the minister a number of related questions. I understand—in fact, I know—that some years ago the Province of Nova Scotia set up a special corporation to deal with studies and possible development of Fundy power. My first question is: Does the minister know whether the activities of that corporation are going to be in some way co-operative with the activities of the Maritime Energy Corporation in relation to Fundy power?

My second question: What is the most recent estimate as to the total probable capacity of the Fundy power project; and is the federal government in any way concerned with the test project, which is on a very small scale and which is being prepared now, with reference to the Annapolis causeway which, as the minister will know, is a causeway across the Annapolis River not far from its mouth where it enters the Annapolis basin.

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: Senator Smith, the work that has been done with respect to the Fundy tidal potential will be carried on, but financed by the Maritime Energy Corporation provided the Maritime Energy Corporation agrees to carry it on.

Obviously, I cannot speak for the maritime premiers on this, but the clear understanding is that this would be the first project undertaken by the Maritime Energy Corporation. When I say, "the first project," the project consists of two phases. Phase one, as you have noted, has been completed; phase two is approximately a $35 million project which is site specific and would involve the design and engineering for the project itself. It would be that particular project which would be undertaken with their financing, if the Maritime Energy Corporation decided to undertake it, as I expect they would.

As to the capacity, I believe that the project would have a capacity of something in the order of 1,000 megawatts.

Senator Bosa: I am sure the minister noted the warm welcome he received when he walked into this chamber. I want to assure him that if he became a permanent member of this honourable institution he would get a standing ovation from my colleagues.

Senator Flynn: It will take five years or more.

Senator Argue: There are no permanent members.

• (1120)

Senator Bosa: Madam Chairman, it has been intimated that Canada is self-sufficient in oil, to the tune of about 71 per cent of its need. Does that mean that the deficiency of 29 per cent, which Canada imports, is the net amount, or is that the amount after trade-off with our neighbour to the south?

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: Senator Bosa, thank you very much for your warm welcome and your additional remarks. I have felt many times that your warmth is rather special for me because I sometimes like to think of you—if this is not considered an outrage in this chamber—as my constituent.

Senator Phillips: You do have problems, don't you?

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: On the question of our dependence on foreign oil, our consumption is pretty close to 1.8 million barrels a day. Right now we are importing a little more than 500,000 barrels a day for eastern Canada. Some of that goes into Montreal and comes out of the Portland, Maine pipeline, and the rest goes into Quebec City and to other refineries in Atlantic Canada.

We are exporting very close to 300,000 barrels a day, when you include gas liquids, so the net number is 200,000 barrels. I would cite the dependence in terms of the gross number because the delivery system cannot handle places such as Halifax, Quebec City or Newfoundland, for example, and, therefore, in terms of the importance of this bill, the vulnerability of Atlantic Canada is associated with the fact that it is drawing better than 500,000 barrels a day.

Senator Thompson: I appreciate that we can ask general questions at this point, and I was interested in Senator Argue's raising the matter of Petro-Can.

Taking, for example, Germany, Japan, Britain, France and Italy, I understand they have national oil agencies. I notice that with regard to our national agency, Petro-Can, there have been questions relating to the fact that it should be doing more than just negotiating with Venezuela; it should handle all negotiations.

I understand your reply is that you might consider this as a role for them when they have the capacities in the western hemisphere, but with respect to eastern countries you wish to have the flexibility of the multinationals on the basis that they have pooling in a number of areas.

Do the national agencies for those nations I have mentioned—Germany, Japan, Britain, France and Italy—actually contract all of the oil for importation?

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: Madam Chairman, I am not aware whether any of those countries would be using their national oil company or the oil company in which they have a significant, if not controlling, interest to undertake all their imports. Indeed, I think it would not be true. I cannot give you the figure as to what proportion they are importing at the present time.

All significant oil producers, with only one exception, have a national oil company. The one exception, of course, is the United States. They do not need a national oil company, because of the dominant position of the Seven Sisters and other international companies.

As you pointed out, it is also interesting to note that the consuming countries, such as Germany, have been making investments. Japan has a national oil company. Britain has two national oil companies. I think you could say that France has two, in the sense that there was two significant multinational corporations in which the French government has a very significant interest, and some say a controlling interest.

I hope that covers your question.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Madam Chairman, with reference to the answer the minister gave about the capacity of Fundy being 1,000 megawatts, and having regard to the difficulty of utilizing complete capacity all the time because of the ebb and flow of the tides, would the minister indicate whether any estimate has been made of the probable contribution in the equivalent of barrels of oil per day that could be supplied by this project, if and when developed?

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: That is a very important question, and I would like to check it out before I give an answer. I have a view, but I think it would be wiser to check it out and provide it to you separately.

Senator Smith (Colchester): That is satisfactory.

I now turn to the Maritime Energy Corporation. From the way the minister has referred to the corporation, I assume he thinks there is potential for a substantial benefit to flow all through the maritime provinces from the creation of this corporation. I wonder if he would mind enumerating those which he can now call to mind.

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: The honourable senator is asking me about the benefits I can anticipate?

Senator Smith (Colchester): Yes.

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: Basically, they fall into two groups. The first is security of electrical energy supply, because there would be less dependence on other forms of feed stocks such as oil. Second, I anticipate the very important benefit of lower-cost energy to the consumers of electrical energy in the maritimes.

Let us look at some of the things the Maritime Energy Corporation would do. One of the important things it would do would be to operate the existing grid system in a way which would minimize costs and maximize benefits of the system through a central computer. The central computer would determine which generating facilities should go on and which should go off, given the demands in various parts of the maritimes. You are more familiar than I am with how those demands will change from time to time during the day and season to season in various parts of the maritimes. Through this central dispatch mechanism, costs will be minimized and benefits will be shared throughout the maritimes.

The second important feature is the power to plan future development of the system in the maritimes both on the generating side and on the transmission side. Associated with that is the power to buy and sell power. They could sell surplus power such as would be available in the event that the Fundy tidal power project went through, because of those great peaks, as you know, senator, better than I. Using those in the system is going to be a problem. There may be times when they would want to sell that surplus to New England, perhaps, or perhaps put some of it back into Quebec. There is a buying and selling function there. We were talking earlier about the buying function—buying from Gull Island. That is an important function associated with the planning of the system.

In the planning of the system, the generating side is going to be key.

● (1130)

The question regarding what plants should be built, what kinds of capacities should be expected, and the types of scales is very important. The fact that you have a guaranteed market in the maritimes allows you to contemplate projects which would be beyond the ability of any one province to finance and beyond the power of any one province to absorb. These are important benefits that, when taken together, add up the security and lower costs for energy in the future.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Thank you, Mr. Minister.

Senator Bosa: What effort is the government making at this time to improve the delivery of oil from the west to the east, particularly to the Sarnia plant? I understand the Sarnia-Montreal pipeline is underutilized.

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: The Sarnia-Montreal pipeline is not underutilized now. If anything, it is operating above capacity. The capacity was increased last year from approximately 250,000 barrels a day to 315,000 barrels a day. Fairly recently, it has been running at close to 340,000 barrels a day. This changes from season to season and depends on the mix of oils. If heavy oils are going through the pipeline, the throughput goes down; if lighter oils are going through the pipeline, the throughput goes up.

It has been operating at capacity on the Sarnia-Montreal section. However, there have been bottlenecks upstream from Sarnia. The IPL management that operates the system has taken a decision to de-bottleneck that part of it. It is anticipated that something in the order of 65,000 barrels a day more will be able to flow through that section of the system upstream from Sarnia. That, then, will be made available for both the Ontario market and the Montreal market.

The fact of the matter is that the system has been increasing in capacity. The big problem, though, is not so much the capacity of the system, but the problem of ensuring that there will be enough oil to sustain the existing system, let alone increase the capacity of the system.

The National Energy Board forecasts that at levels of 315,000 barrels a day, it will only be possible, based on the reserve position and the producibility position in western Canada, to sustain that volume for three, three and a half years. So the key question is not the size of the deliverability of the system but how we get resources in western Canada developed at a rate which can not only offset the decline in producibility of conventional oil but sustain the existing through-put to Montreal. That is why I keep coming back to the question of the pace of development. That is absolutely critical, because if we cannot get the tar sands plants going, if we cannot get the heavy oils going, and if we do not have another lucky find on the conventional side, we are not going to be able to sustain the existing volumes through that pipeline for very long.

Senator Adams: I should like to ask the minister a question regarding an announcement made by Petro-Canada to the effect that it will introduce two icebreaker tankers to transport liquefied natural gas from the high Arctic, and whether we can expect to see approximately 100 miles of pipeline from the north end to the south end of Melville Island.

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: I think I heard your question, and I suppose the short answer as to our prospects for development of liquefied natural gas is that they are a lot better than they were a year ago. There has been a great deal of work done. Petro-Canada has been very much involved, along with other companies such as Alberta Gas Trunk Line (Canada) Limited and TransCanada Pipelines Limited. They have all been involved in the planning of liquefaction plants.

The present plan which Petro-Canada has been discussing is the establishment of a gathering system off Melville Island, which gathering system would then come to a point. A liquefaction plant would be established and liquid natural gas would be transported by two reinforced tankers to eastern Canada. Petro-Canada has entered into an agreement with respect to the technology for such a liquefaction plant. This agreement was made with a French company by the name of La Technique, which has specialized technology, based to some extent on the work they have done in Algeria. Algeria, as you know, is an important source of liquefied natural gas. That project is going forward. The engineering group has been chosen, and I hope that they will be in a position in the relatively near future to give us some more information on their plans.

Senator Williams: Mr. Minister, with regard to the tanker service from the high Arctic, would that be on a seasonal basis or on a year-round basis?

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: The tanker operation I mentioned a moment ago is anticipated to operate on a year-round basis.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, shall clause 1 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Senator Forsey: I should like to ask a question regarding two points in clause 2 of the bill. First of all, I do not find any definition of "minister". I presume it is intended to be the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Clause 23(1) states:

(1) Where, in order to comply with any request in writing from the Minister—

As far as I can see, there is no explicit statement of who the minister is. Is that because it is by necessary intendment, or what is the explanation?

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: Senator Forsey, I do not know of any reason it was omitted, other than the possibility that it was to introduce a degree of flexibility. I think it is clearly indicated that it refers to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who would be the minister involved with this particular bill.

Senator Flynn: Just as the Minister of Transport is responsible for the Wheat Board.

Senator Forsey: I wondered, because sometimes in such clauses we see something saying that "the minister" means the minister of such-and-such or any other minister designated by the Governor in Council, or some phrase of that sort. I wondered why that was not in here. I mention that now in light of the minister's remark that it was intended to give flexibility. I merely put the question for consideration. I do not think it is a vital matter, but I am interested in it.

My second question has to do with clause 2(2). That looks pretty satisfactory from the point of view of the members of the Statutory Instruments Committee, whose interest I have rather especially at heart, except that I am not quite certain about whether the order under clause 11(1) would include the content of the program.

• (1140)

It would appear to me not, and it would appear to me, also, therefore, that the content of the program would not be a statutory instrument under subclause 2(2), and this is of some importance when we come to subclause 12(3) and subclause 13(1).

Would the content of the program or merely the statement of the necessity of the national emergency be in the order under subclause 11(1)?

[Mr. Gillespie.]

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: If I may deal first with your question with respect to the designation of the minister, Senator Forsey, I should like to draw your attention to subclause 10(1), which reads:

The Board—

The "Board" referring to the Emergency Supplies Allocation Board.

—shall act under the instructions of the Governor in Council and report to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources from time to time upon its activities under this Act.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is named in subclause 10(2) as well.

Senator Forsey: That, presumably, would cover subclause 23(1).

Senator Roblin: By interpretation only.

Senator Flynn: You have to remember that this was drafted in haste.

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: I may have to take two shots at your second question. I am not sure that I fully understand the question.

As you have noted, the Energy Supplies Allocation Board prepares the mandatory allocation program, and that mandatory allocation program is submitted to the Governor in Council. The Governor in Council then issues an order approving that program. I am told that that particular aspect is covered by subclause 12(6). You may have a further question on that.

Senator Forsey: I am sorry, but I am not satisfied with that. We on the Statutory Instruments Committee have been presented repeatedly with the view of the law officers attached to the Privy Council Office that unless the words "by order," or some such magic phrase, as we have come to call it, are included, it is not a statutory instrument. An order in council merely approving would not be regarded by the legal advisers of the Privy Council Office as a statutory instrument. It must contain the words "by order" or some similar phrase.

That is why I feel uneasy about the definition in subclause 2(2) in relation to the matters dealt with in subclause 12(3) and subclause 13(1). We want to be sure that they would come before the Statutory Instruments Committee. The order under subclause 11(1) is, of course, a statutory instrument, but the order under subclause 11(1) does not appear necessarily to contain the allocation program. That is drawn up by the board and then approved by the Governor in Council—but not approved "by order."

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: I am informed by my legal adviser that the order in council approving the mandatory allocation program which is laid before Parliament would have attached to it the mandatory allocation program itself, and that might be anticipated, as well, from subclauses 12(3), (4), (5) and (6).

Senator Forsey: Ah yes, but in subclause 12(4), Mr. Minister, it is expressly stated that the Governor in Council "may, by order, amend a mandatory allocation program." The allocation program itself is merely brought up by the board and approved. But when it comes to an amendment, the bill is careful to say that the Governor in Council may, by order, amend the program. So any amendment would be a statutory instrument, beyond doubt—even on the showing of the legal advisers of the Privy Council Office, whose opinion we are not prepared to accept sometimes but which we cannot very well get around.

But there is that distinct difference between the approval in subclause 12(3) and the amendment in subclause 12(4). That is what worries me.

I hope that what your legal adviser says is correct, but I hope, also, that my successor as Chairman of the Statutory Instruments Committee may not, at some subsequent date, be faced with the bland statement, "Oh well, the statute is clear. We are sorry if your predecessor got information in the Senate that was quite different."

I hope I may be able to smooth the path a little bit and make straight the ways for my successor and his colleagues on the Statutory Instruments Committee. That is why I feel that the existing form of subclauses 12(3) and 13(1) is not in this respect satisfactory. Out of an abundance of caution, perhaps, it might be well to put in the words "by order" in each of those cases.

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: Senator Forsey, I draw your attention to subclause 12(6), which reads:

(6) An order approving or amending a mandatory allocation program or adding any product thereto shall be laid before Parliament forthwith upon the making thereof, or, if Parliament is not then sitting, on any of the first fifteen days next thereafter that Parliament is sitting.

Senator Forsey: Yes I know, but that does not make it a statutory instrument.

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: What I am saying is that the program, first of all, can only be approved by order of the Governor in Council. That is my understanding on the basis of the advice I have received. Secondly, it can only be amended by order, as set out in subclause 12(4), and both the amendments and the approvals, both by order, must be laid before Parliament.

Going back to subclause 12(1), which is the basic responsibility of the board to prepare a mandatory allocation program, that mandatory allocation program would be attached in the first instance to the order approving it.

Senator Forsey: I am sorry, Mr. Minister, but I am still not satisfied. You are playing upon the words "by order." No doubt you are not to blame for this. It is the advice you get from your legal adviser, and it is somewhat temerarious of me to question the advice of your legal adviser. But the mere existence of an order in council does not in itself, in our experience in the Statutory Instruments Committee, fulfill the requirements of the magic phrase "by order." I again point out that in subclause 12(4) we have the wording "the Governor in Council may, by order—". It does not say "the Governor in Council may amend". If it said that, I would submit that it probably would not be a statutory instrument. But in clause 12(3) it simply says "approved by the Governor in Council". Of course the approval would be contained in an order in council, but it would not be for these purposes, in the submission that we have had repeatedly from the Privy Council Office lawyers, it would not be an order; it would not fulfill the requirements of the Statutory Instruments Act, section 2, paragraph (d)(iii) which has caused us endless trouble in the Statutory Instruments Committee and has been the means of extracting from under our consideration various documents which in our judgment we ought to have been able to see, and what I am afraid of is that exactly the same thing would happen here—a mandatory allocation order, though not an amendment to it. An amendment to it would come right plunk before the Statutory Instruments Committee, but the contents of the program itself—the thing that was being amended—would not necessarily come, and the fact that it was attached to an order in council would not, as far as I can see, make the slightest difference. The Privy Council Office lawyers would simply say to us, "Sorry, the words 'by order' are not there; good-bye; this is not your jurisdiction; keep out; this means you!" This is what I am afraid of. This is why I propose, if I do not get what I consider to be a satisfactory answer now, to move amendments to clauses 12(3) and 13(1) to put in the words "by order" so there shall be no doubt about it. And the fact that it is laid before Parliament is neither here nor there so far as the Statutory Instruments Committee is concerned. The Statutory Instruments Committee is empowered to examine and scrutinize statutory instruments; it is not empowered to scrutinize and examine any document that is presented to Parliament.

● (1150)

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: I don't know if I should have one further shot at you, Senator Forsey. I defer to your expert knowledge in this area. I am repeating myself when I say that it is my clear understanding that the approval of the mandatory allocation program itself is what you are concerned about. You want to be able to get at the mandatory allocation program itself. You want to know what is in there, and you want to be able to see this. It is my clear understanding that the order which would approve that mandatory allocation program would include with it the mandatory allocation program and therefore under clause 2(2), which you referred to in your opening remarks, that particular program would be available to the Statutory Instruments Committee.

Senator Forsey: I hope you are right, but I have my doubts, and I am afraid I shall move my amendments when the time comes, because I do wish—and I am thoroughly in favour of the whole principle of this bill—but I do wish the government would get draftsmen who have some idea in their heads besides administrative convenience, and some idea of such abstruse and exotic and esoteric notions as the rule of law.

Senator Thompson: Mr. Minister, under clause 2, I hope I am permitted to pose the question that concerns me. Under the definition of the product you referred to hydrocarbons, and my assumption, with the very little knowledge that I have about it, is that it refers to coal and oil. When we talk of an energy crisis, surely we have to think in terms of all the energy resources we have in Canada. I was interested that the minister in referring to the Lower Churchill Falls had equated the 7,000 megawatts of power that would be produced to 140,000 barrels a day. But yet I appreciate that electricity is not included in the allocation. The understanding I have is that it is because of the sensitivity of the provinces towards their own hydro-electric concerns. But I wonder if you are not limping when you try to put in an energy emergency policy without the inclusion of electricity, and without the inclusion of nuclear power which the federal government has contributed a great deal. I notice, too, that we also contribute to solar power, which is moving into the picture to the extent of $340 million. I ask the minister if he is not concerned that he has not included electricity, in particular, in this, and whether he discussed it when the act first came in in 1974. I think it was in 1973 that his predecessor had discussions with the provinces and they said, "No, we are not going to have you include electricity." Is that the reason why it is not included?

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: The first point that might be worth clearing up, senator, is the question of hydrocarbons. I am told by my technical experts that coal is carbon and does not come under the general rubric of hydrocarbons. In hydrocarbons we are dealing with natural gas, oil and some of the bituminous heavy oils.

On the question of electrical energy, there is a recognition that it may be necessary at various times to include other products than hydrocarbons and petroleum products. I am referring to clauses 13(1) and (2), which deal with the allocation of alternative fuels. Clause 13(1) reads:

Where it is considered necessary to do so for the purpose of conserving the available supplies of such petroleum products as have been included in a mandatory allocation program, the Governor in Council may amend the mandatory allocation program by adding any alternative fuel thereto and establishing mandatory allocation thereof.

That is a situation where natural gas might be added in certain defined circumstances.

Senator Flynn: Would this entitle you to allocate electricity?

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: There is a particular clause on electrical power, clause 15. That clause really provides for the possibility of electrical power, but there is a very important condition which I shall read:

15. The Board may, with the approval of the Governor in Council, enter into arrangements with provincial authorities for the regulation and pricing by such provincial authorities of the supplies of electric power produced or used within a province for the purpose of reducing the demands upon the available supplies within Canada of a petroleum product.

There are two important conditions in there. The first one is that there would be no grab for the electrical power or the allocation of electrical power, as any allocation of electrical power could only be with the agreement of the province. In other words, if the province did not see that it was to the advantage of the citizens of the province there would not be any role for ESEA. Secondly, it is clearly directed to the question of alternative uses of a petroleum product and one could see situations where thermo-power stations using oil might be affected, and there might be a situation where a province would agree that the electrical power site of energy should come under a degree of allocation. But it is heavily conditioned by clause 15 and, as I have indicated, it can only happen with the approval of the province concerned. If the province did not want to go with electrical power, then the Emergency Supplies Allocation Board would have no power to force it.

Senator Roblin: I suppose it is a good thing that there is no senator from Alberta here. I don't see any. I am really not in a position to speak for them under any circumstances but this is an anomaly that I cannot refrain from remarking upon. Here we have a bill that is entitled an energy bill, and that takes in a lot of territory.

The words "supplies of energy" would certainly include hydro-electric energy, and we have taken the most extreme measures with respect to what we are willing to do with the energy asset of Alberta, that's for sure, and Saskatchewan. Of course, there is a little bit in Manitoba as well. But we are certainly not holding back in the slightest with respect to Alberta's source of energy. Yet, when we come to some other sources of energy, such as electricity—some of which is provided by hydro generation, and some of which by coal—and perhaps there may be still some generated by gas; there is certainly some from uranium—this type of energy we regard as something quite different.

● (1200)

When one considers the link-up between the energy supplies that are derived from electricity and the energy supplies that are derived from oil, it has to be conceded that they are related; and we can easily conceive the situation where energy exports of electricity, for example—which are now quite common and I suggest will become more common outside the borders of Canada—might very well have an effect on energy supplies of all sorts within Canada. Yet we are not taking any power in this bill to do anything about it, except on a by-your-leave basis.

We take an entirely different attitude, however, when we talk about energy derived from oil. So it seems to me that this is a curious situation. I do not know that the minister has offered any explanation as to why he has done it. He has told us how it works, and I think that was an understandable explanation. But I would appreciate knowing from him how he finds it possible to make such a complete differentiation in his own mind between energy that comes from a source, namely, oil, and energy which comes from another source, namely, electricity. If he wants to tell us it is because of the delicate balance of the Canadian federation, or something to do with that matter, I am quite willing to listen to such an explanation; but I think I should like to hear his view as to what might be the reason for this particular treatment of electricity.

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: There are a couple of obvious reasons as to why it is different. The first is that it is portable in a way that no other energy source is; that it is strategic in the sense that it is the largest energy source in the country. Right now I suppose that 40 per cent of our energy comes from oil. Secondly, we are vulnerable in the importing sense. We do not import any significant electrical energy. Yes, we do import some on a sort of swap arrangement between provinces or provincial utilities. I think there is a clear distinction between oil in its import vulnerability, its portability, its importance, and electrical energy, which, generally speaking, does not meet any of those conditions and is under a different set of administrative rules.

Senator Roblin: I feel that the minister must really have some better reasons that he is not willing to disclose to us. With regard to portability, it is surely clear that there is quite an analogy between the portability of electricity supply and a pipeline. There is a limit on the economical transfer of electricity, but it can be transported for large distances—certainly 400 to 500 miles. It is certainly done like that in my own province. We know that there are interprovincial links between the various provinces on the hydro-electric exchanges—that is a common thing—and to tell us that portability is the point on which the decision is made really strikes me as being unconvincing.

The fact that it is important—namely, 30 per cent of our energy resources—seems to be all the more reason why it might be considered along with these other aspects of energy rather than to give reasons why it shouldn't.

The other reason that the minister gave was that we do not import any. That is perfectly true. We do not import very much, but we certainly export it; and if we export it we might decide that we would like to keep it in the country to replace oil supplies if oil supplies were short.

I do not suppose that my analysis of the situation will convince the minister, so I do not intend to pursue the matter any further; but I do appreciate the opportunity to express my conviction that the reasons he has given us are really not convincing to me.

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: Let me take another shot at you, senator. I said 40 per cent for oil. Well, it is about that. It may be a percentage point or two more, but that is about right. Electrical energy is about 25 per cent. There is a big difference. I think you will agree with that. The second point that I should make is that portability involves choices. I do not think you have the same kind of options in choices, in electrical generation and transmission. Transmission lines are there, with a highly portable fluid substance, which can be used in a number of different ways—whether as a transportation product, or a heating product, or a product in factories, or as a feed stock for the petro-chemical industry. I think you are dealing with something a little different from energy going down wires.

My third point is the vulnerability aspect as an imported product. When we are looking at Atlantic Canada, we are looking at 100 per cent dependence on foreign oil, 100 per cent vulnerability. When you get into Quebec, it is not quite as great as that, largely as a result of initiatives that we have taken. The oil pipeline to Montreal has cut overall energy imports by, I suppose, 40 per cent in the last three years. We are down from 800,000 barrels a day to 500,000 barrels a day. But there is still a very high degree of dependence and vulnerability; and you do not find that degree of vulnerability with electrical energy, its generation and transmission.

Senator Roblin: It misses the point that we are trying to deal with the whole energy situation in the nation, and obviously to a degree—although not perhaps to an overwhelming degree—there is this question of substitution. That is exactly what we are talking about in connection with oil and electricity. With that, I promise to say no more about the subject.

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: If the senator will allow me one comment, it is that we have not sought unnecessary powers. It seems that you are putting to me that the government should have sought even more powers with respect to the allocation of electrical energy than we have. I am surprised that the distinguished senator from the opposition party would be putting to me the case that the federal government should be seeking more powers for the allocation of hydro when the provinces of Quebec and Ontario have said that they do not want any part of it. I think the honourable senator has something to explain, with all respect.

Senator Roblin: I am not going to talk on that point, because I promised I wouldn't, and I am a man of my word. But when it comes to powers, I want to let the minister know that I have some views on that. When he says that he has taken no more powers in this bill than are absolutely necessary, I would beg to differ. While it would be anticipating comment on the various sections, Madam Chairman, and I defer to your nod, I want to assure the minister that when it comes to powers, I will do my best to strip him of some of the ones that he has grasped at in this bill.

Senator Flynn: The problem results from the fact that the minister will not admit very simply that he did not want to get involved in disputes with the provinces.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, if I may refer to a subject introduced earlier by Senator Thompson, who made a rather feeble attempt to justify Petro-Canada as being the purchasing agent for oil imports, as a maritimer I am unhappy with the idea that Petro-Canada will be purchasing oil and attempting to distribute it throughout the Atlantic provinces. Let us consider for a moment our record in crown agencies. We have had Lockheed. The government knew nothing about any bribery payments there. We then go to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. Again, what an innocent bunch they were on the treasury benches! None of them knew a thing about a Korean living in Jerusalem—

The Chairman: Order—

Senator Phillips: —receiving payoffs.

The Chairman: Is the honourable senator speaking to clause 2?

● (1210)

Senator Phillips: Yes. I am sorry if you find it embarrassing, Madam Chairman.

The Chairman: I am trying to determine the relevancy of this to clause 2.

Senator Phillips: It is relevant, and as I say, I apologize if you find it embarrassing.

We now hand over the importation of oil to another agency. I would like to ask the minister—and this is very relevant—if he will have more control over Petro-Canada as a purchasing agent than he has over Atomic Energy of Canada Limited?

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: Petro-Canada is a crown corporation, senator. Its powers are well known, and are set out in an act which was passed by the House of Commons and the Senate in 1975, as I recall. I am delighted that it has the powers that the Parliament of Canada gave it, and I think those powers are sufficient to enable it to discharge its duties. Were it not for the fact that it has the power to contract, we would be even more exposed than we are in Atlantic Canada. I think Petro-Canada is going to be successful in acquiring, on a basis of national oil company to national oil company, a secure supply of crude for eastern Canada, and particularly, I would emphasize, for Atlantic Canada, which would not otherwise be available to us. Indeed, I believe the events of the last two weeks have indicated that if you place your trust in the multinational corporations—and I am referring, of course, to Exxon Corporation—the supply of crude for eastern Canada is not as secure as Canadians have been led to believe.

As you may have noted, the Venezuelan minister of energy has recently communicated with me, telling me that he is anxious, as the energy minister of the new government, to advance the state-to-state oil arrangements which I had discussed with his predecessor very recently in Venezuela. I think Petro-Canada does have the power to deal with the important challenge it has ahead of it right now.

Senator Phillips: Would the minister assure me that any bribes or commissions paid by Petro-Canada—

Some Hon. Senators: Order! Order!

Senator Phillips: —will not be added to the cost of fuels in the Atlantic provinces?

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: Quite frankly, I think that is a very irresponsible statement. To suggest that Petro-Canada would be involved in bribes seems to me to be irresponsible.

Senator Phillips: It is not irresponsible, Mr. Minister. Consider the record of the various agencies. No one can deny the bribes paid out by Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, and all I am asking is that, if bribes or commissions are paid out, they not be passed on to the consumer in the Atlantic provinces.

Some Hon. Senators: Order! Order!

[Senator Phillips.]

The Chairman: Honourable senators, I think I have allowed sufficient time on this clause and on the general discussion. I think it would be helpful to all of us if we were to proceed. Shall clause 2 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Energy Supplies Allocation Board. Shall clause 3 carry?

Senator Smith (Colchester): Madam Chairman, I wonder if the minister would tell us when this board is likely to be appointed, and whether or not the rates of pay referred to in the next clause have been fixed.

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: Let me put it this way. The chairman will be appointed shortly after passage of this bill. The other members of the board will be appointed as appropriate. That could mean that, for example, three additional members would be appointed at the same time, or at about the same time, as the chairman. A certain flexibility is built into this clause which enables the Governor in Council to decide how many members should be appointed up to six, so that there is no mandatory number. This provides a degree of flexibility, in the event that the present situation which concerns us so much recedes. If it does recede, then we can scale down and maintain the board in being with a chairman and very few others.

With regard to payment, the salaries would be determined by the Governor in Council. I believe that is carried under clause 4.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Yes, it is.

I note with reference to clause 3 that one of the members of the board shall be a senior official of Petro-Canada. Is it envisaged that the Governor in Council will appoint the chairman, or would it be left to the members of the board to appoint a chairman? If the Governor in Council is going to appoint a chairman, is it anticipated that this will be a senior official of Petro-Canada?

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: Senator Smith, the Governor in Council will be appointing all of the members, and will be appointing the chairman. I would not anticipate that the senior official of Petro-Canada would be the chairman of the board.

Senator Flynn: I would hope not.

The Chairman: Shall clause 3 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 4 carry?

Some Hon. Senators: Carried.

Senator Smith (Colchester): My honourable friends get a little impatient sometimes, but that really does not speed the passage of a clause of the bill.

I asked before I should have about the rate of pay, and the minister gave me the answer which I can see for myself in clause 4, namely, that it is to be fixed by the Governor in Council. What I really want to know is whether the rate of remuneration has been considered and, if so, at what general level?

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: Senator Smith, it has not been determined at the present time.

Senator Smith (Colchester): I do not want to be picayune about this, but I asked if it had been considered, and if so, at what level. I did not ask if it had been determined.

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: Yes, it has been considered. No decision has been made. In the case of the previous incumbent, the salary level was around that of an SX-3.

The Chairman: Shall clause 4 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 5 carry?

Senator Grosart: Clause 5(3)(b), reads, in part, as follows:

—and the Board may, subject to any provisions relating to privileged information, obtain the advice and assistance of any department or agency of the Government of Canada.

I would like to ask what provisions are referred to which would restrict other departments from disclosing what is called here “privileged information,” and I would like to know particularly whether it refers to the Department of National Revenue.

Senator Flynn: Or the Official Secrets Act?

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: Senator Grosart, I am advised that there are provisions relating to privileged information in a number of acts, including the Petroleum Corporations Monitoring Act, the Income Tax Act, the Statistics Act, CALURA and the Petroleum Administration Act, Part IV, or mainly Part IV.

The Chairman: Shall clause 5 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 6 carry?

● (1220)

Senator Smith (Colchester): Madam Chairman, before that clause is carried, I wonder if the minister could tell us whether the location of the head office of the board has yet been considered and, if so, where is it likely to be in terms of the exact words that are contained in the clause?

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: Clause 6(1) states, Senator Smith:

The head office of the Board shall be in the National Capital Region—

Senator Smith (Colchester): Yes, I know that. With all respect, and without wishing in any way to be unpleasant, I am really capable of reading the clause myself. What I am asking is whether the exact location within the National Capital Region has been considered and, if so, where is it likely to be?

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: I cannot give you any precise information. It may be that it will be in offices in my own building on Booth Street, but that is something which I would not want to be bound by.

Senator Phillips: Would the minister consider locating the offices in one of the number of vacant buildings for which the federal government is still paying rent?

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: We will certainly take that representation under consideration.

The Chairman: Shall clause 6 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 7 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 8 carry?

Senator Grosart: Would the minister care to make this clause a little clearer than it is to me on reading this clause and clause 5? What is the status of the various employees of the board, including the members of the board? Clause 8(3) says:

Persons engaged by the Board . . . shall be deemed not to form part of the Public Service for the purposes of section 11 and 13 of the Public Service Employment Act.

If we refer to clause 5, we find these persons described as “persons . . . to act as agents of the Board.” Agency, as I understand it, is a very specific type of relationship. Would the minister just give us a rundown on the status of the various people who will be in one way or another administering the act?

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: Senator Grosart, I will do my best to provide an answer to your question. I gather it is bound up in the policy of the Public Service Commission and the issues of technical questions and technical competence.

Clause 5, and more particularly subclause (2), deals with the powers. It states:

The Board may engage on a temporary basis the services of persons having technical or specialized knowledge to act as agents of the Board in administering the allocation of any controlled product and to advise and assist the Board—et cetera.

Subclause 8(3) is concerned with that aspect of temporary employment not to be considered as public service in the normal course of events.

The Chairman: Shall clause 8 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 9 carry?

Senator Roblin: Madam Chairman, I have some observations to make with respect to clause 9, with particular reference to subclause (2), because this bill conveys very large powers indeed to the board which it establishes.

As members of this committee know, the regulating power of the Governor in Council over the board is set out in clause 16(s), and it is one of the most sweeping powers of delegation that I have ever had the opportunity to see. I should like to read it in case anyone has forgotten it. Referring to the powers of regulation, this subclause states:

respecting such other matters or things, whether or not of a like kind to those referred to in paragraphs (a) to (r)—

Which, I interpolate, are the regulating clauses.

—as the Board considers necessary for the purpose of carrying out a mandatory allocation program for a controlled product.

So one sees that the power of regulation, which is provided under the mandatory energy clause, is really quite sweeping in its application.

If you look through this bill, you will find other places where the same comment might apply. If you refer to clause 20, which deals with setting up the rationing system, you will find the same kind of all-inclusive catch-all regulating power. I refer to subclause 20(l). It does the same thing; it gives power to regulate——such other matters or things, whether or not of a like kind to those referred to in paragraphs (a) to (k), as the Board considers necessary for the purpose of carrying out a rationing program.

If you turn to clause 26(5) of the bill, you will see another extraordinary power which provides that the National Energy Board may be vested with any powers it needs to do what it is told by the allocating people, even if it requires a change, a violation, a trespass, an addition, or whatnot to the statute that governs that body.

Under this bill you are, in effect, conveying to the board the power to make substantive law—not the power of a subordinate body to make law, I suggest, but the same power that Parliament has. Not only that, under this bill, if the board finds it necessary, it may overrule half a dozen statutes. I read some of them into the record yesterday in the course of my remarks. I will not repeat them because members of this committee are familiar with them.

I think I can safely say that the powers conveyed by this bill are exceptional; they are extraordinary; they go far beyond what is found in most statutes. There may be others that are as bad. I suspect the War Measures Act is not much better, but it would surprise me if there are many statutes of the Canadian Parliament which ride as roughshod as this with respect to powers of regulation.

What particularly concerns me in clause 9 is that the board is given the power to delegate all of these extraordinary powers. Subclause 9(2) states:

The Board may by order delegate, in whole or in part, to any person, body or authority any of the powers or duties of the Board arising out of any regulation under this Act, and such delegated person, body or authority may exercise the powers and shall perform the duties so delegated.

We have, in the first place, a bill which conveys extraordinary powers of regulation; power to override the statutes; power to rewrite the law in some instances; and it compounds the situation, in my view, by permitting this board to redelegate all these excessive powers to another body or person, or to any-body they like.

[Senator Roblin.]

You may have some views about the necessity of the original power to make regulations, et cetera, that are in this bill on account of the emergency nature of the situation, but I think you need have no reservation about the undesirability of permitting this redelegation of powers by the board to somebody else in their full force, effect and plenitude. The house was made aware yesterday that Parliament has on previous occasions, taken a very critical view of such a redelegation of powers. It is a principle fundamental to our law that a delegate cannot delegate. Here we are doing it in spades, and I do not think it is even necessary or desirable.

Consequently, I am moving an amendment that Bill C-42 be amended by striking out clause 9, subclause (2), on page 5 and by renumbering the remaining subclauses accordingly and by amending where necessary all references in the bill to the renumbered subclauses. I have copies of this amendment in French and in English for those who may be interested.

● (1230)

The Chairman: It is moved by Senator Roblin:

That Bill C-42 be amended

- (a) by striking out subclause 9(2) on page 5;
- (b) by re-numbering the remaining subclauses accordingly; and
- (c) by amending, where necessary, all references in the bill to the re-numbered subclauses.

Shall the amendment carry?

Senator Forsey: Madam Chairman, before the amendment is put to a vote, there are certain supplementary observations I should like to make upon it.

I think we would all agree that there are certain administrative actions which any board of this sort must delegate to particular people, but that the whole power of the board—every bit of it, every part of it—should be capable of subdelegation, as it is under this subclause, it seems to me absolutely fantastic. I have never seen anything like it in any statute before. Perhaps there is something comparable somewhere, but it certainly strikes me with the force of a thunderclap.

And I want to reiterate what Senator Roblin said just now.

—may delegate . . . in whole or in part, to any person—

The groom of the backstairs.

—body or authority any of the powers or duties of the Board arising out of any regulation under this Act, and such delegated person, body or authority may exercise the powers and shall perform the duties so delegated.

I don't see how you could draft anything more all-inclusive, more comprehensive, than that. You really scarcely need a board at all. All you need to do is set up one person and say, "Here he is. He has all the power to do everything necessary." That seems to me a most amazing clause to insert in any bill to come before Parliament.

I strongly support the amendment moved by Senator Roblin. If he hadn't moved it, I think I should have moved it myself. Fortunately, I have been spared that unfortunate duty.

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: I should like to make just a comment or two, Madam Chairman.

Senator Roblin is absolutely right when he says this bill is seeking extraordinary powers. Of course it is. That is the whole purpose of the bill—to seek extraordinary powers in an exceptional circumstance, the exceptional circumstance being a national emergency, an emergency which affects the national security of this country, which affects the economic stability of this country, which affects the national interest and the welfare of this country; obviously an emergency which goes to the very roots of our existence as a Confederation. So there is no question but that the powers are extraordinary.

As to the question of the delegation, a few moments ago Senator Roblin and I were exchanging views which respect to electrical energy and whether the powers of this bill should be widened to include, on a unilateral basis, the ability of the federal government to intervene or intercede with respect to the allocation of electrical energy. I told him that no, we were not going that way, that we were seeking the agreement of the provinces and indeed giving the provinces a veto right with respect to that.

We are anxious to work with the provinces in the administration of this measure. One of the very important aspects of this power of delegation is that it would enable the Energy Supplies Allocation Board to work with the provinces in a more direct way. It would provide, for example, the power to delegate to provincial officials certain powers relating to the allotment of ration coupons and to the administration of special gasoline entitlements. I should think that would be an important power to have—to delegate to the provinces, in the joint interest but primarily in the national interest, some of these powers. That is why that particular provision has been put in.

Senator Forsey: Why not say so specifically? Why not list some of the people you propose to delegate powers to and list the powers?

It is the comprehensiveness of this thing. You could pick out anybody in the whole country, from the taxicab driver to the President of the Royal Bank of Canada, and make him a sort of czar under this provision. Surely this is not something Parliament should contemplate.

Senator Roblin: I would like to reinforce what Senator Forsey has said on this point.

I go back to our original discussion on electricity and remind the minister I was not suggesting to him that he should include electricity in the bill. I was asking him why he had not done so. He has given us his explanation of it, but he does not want to impute to me any suggestion in respect of that matter. I was curious. My curiosity is still unsatisfied on that point.

But Senator Forsey is completely right. If you have a case here for making this power available to provincial governments, why not put it in the bill in the proper way. When governments, as they always do, it seems to me, ask for more power than they really need, they can expect people to complain about it. That is exactly what we are doing now. They are asking for more power than they really need, and they ought not to be granted it.

Senator Flynn: There is no doubt that the examples given by the minister as to the application of this clause do not necessarily flow from the text.

There is no doubt that the board could say the chairman is entitled to act alone in all cases. As to the distribution of coupons, it is only an administrative matter. That clause is not needed to deal with that problem. It is not needed at all, because the board will decide where rationing gasoline is required and people will have coupons. Then an arrangement is made with the banks to collect those coupons and burn them, as was done during the last war. I was there. I know what it is like. The powers did not have to be delegated in order to make arrangements with provincial authorities in order to do these things.

This is a possible abdication by the board of all its power to anyone—perhaps the chairman, or anyone else. You could appoint Senator Goldenberg, for instance, czar of rationing in Quebec. Just imagine where that would put us.

Senator Goldenberg: What objection would you have?

Senator Flynn: You do not even drive.

If the minister would candidly tell us that he did not expect the clause to go that far, and it is too late for the government to accept that amendment, I think we would vote to let him have the responsibility of a clause that is certainly unwarranted.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Madam Chairman, if I may take a moment, there seems to me to be another very substantial objection to this clause, and perhaps the minister can correct me by pointing it out if I have missed it. So far as I can find, there is absolutely no provision in the bill which makes it necessary to identify these persons, whoever they may be, to whom delegation is made under the bill or to determine what powers are delegated to them. So unless it is done in some voluntary way at the time, those of us who are subject to the activities of these delegates will not know who they are or what powers they have, except what they tell us. Surely, assuming the minister is right in everything else, which I do not assume, that is a very serious defect.

• (1240)

Senator Perrault: Question!

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: Senator Smith, I believe we have gone over some of this ground. I indicated that board orders would be subject to the Statutory Instruments Act, section 22, and that this particular clause 9(2) provides that the board may by order delegate. So I would have thought that board orders would therefore have covered the point that you are concerned with.

Senator Perrault: Hear, hear.

Senator Smith (Colchester): With respect, unless I misunderstand the Statutory Instruments Act, which I quite well may, it does not provide for any particular publicity, except that which relates to the examination by a committee of Parliament established under that act.

Senator Forsey: It is worse than that, Mr. Minister, because not all statutory instruments are required to be published. We have discovered over and over again in the Statutory Instruments Committee that statutory instruments get into our knowledge simply by accident. We inquire of a particular department or agency about something that we have heard about and they say, "Oh, yes, we have got that. Yes. That is a statutory instrument. Yes, you can have it, and, by the way, it is not by any means unique. They have the same kind of thing in X, Y, Z departments." So we say, "Thank you very much. This is most interesting."

Statutory instruments are not necessarily published. Sometimes they are published only when the Governor in Council—I think it is—considers that it is in the public interest that they should be published, and then I think it is in Part II of the Canada Gazette. I have forgotten the exact details. But I do know positively that many statutory instruments have come to our knowledge only by accident. They are not necessarily published, and it rests in the discretion of the executive to say in certain instances whether they shall or shall not be published. So I doubt if the reply the minister has made to Senator Smith is necessarily satisfactory.

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: Senator Forsey, I am advised that the practical consequence of this is that all such orders are open for access, inspection and copying pursuant to sections 24 and 25 of the Statutory Instruments Act.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Would the minister kindly inform me if somebody will compensate me for the expense of travelling from Truro, Nova Scotia, to Ottawa and back again in order to inform myself as to what is in one of those orders? I regard that not only as an unsatisfactory answer but as one which borders on being offensive.

Senator Forsey: Furthermore, if they are not published, how is Senator Smith down in Truro going to know that there is something he wants to examine?

Senator Perrault: Question!

Senator McDonald: Question!

The Chairman: All those in favour of the amendment moved by Senator Roblin to clause 9, please stand.

Senator Phillips: Are we not going to have an answer from the minister?

Senator Smith (Colchester): If the minister is unable to answer the question, we are entitled to know.

Senator Perrault: He has already answered all of your questions.

Senator Smith (Colchester): The Leader of the Government is really getting quite perturbed, but we are entitled to know the answer to one of the most important things in the democracy. How are we going to find out what we are ordered to do by those who are put in authority to issue the orders? Now, surely, that is a basic right of every citizen of Canada to know, and for the Leader of the Government to pretend that he thinks that that is not important is bordering on the insufferable.

[Senator Smith (Colchester).]

Senator Grosart: He is not pretending!

Senator Smith (Colchester): But perhaps it is not more insufferable than some of the other things to which we are exposed.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I suggest that there is a proper line of questioning, but when the honourable senator stands in his place and suggests that certain remarks of the minister have been offensive, I suggest that the senator's line of questioning itself borders on the offensive and constitutes a type of harassment.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Harassment! I am not interested in harassment. I am interested in finding out fundamental information. If the minister and the Leader of the Government in this house want to prevent the disclosure of that information, that is all right with me, because once they have had the chance to disclose it, I then know what to think of them.

Senator Flynn: Anyway, I am quite happy to see the Leader of the Government coming to the defence of the minister, but I would suggest to him that, if he continues, pretty soon the minister will say, "I will look after my enemies. Deliver me from my friend!"

The Chairman: All those in favour of the amendment please rise. All those against the amendment please rise.

The Clerk of the Senate: Yeas 9. Nays 16.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Close!

The Chairman: The amendment is defeated.

Senator Roblin: Madam Chairman, I am not discouraged by that rebuff, because I thought the odds might be against us, but I want to pursue the point. I want to pursue the point as raised by Senator Smith and others here, who have talked about the necessity for information on this matter. I agree with that, because, at the risk of repeating an argument, although I suppose it deserves some repetition, now that we have agreed to keep clause 2 in, we must recognize that we are by this act handing most extraordinary powers to third parties we have never heard of. It might be the provincial government; it might be a lot of other people. I think the least we can do is inform ourselves of what use these unknown third parties will make of the powers that are granted them by this board to make regulations and, in effect, make substantive law in the nation.

I am saying, therefore, that if we insist on having this excessive and unnecessary clause about subdelegation in the bill, the least we can do is order that whatever action is taken under that matter be in the public domain.

I therefore move:

That Bill C-42 be amended by adding immediately after line 7 on page 5 the following subclause:

"(2.1) An order made under subsection (2) shall be laid before Parliament forthwith upon the making thereof or, if Parliament is not then sitting, on any of the first fifteen days next thereafter that Parliament is sitting."

I have a number of copies here which I will hand to the page. I regret that the French translation is not on this sheet, but members will appreciate that the people who have been helping with these amendments have been working very hard to get them all done. I hope that will not be overlooked. The French version is coming.

The Chairman: It is moved by Senator Roblin, seconded by Senator Macdonald:

That Bill C-42 be amended by adding immediately after line 7 on page 5 the following subclause:

"(2.1) An order made under subsection (2) shall be laid before Parliament forthwith upon the making thereof or, if Parliament is not then sitting, on any of the first fifteen days next thereafter that Parliament is sitting."

Senator Perrault: Question!

The Chairman: Those in favour please rise.

Those against the motion will please rise.

The Clerk of the Senate: Yeas 9. Nays 16.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost. Shall clause 9 carry?

Senator Grosart: Madam Chairman, I have a question regarding clause 9(4), the answer to which might be fairly long.

Senator McDonald: I move, seconded by Senator Petten, that the chairman do report progress and ask leave to sit again.

The Chairman: It is moved by Senator McDonald, seconded by Senator Petten, that the chairman do report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

The Hon. the Speaker: The sitting of the Senate is resumed.

Senator Neiman: Madam Speaker, the committee to which was referred Bill C-42, to provide a means to conserve the supplies of energy within Canada during periods of national emergency caused by shortages or market disturbances affecting the national security and welfare and the economic stability of Canada, has taken the said bill into consideration, has made some progress thereon, and asks leave to sit again.

The Hon. the Speaker: When shall this committee have leave to sit again?

Senator McDonald: At the call of the bell at approximately 2.15 p.m.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by the Honourable Senator McDonald, seconded by the Honourable Senator Per-rault, P.C., that the committee have leave to sit again at the call of the bell at approximately 2.15 p.m. this day.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 2.25 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure and was put into Committee of the Whole to further consider Bill C-42, to provide a means to conserve the supplies of energy within Canada during periods of national emergency caused by shortages or market disturbances affecting the national security and welfare and the economic stability of Canada, the Honourable Senator Neiman, in the Chair.

Pursuant to rule 18 of the Rules of the Senate, the Honourable Alastair William Gillespie, P.C., Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and Minister of State for Science and Technology, was escorted to a seat in the Senate Chamber.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, we shall continue our clause-by-clause study of Bill C-42. We are now on clause 9, and Senator Grosart, I believe, has some questions to put.

Senator Grosart: Thank you, Madam Chairman. May I direct a question to the minister arising out of subclauses (4), (5) and (6) of clause 9, which deal with the international obligations we have acquired under the 1974 agreement? Subclause 9(4) requires the board to "study and keep under review all matters relevant to a full understanding of the international petroleum supply situation" and report thereon to the minister.

It seems obvious that what has happened here is that the government—not Parliament, the government—has acquired certain obligations, and one of the purposes—one, not all—of the bill before us is to enable the government to discharge those obligations.

I would ask the minister to give us a review of the circumstances under which these obligations were entered into, and why we have had such a fairly long interval in which we seem to have been completely oblivious or negligent about our obligations. I would also ask the minister to give the committee some indication as to the status, in international law, of this agreement. Is it what is sometimes called a capital "T" treaty? Was it ratified; and, if so, how? Was it at any time assented to or discussed in Parliament?

As honourable senators know, I have on more than one occasion raised this whole question of the so-called prerogative of the Crown to obligate Canada in advance of coming to Parliament for acceptance of the undertaking by some form or other—ratification, or whatever it might be. So, I would ask what our obligations are, and, so as to put my whole question in one package, I would also ask the minister to indicate to the committee the procedure that would be followed if those obligations were suddenly to fall on Canada or the Government of Canada. In other words, who would initiate the formal decision that the 7 per cent situation had arisen? How would that become a decision of the International Energy Agency?

I know it is to some extent set out in the treaty, but, as far as I know, that treaty has never been discussed in this house and perhaps never in Parliament. So I would ask the minister to indicate the nature of our obligation, how it might fall on us, and roughly how soon.

He has indicated that we may be at the 5 per cent situation already, so that the point in future time when an obligation might fall on the government—not on Parliament, but on the Government of Canada—would be of interest, certainly to me, and I think to other members of the committee.

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: Madam Chairman, I shall try to be brief. There were a number of questions asked by the honourable senator.

Dealing with the obligations, I think I dealt with that this morning when I spoke of the 7 per cent trigger point. When world consumption is reduced by 7 per cent as a result of international shortages or disruptions, the member countries of the international oil sharing arrangement within the International Energy Agency are immediately to put in place a series of demand restraint measures aimed at taking their respective share of the international shortfall based on consumption.

There are other obligations with respect to putting into place or ensuring certain reserves by the early 1980s. I can tell the committee that as far as Canada is concerned, in relation to our obligation respecting reserves, we are fully in line. Indeed, considering the way they are defined, which does leave something to be desired, we are well ahead of any obligations in that regard.

Senator Grosart asked when the treaty was negotiated. It was finally concluded, I am told, on November 18, 1974. Honourable senators will recognize that that date came after the time that the predecessor Energy Supplies Emergency Act was passed by Parliament. The predecessor act was introduced in late 1973 and was finally passed in early 1974.

That treaty was ratified by the Government of Canada, and I believe that it was tabled before Parliament. As to the date of its tabling, it would have to be ascertained.

As to who would initiate the implementation of the treaty obligations, the government would, and it would do so under the authority of this bill.

I believe that covers the questions you put.

Senator Grosart: With respect, the question regarding the initiation referred to the initiation of the activation of the agreement within the agency itself. Is it automatic? Is there an arithmetical point at which the 7 per cent trigger is said to be reached? What is the 7 per cent figure based on, and how would it be activated? Could one member country activate it; and, if so, would it be a majority vote of the 20 or so members that would determine whether the treaty, if it is a treaty, is to be activated?

[Senator Grosart.]

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: The most likely procedure would be that one country, or a group of countries, would make application to the governing board—which is the senior administrative body of the International Energy Agency—that the emergency oil sharing arrangement be triggered. One country would have the right to initiate such an application to the board. That would be the situation if any one country got into the position where its consumption was to be forcibly reduced because of a lack of supply. Indeed, the arrangement goes a little further than that, in that if a particular region of a country were to have its oil consumption forcibly reduced because of a lack of supply, that would be cause for making an application to trigger the emergency oil sharing arrangement.

So, one can conceive that an application could be made in the relatively near future to the governing board for activation of the arrangement. The governing board would consider the application. I have no doubt that a group of countries would want to try to prevent a single incident from triggering the arrangement. I think you can read that out of the arrangement the other day where we had come to the agreement with respect to the 5 per cent level that, to prevent any unusual or unexpected triggering, the thing will move up gradually. So the governing board would have the final say in determining whether or not the arrangement would be activated, and the various governments would then be called upon to respond.

• (1430)

Senator Grosart: As a supplementary, might I ask the minister if he is saying that the effect of this treaty or agreement, whichever it may be—and it may be both—would be that if one member country of the agreement asserted that in one region the 7 per cent point had been reached, Canada could then legally, by certain processes, be obliged to share its petroleum product resources?

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: The answer is no, Senator Grosart. What I indicated was that, using the Canadian situation as an example, we would have the right to apply to the governing board and say to the governing board, "We believe now that you should trigger emergency oil sharing arrangements," and, in theory, I believe we could do so. I do not think that that particular plea would get very far, because action has already been taken to ensure a degree of sharing at the 5 per cent level. So I think that would not be a course of action which would be likely to happen. But I was really using that as an example of some other country in a similar position which might well make that request. The final decision would be made by the governing board.

I should point out that when we talk about sharing, we are not obliged under this agreement to share in the sense of exporting oil from Canada to other countries. Our major obligation is with respect to demand restraint; that is, that we ourselves should reduce our demand in this country by 7 per cent.

Senator Grosart: Would that be our demand on total usage or merely on imports?

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: It would be on total Canadian consumption of petroleum products.

Senator Roblin: Could I ask the minister under what legislation the government clothed itself, in the first instance, to honour its obligations under these International Energy Agency arrangements?

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: Well, as I noted earlier, the previous act came into effect in early 1974, and constituted the authority until it expired in the middle of 1976. In the interval between 1976 and now, it is quite clear that we did not have the authority that we would need in the event of an emergency. Nor was it anticipated that there would be such a need during that period of time. It is only when it became quite clear that an emergency was not only a strong possibility, but indeed a probability, that the government felt it important to reintroduce this act.

Senator Roblin: I can hardly forbear to comment on the apparent insouciance of the government, in respect of their powers to discharge their undertakings in the international arena, that allows them to go for two and a half years without seeking from Parliament the power to carry out the undertakings to which they have set their hand.

Leaving that comment on the record, I want to ask the minister if I understood him clearly to say that our obligations under the International Energy Agency did not involve any call upon our domestic oil production?

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: There might be a situation, I suppose, some time in the future where we could get into some very dramatic circumstances—and this has been suggested to me by one of my advisers—in that there might be a possible shortfall of 25 per cent of world demand, in which case we might be called upon. But it is not clear how we would be called upon in such an eventuality. I think the point that should be made is that we have reserve shut-in capacity ourselves which we have been able to use for our own advantage. We regard that as a form of storage, and we feel that that shut-in capacity can be used to qualify for our own obligations with respect to demand restraint, in the sense that we would be reducing world demand through using our own reserves and shut-in capacity.

Senator Roblin: That does not deal with the point I am making, because the fact that we have extra capacity available really means that we have more to share rather than less to share. I suggest to the minister that we do have a specific obligation in the International Energy Agency arrangement to share our domestic production, if it should come to that. I will admit that we very much hope it does not come to that, but I think we should be informed as to the status of the situation, and I suggest to him that we are obliged to do that.

In some questioning in one of the Senate committees this point was raised, and it was very clearly expressed to us that that was the fact, that it was conceivable that we would be called upon to share our domestic production with people outside the nation. I leave aside the question as to the desirability of the policy. I merely want to make it clear that that is the situation in which we are involved, and if it has been said that it can hardly be envisaged, well, I hope that is right, but nobody really envisaged the Iranian situation and, having experienced that, it is not difficult now to think that there might be serious problems in that same area among the other major exporting nations. So I merely want the minister to tell us clearly what our responsibilities are.

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: Senator Roblin, I mentioned a moment ago that in the event of a shortage of the order of 25 per cent, certain situations might arise. I know I mentioned the figure of 25 per cent, but now I am advised that that should be of the order of 30 per cent. Anyway, a reduction in demand of somewhere between 25 and 30 per cent would be required before we would be under any obligation with respect to the sharing of Canadian production, and I think you will agree that that is a rather drastic situation. But I am acknowledging that at that point there is an obligation with respect to Canadian production.

Senator Roblin: Then I take it that the minister's answer is yes.

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: I did not hear all the conditions but I think I have answered as directly as I can. I don't know how many different qualifications there were in your question, but I think my answer stands on its own.

The Chairman: Shall clause 9 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 10 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 11 carry?

Some Hon. Senators: Carried.

Senator Flynn: No.

• (1440)

Senator Phillips: May I begin, honourable senators, by raising a question concerning the reduction of oil supplies as part of our international agreement? What concerns me is that I know that in the west there is oil and gas and we are exporting it, while in the Atlantic provinces, unfortunately, we do not have those supplies. Where does the 5 per cent reduction come in? Does it apply nationally or does it apply only on the imports?

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: I think you could make a case that it could apply to the region which is served by the imports. I mentioned a few moments ago that in the provisions it deals not only with national consumption but with regional consumption, where any particular region—I think I used the words “discrete region”—for energy purposes is involved.

If we were to consider the region east of the Ottawa Valley borderline as a discrete region for energy policy purposes, that region is consuming in the order of 800,000 barrels per day, and is importing about 500,000 barrels per day. Using that particular approach one could say that a 5 per cent reduction would apply to the 800,000 barrels a day rather than to the whole nation. Our whole national consumption would be in the order of about 1,800,000 barrels a day. I think we could argue effectively, and we would so argue, that the provisions of the treaty, certainly in our case at this time, relate to the 800,000 barrels per day; and 5 per cent of 800,000 barrels a day is 40,000 barrels a day.

Senator Phillips: Mr. Minister, you rather adroitly and with a great deal of expertise avoided the most important part of my question. Will the reduction occur in Quebec and in the Atlantic provinces, or, in other words, east of the Ottawa Valley line? Would you please tell me where the reduction will occur?

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: I was trying to explain how the 5 per cent undertaking works, and the 7 per cent could be applied on the same basis. But taking the 5 per cent right now, I argue that it applies only to that area which is served east of the Ottawa Valley line. That works out to 40,000 barrels a day. That is the demand restraint which Canada would have to accept under the agreement that it reached some two weeks ago with respect to the 5 per cent level. That should be seen as separate from the treaty obligation of 7 per cent. That was by arrangement and with the mutual consent of all of the parties. But no part of Canada is suffering as a result of that agreement to accept a shortage, a demand restraint of 40,000 barrels per day, because also under the treaty we are in a position to use our reserve shut-in capacity in the west. We can move Canadian oil, which has not been produced and was not intended would be produced; we can use that to look after the east coast, and we have been doing that through a swap arrangement or a series of swap arrangements. Under these swap arrangements eastern refineries have applied to the National Energy Board, saying, "Look, we've got somebody who is prepared to buy 40,000 barrels a day,"—collectively, let us say, in certain parts of the United States; say the Chicago market—"They are prepared to sell us the same amount of oil which they would have taken into the Chicago market. They are prepared to sell us that oil and have it delivered to our refineries on the east coast." The way we have used it up is to use that reserve shut-in capacity.

I can assure you that the concerns you have about eastern Canadians suffering right now, or having to pay, as it were, the treaty cost, are needless. That is not the fact. The fact of the matter is that we have been able to work it so that they are fully looked after.

Senator Phillips: I was intrigued by the minister's statement that western oil would be moved to eastern Canada. Again I want to remind him that I think of eastern Canada as being beyond Montreal. How are we to move that oil? We have no pipeline. We have no rail line that can handle it. We have no tanker cars. How will you move that oil there, Mr. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: That was the point I was trying to make, Senator Phillips. Let us think about the Chicago market for a moment. I was at the Chicago market recently. It is supplied by offshore crude. If you can divert crude that would otherwise go into the Chicago market into Halifax and Saint John and St. Romuald, then you would have crude going into those refineries that would not otherwise go there. You have to ask yourself how you would persuade someone who was going to be using that crude in Chicago to agree to sell it and have it delivered to east coast ports. Well, the answer is: By producing some shut-in capacity in the west and moving it through the interprovincial system to Chicago and supplying their customers in Chicago. That is called a swap arrangement, and that has been going on for the last couple of months, and quite effectively. So we have been able to use that delivery system—both the United States delivery system and our own delivery system—to look after the east coast refineries.

Senator Phillips: Earlier this morning the minister indicated to me that he would attempt to provide the export permits granted east of the Ottawa Valley line. I presume that over the noon hour he and his officials obtained that information. Could I now have that, please?

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: Senator Phillips, I have been informed that for the calendar year 1978 there were 110 licences granted for a volume of 27 million barrels.

Senator Phillips: I am sorry, I did not catch that. Did you say 127 million barrels?

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: I said 27 million barrels. That would include all products, senator.

• (1450)

Senator Phillips: I recall the difficulty concerning the Golden Eagle distributors, when they had to initiate court action to guarantee their supplies. How and when did Golden Eagle get permission to export the gasoline and fuel oil at a time when we are supposed to have a shortage?

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: The difficulty which the honourable senator is addressing is a serious one, namely, how you approach the licensing system when that licensing system covers a long period of time? For example, licences that are issued in November may not, in fact, be fully discharged until early in the following year. So there are lags, and that tends to complicate the subject in a serious way.

What we have done is to go back and look at the situation referred to, the possibility that the Golden Eagle might have been exporting to the disadvantage of its usual customers. So far we have not been able to determine that Golden Eagle has taken advantage of the situation and, as a result of those actions, placed a burden on its existing customers. The cause of the shortfalls that I mentioned in my remarks this morning were based not so much on exports—and all exports, let it be known, are authorized by the National Energy Board—but on difficulties with the three refineries in the Montreal area.

Senator Phillips: I do not wish to pursue this line of questioning ad infinitum, but would the minister assure me that he will provide me, within a reasonable amount of time—let us say one week—a list of all the permits, the firms which export, and the countries to which the gasoline oil was exported. If the minister will agree to provide that information within a reasonable period of time—let us say 48 hours—

Senator Perrault: Why not 48 minutes?

[Mr. Gillespie.]

Senator Phillips: —I will discontinue this line of questioning.

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: I will be pleased to provide the honourable senator with as much information as I can. I think that I will be able to satisfy him on those points. As I understand it, he wants information on the export of products such as gasoline, middle distillates, heavy fuel oils, from eastern—defined as Atlantic and Quebec—refineries during 1978 under permit from the National Energy Board?

Senator Phillips: Yes; and, if I may, the 1979 permits?

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: And 1979? I will also include those. I will try to provide the information in such a way that the honourable senator will be able to see what was the authorized permit amount and what was actually shipped against the particular permit, because in many cases there have been incomplete shipments against permits.

Senator Phillips: I appreciate the minister's co-operation. I do not want to leave the impression that I have left any restriction on my inquiry. I am asking for the whole gambit of information. Does the minister agree to that?

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: I acknowledge the honourable senator's caveat.

Senator Roblin: Madam Chairman, I should like to deal with another aspect of clause 11 concerning the procedures laid down for the instruction of Parliament and the Senate in dealing with the approval of the arrangement for the mandatory allocation of supplies.

In subclause 11(4) a built-in guillotine is provided whereby the House of Commons must complete its debate on the matter within three days. In subclause 11(8) we find that if, by chance, Parliament is not sitting at the time the mandatory allocation scheme comes in, it will be summoned within seven days; and after it has met, it has to dispose of the matter in 12 hours, which seems to be even more abrupt.

I notice that in subclause 11(9) the same rules pari passu seem to apply to the Senate in respect of how it deals with this matter.

I do not know whether this is going to be a feature of legislation in the future, but I notice that in the proposed referendum bill there is a built-in guillotine clause, and I see that in this bill there is a built-in guillotine clause.

I presume it will be urged that it is necessary because that is the way you have to deal with it when there is an emergency. However, that brushes aside at least two considerations. One is that it shows little apprehension that Parliament will be seized of any feeling of emergency, and perhaps little appreciation of the advantages of debate in these matters; and it certainly ignores the fact that if there is an emergency, we have a procedure already enshrined in the rules of both houses to bring the matter to a vote.

So I submit to the chamber that we do not really need these built-in guillotines in this bill. I would propose to amend this section to remove all of them. Therefore, I now propose:

That Bill C-42 be amended

(a) by striking out subclause 11(4) on page 7 and subclause 11(8) on page 8,

(b) by renumbering the remaining subclauses accordingly, and

(c) by amending, where necessary, all references in the Bill to the renumbered subclauses.

In order to save the time of the committee, and as it deals with precisely the same principle, perhaps, Madam Chairman, you would allow me to combine another resolution to the effect:

That Bill C-42 be amended

(a) by striking out lines 31 to 34 on page 8 and substituting the following:

“day as the first order of the day; or”, and

(b) by striking out lines 39 to 42 on page 8 and substituting the following:

“of business.”

I appreciate that reading off these particular matters makes it a little difficult to apprehend, but I merely wanted to assure honourable senators that the substance of the two amendments, which have been drafted for me by counsel, are to the effect that we remove (a) the three-day guillotine with respect to the House of Commons, if it should be in session when the bill is in front of it, and (b) removal of the 12-hour guillotine if it is called back to deal with the matter, should it not be sitting at the time it arises; and, thirdly, that the regulations affecting the passage of the bill in the Senate to the same effect also be dealt with. In effect, I am asking the committee to delete all references to the guillotine.

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: As the honourable Senator Roblin, I am sure, is fully aware, this matter engaged the attention of the House of Commons, and I placed on the record the government's reasons for these measures. I will not spend a lot of time on this matter, but I would like to make it very clear why we think these measures are essential. The main reason is that we are dealing with an emergency. We are dealing with a sense of urgency, and in an emergency situation.

The board will be involved with very arbitrary powers, as Senator Roblin has already pointed out. It is going to change contractual arrangements in a whole host of ways across the country. It may be discrete in some respects in certain specific regions rather than in others, and therefore there will be more apprehension in certain regions than in others. There will also be the whole question of the priorities that might be involved, and the arrangements that might have to be made with respect to those priorities under the mandatory allocation program. We feel, therefore, that the sense of urgency brings with it a need for security. To put it the other way round, it would be hard to see how an effective allocation program could be brought into effect in an emergency if there were uncertainty. We must, as far as possible, remove uncertainty so that those who have to make decisions quickly—and perhaps thousands, if not tens of thousands, of contractual relationships are going to be disturbed—can operate with a degree of certainty.

● (1500)

With regard to the question of the three days' debate, which is what Senator Roblin is concerned about, surely three days can be regarded as being adequate time for the house to consider the declaration of a national emergency, and that is what they would be considering under this particular provision. Senator Roblin suggests that there are other ways of dealing with this question, and he is, of course, referring to standing order 33, which provides for the motion of closure. He also realizes, I am sure, that that would provide a two-day period, which is shorter, in terms of parliamentary discussion, than the one that is built into the bill. In all probability, if a closure motion were brought in, which, as I said, would result in a two-day debate, it would be on procedural matters rather than on the substance of the declaration itself.

For those reasons, I believe that the provision in question here provides a degree of protection for Parliament. It provides Parliament with the opportunity to debate the issues inherent in, and the substance of, the national emergency itself.

Senator Roblin: Well, Madam Chairman, I appreciate the minister's explanation, but I cannot help observing that he was able to sit quietly in his seat for two-and-a-half years without any power of any kind to do these things. He was able to sit in his seat for two-and-a-half years and ignore the fact that we had an international obligation that we could not implement. All of a sudden, we are presented with this thing. I simply repeat my position, which is unchanged. I do not think that the incorporation in a bill of closure of this kind makes for desirable legislation. If you wished to debate closure in the house on the basis of the circumstances at the time, it might be perfectly legitimate to invoke foreclosure in those circumstances; but on this general power that is provided in this bill—and the minister has indicated his own view of how sweeping they are, with which I quite agree—the necessity of debate, in my opinion, is all the more important.

I would say, therefore, that this closure item should not be in the bill. If closure should be necessary for the reasons my friend states, he has his opportunity to have his day in Parliament to debate the matter on the merits at the time, and I think that that is the place to do it.

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, before the Leader of the Government shouts "Question", and closes off the debate, I have a very important issue to raise.

Senator Roblin has already dealt with the provisions limiting the length of debate in the other place, but I very much resent the fact that the government is bringing in legislation to the effect that the Senate can debate the motion for only two days. The government is overriding our rules by legislation. I do not think that is proper. I suppose, however, that a government that has been in office as long as this one has, and is as arrogant as this government has been, is really not concerned with that issue.

I refer now specifically to subclause 11(10), which states:

An order made under subsection (1) is effective on the day that it is made but if the House of Commons negatives the motion that such an order be concurred in, the order is thereupon revoked.

[Mr. Gillespie.]

I have certain quarrels with the word "negatives," but I will not go into that.

Honourable senators, the government has reverted to its old tactic, and is attempting to deprive the Senate of its constitutional authority to negate such a motion. I would like to know from the minister why this clause mentions only the House of Commons. I would point out that though the House of Commons can approve the motion, the Senate has the constitutional right to reject it.

This is very important to the senators opposite, because in a short while we will be changing positions. As Senator Riley mentioned the other day, I am getting tired of this light. After the next election I will be over there.

Senator Marshall: You prefer to sit in the dark.

Senator Phillips: Senator Marshall, I would never like to be in the same depth of darkness as the honourable senators opposite.

Let me get back to the point. I would like to hear from the minister as to why he, and the cabinet, considered that the Senate should not have their constitutional rights in this case. It is true that we can debate it in two days. You have directed that from on high, with a certain lack of wisdom, but why does the Senate have no say in this motion? We can debate it for two days, in the largesse of the government, in the really generous two days they have given us, and then we are told, in effect, "You shall vote on it at a certain time."

● (1510)

For some reason, nobody recognized that that vote should have had an effect on the motion. I want to hear from the minister. I am prepared to argue this from now until Doomsday, but I would accept a reasonable explanation and, in fact, I would like the honourable minister to rise in his seat and say it was an oversight, and amend it and correct it; and I will have nothing more to say.

An Hon. Senator: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: Senator, you raise an important point. I have looked at the transcript of your remarks yesterday, and it has just been pointed out to me that this is quite clearly an area of some concern, and perhaps of some uncertainty. I have not been able to get the advice of the law officers of the Crown on this issue yet, any more than you have, unless you have been able to reach them. I would submit to you that it is consistent with the bill which both the House of Commons and the Senate received and accepted the last time through. I have been advised that this is no different from the previous bill in this regard.

Senator Phillips: I am sorry, I guess my ears are not what they used to be; I have difficulty in hearing the minister. If it is not too much trouble, would he please repeat his answer?

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: Well, you asked a question in this chamber yesterday, and it was acknowledged as a good question, and I would also acknowledge it as a good question.

There was reference to the question of whether the law officers of the Crown might be able to provide an answer. I do not know whether they can provide an answer. I have not received an answer. I have not put the question to them. As a matter of fact, this was only drawn to my attention this morning, but I acknowledge that the issue raised is an important one, and we should seek an answer from the law officers of the Crown.

Senator Phillips: Normally I am a co-operative chap. Sometimes I have been known to co-operate, with regret and much to my reluctance. However, I find myself making this proposal: Would the minister agree that we should have an opinion from the law officers of the Crown before proceeding with this clause? If he does, I am quite prepared to wait for that opinion.

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: Honourable senators, I believe we should proceed with this bill at this time.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Phillips: I am now prepared to get a little more argumentative than I have been up to this stage. I would ask the minister, who is a minister of the Crown and a member of the cabinet—and I presume this bill met with cabinet approval; perhaps even Senator Perrault was at that cabinet meeting—why the Senate was not included and given its constitutional rights in this clause.

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: I do not think I can add very much more to what I have already said. The Senate is provided for in this clause; we have noted that. This is not the first time everyone has seen this bill. This particular bill and this particular provision came before you previously, and I do not recall any difficulties with it at that time. I have nothing more to add.

Senator Perrault: Question.

Senator Denis: Question.

The Chairman: Senator Roblin, I believe that I should deal with your two motions for amendment separately because a renumbering of the paragraphs would be involved if the first amendment were to carry.

It is moved by Senator Roblin and seconded by Senator Macdonald:

That Bill C-42 be amended

(a) by striking out subclause 11(4) on page 7 and subclause 11(8) on page 8,

(b) by renumbering the remaining subclauses accordingly, and

(c) by amending, where necessary, all references in the Bill to the renumbered subclauses.

All those in favour of the motion please rise.

All those against please rise.

The Clerk of the Senate: Yeas 10. Nays 20.

The Chairman: I declare the motion lost.

It is further moved by Senator Roblin and seconded by Senator Macdonald:

That Bill C-42 be amended

(a) by striking out lines 31 to 34 on page 8 and substituting the following:

“day as the first order of the day; or” and

(b) by striking out lines 39 to 42 on page 8 and substituting the following:

“of business.”

All those in favour of the motion please rise.

Those against please rise.

The Clerk of the Senate: Yeas 10. Nays 18.

The Chairman: I declare the motion lost.

● (1520)

Senator Phillips: Honourable senators, I am awfully disappointed, disturbed and annoyed that the minister did not agree to seek the opinion of the officers of the Crown. In my humble opinion, the Senate has the right to negate or negative. Take your pick. The Senate has that constitutional right. In this bill, the government is contravening that right. It is avoiding it.

For that reason I move:

That Bill C-42 be amended by striking out line 45 on page 8 and substituting the following:

“The House of Commons or the Senate negatives the motion.”

Senator Flynn: Madam Chairman, I wish to say a few words in support of the amendment.

It is quite clear, either by intent or inadvertence, that the Senate is not mentioned in this clause. As I read the clause, it is quite clear that some people would say it is only the House of Commons that has the right to negate the order and, therefore, even if that house were to affirm it and the Senate would negate it, it would remain in force. There is no doubt in my mind about what it means. I do not need the opinion of the law officers of the Crown to draw this conclusion.

I am quite sure that if we were not under the time limit we are, if we were not pressed by the election, and if the majority over there were in a position to vote for the amendment without creating problems for their party, this amendment would be supported. There is no doubt in my mind that they would support it. And yet there is no doubt in my mind that they won't.

In any event, you can take your responsibility. The Senate has been working under these difficult conditions for over a year now, and the conditions are getting worse. If by passing this bill today, as urged by the Leader of the Government, we have an election call pretty soon, then that would be the excuse for honourable senators on the other side for not supporting this amendment.

Senator Phillips: Would the minister inform the Senate what action the government would take if the House of Commons were to approve the motion and the Senate were to negate it?

Senator Langlois: It would end in a deadlock.

Senator Phillips: There is nothing in the bill to provide for that situation.

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: Honourable senators, it is a hypothetical question. You will understand my position, that if such an eventuality were to occur, and I cannot believe that it would—

Senator Flynn: Not in the near future.

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: —if a situation of that kind were likely to happen, I imagine there would be discussions ahead of time.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators are aware, of course, that there are procedures established in negotiating differences between the two houses.

Senator Flynn: That is not a reply. That is not an answer.

Senator Phillips: The procedures, Senator Perrault, are not incorporated in the bill. If you had read the bill you would know that those procedures are not in the bill.

Senator Langlois: There are rules.

The Chairman: Will all those in favour please rise?

Will all those who are against please rise?

The Clerk of the Senate: Yeas 10. Nays 20.

The Chairman: I declare the motion lost.

Shall clause 11 carry?

Senator Flynn: I have just a word on this. I am not reflecting upon the vote just taken, because I reflected on it before.

I merely want to say that this awkward situation is not entirely new. Perhaps the minister would be interested in discussing this matter with the law officers of the Crown when he has time. I doubt that he will have the opportunity to bring in a corrective bill in the next session, but perhaps it is for his successor.

I am looking at the War Measures Act. It is, of course, the main pattern for this kind of legislation. It is broader but, in the area this bill tries to cover, it is the same thing. It mentions the order made by the government under the War Measures Act. In subsection 6(4) it states:

If both Houses of Parliament resolve that the proclamation be revoked, it ceases to have effect—

Therefore, if one of the two houses does not resolve the proclamation, is it not revoked? You have the same problem there, but it is less clear than today. Today the intimation is that the House of Commons alone can revoke. Here there is a lot of doubt as to whether, under the War Measures Act, an order can be revoked by only one house.

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: Honourable senator, you are taking me into an area which, as a non-lawyer—

Senator Flynn: That was just for your edification.

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: —I am not prepared to comment on. But, if I have the opportunity to sit down and discuss these important distinctions with the law officers of the Crown, you may be assured that I will take full advantage of it.

The Chairman: Shall clause 11 carry?

[Senator Langlois.]

Hon. Senators: Carried.

Senator Flynn: On division.

The Chairman: Shall clause 12 carry?

Senator Forsey: Just a minute. Don't be in quite such a hurry. Madam Chairman, for reasons I have already explained, I should like to move:

That Bill C-42 be amended by striking out line 27 on page 9 and substituting the following:

If approved by order of the Governor in Council.

● (1530)

It is the point I made earlier when I was talking about subsection 2(2) and the provisions of subsection 12(3) and subsection 13(1). For the comfort of those who want to get on fast with the thing, I may say that if, as is altogether probable, this particular amendment is defeated, I shall, of course, not move the related amendment to clause 13(1) because it will be a work of supererogation to try. I am sorry that the amendment is not in both official languages, Madam Chairman. I am not enough of a draftsman to attempt it in the other language.

The Chairman: It is moved by Senator Forsey, seconded by Senator Roblin:

That Bill C-42 be amended by striking out line 27 on page 9 and substituting the following therefor:

If approved by order of the Governor in Council

All those in favour of the motion please rise. All those against the motion please rise.

The Clerk of the Senate: Yeas 8. Nays 18.

The Chairman: I declare the motion lost.

Shall clause 12 carry?

Senator Flynn: On division.

The Chairman: Shall clause 13 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 14 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 15 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 16 carry?

Senator Roblin: I object to clause 16. This is the clause that sets out regulatory powers in respect of mandatory allocation of oil under this bill. Members of the committee will have read subparagraphs (a) to (r), which convey the substance of these powers and which cover a wide range of matters, indeed. My particular objection relates to subparagraph (s), which is the basket clause and conveys powers to make regulation on any other topic. Subparagraph (s) reads as follows:

(s) respecting such other matters or things, whether or not of a like kind to those referred to in paragraphs (a) to (r), as the Board considers necessary for the purpose of carrying out a mandatory allocation program for a controlled product.

In statutes there is sometimes found clauses similar to subparagraph (s) to pick up anything previously referred to but not covered in sufficient breadth. That kind of basket clause could, perhaps, be considered; but this one, which provides powers to regulate on other matters, whether or not they are of a like kind to those referred to in paragraphs (a) to (r), in my view goes far beyond what is necessary and conveys powers the extent to which we cannot imagine.

When one considers that these can be subject to delegation by the board to any other person we can think of in the whole, wide Dominion of Canada—if I can use that old-fashioned phrase—one will see the impact of subparagraph (s). It is too broad and is simply unacceptable. I should like to see it struck from the bill, and, to do that, I move:

That Bill C-42 be amended by striking out lines 19 to 25 on page 13 and substituting the following:

"lations are made under this section."

The Chairman: It is moved by Senator Roblin, seconded by Senator Macdonald:

That Bill C-42 be amended by striking out lines 19 to 25 on page 13 of the bill and substituting the following therefor:

lations are made under this section.

Is that the amendment?

Senator Roblin: Yes, Madam Chairman. It is drafting technique that I am not fully familiar with, but if you read it carefully, the substance of it is that subclause 16(1) paragraph (s) is struck from the bill.

Senator Forsey: I must point out something on this in support of the motion. This particular subparagraph appears to have been modelled on the similar subparagraph in the Air Canada bill which was before the Senate last session. That subparagraph would have given Air Canada the right to engage in any enterprise under the blue dome of heaven, from running a peanut stand to space exploration. That subparagraph was struck out of the Air Canada bill at the insistence of the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications. It was dropped.

I should like to suggest, as Senator Flynn did a few moments ago that, if we were not under the kind of pressure we are under now, probably a good many people on the other side and to my left would be prepared to vote in favour of this motion for the exact same reasons given in the case of the Air Canada bill.

I have one further observation to add. I am not altogether sure that under this enormous basket clause—a basket taking in most of the universe, in fact—it will not be possible to introduce some measure of wage and price controls. There seems to be no limit to it whatsoever.

The Chairman: I apologize, Senator Roblin, but I am still somewhat confused. This simply says "striking out lines 19 to 25."

Senator Grosart: It gets rid of the word "and".

Senator Roblin: Madam Chairman, if you look at page 13 and take line 19—

Senator Flynn: It may be line 20 in the revised bill.

Senator Langlois: It is lines 20 to 25.

Senator Flynn: That would be true in the French version, so perhaps this is an appropriate time to point out that the amendment might be correct, because it does conform to the French version.

Senator Roblin: I am looking at a bill as passed by the House of Commons on March 21, 1979. I am further looking at page 13. The proposal is, as Senator Grosart has stated, to get rid of the word "and" which appears at the end of line 19. The technique adopted is to strike out all of line 19 and also the balance of subparagraph (s) and substitute "lations are made under this section."

Senator Flynn: It is not necessary that everybody understands.

Senator Denis: It is only part of one word.

Senator Flynn: Why do you worry?

The Chairman: All those in favour of the motion as read please rise.

All those against the motion as read please rise.

The Clerk of the Senate: Yeas 8. Nays 16.

The Chairman: I declare the motion lost.

• (1540)

Shall clause 16 carry?

Some Hon. Senators: On division.

The Chairman: Shall clause 17 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 18 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Part II, Rationing of Controlled Products.

Shall clause 19 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 20 carry?

Senator Roblin: Madam Chairman, I have the same objection to clause 20 which I expressed in connection with clause 16. Paragraph (l) of clause 20 is another one of these blanket provisions which is just as unsatisfactory as that contained in paragraph (s) of subclause 16(1). Without repeating my objections, I would simply move a resolution which would have the effect of deleting paragraph (l), as follows:

That Bill C-42 be amended by striking out lines 3 to 9 on page 17 of the bill and substituting the following:

"fied in the regulations."

That is another one of these split words, Madam Chairman.

The Chairman: It is moved by Senator Roblin, seconded by Senator Macdonald:

That Bill C-42 be amended by striking out lines 3 to 9 at page 17 and substituting the following:

"fied in the regulations."

All those in favour of the motion please rise.

All those against the motion please rise.

The Clerk of the Senate: Yeas 8. Nays 17.

The Chairman: I declare the motion lost.

Senator Forsey: I wonder if I might ask the minister a question about paragraph (k) of clause 20.

Paragraph (k) empowers the board to make regulations "notwithstanding any provision of the Bank Act, authorizing and empowering" the banks to do certain things.

I am wondering whether he thinks that is effective by itself or whether it should not include also the word "requiring," because it is difficult to see where in the clause the power would come to require the banks to do anything simply by authorizing and empowering them to do something. I am wondering whether there is not an inadvertent omission there.

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: Senator Forsey, my understanding is that the banks were fully consulted with respect to this particular provision and the indication is that they are willing to go along with it. We have no reason to believe that additional words would be required.

Senator Flynn: I want to put on the record my view that this provision is destined to have the banks operate part of the rationing system by having them burn the coupons. The consumer would stick his coupon to a sheet, and the banks would have the duty to burn those coupons.

During the last war I had occasion to be counsel for the eastern part of Quebec for the Wartime Prices and Trade Board and the other administrative body, and I had the rather sad duty of suing a bank employee who, instead of burning the coupons, was reselling them.

Senator Perrault: Recycling them.

The Chairman: Shall clause 20 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Part III, General and Administration.

Shall clause 21 carry?

Senator Roblin: Madam Chairman, I have a question of the minister in connection with paragraph (a) of subclause 21(3). Subclause (3) outlines what constitutes a good defence against something which the board has compelled someone to do, and paragraph (a) reads:

arising out of a delay or a failure to provide, sell or offer for sale or exchange any product—

But there is another part of the transaction that might be included here, and that is to take. For example, it is easily conceivable that there might be some regulation of the board which prevents someone from taking a product that they were under contract to take, and this should be a transaction that ought to be included under subclause 21(3)(a) in order to make sure that all aspects of the matter are covered.

I am wondering whether the minister has run across this point.

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: Senator Roblin, I have consulted my legal adviser on this, and he tells me that it is the view of the drafters of the bill that this subclause should be sufficient as it stands. If you would like to put forward a further view, I would be pleased to consider it.

Senator Roblin: I will not have to administer the act, so I am not going to worry about it any more. All I can say is that you have been warned.

The Chairman: Shall clause 21 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 22 carry?

Senator Roblin: Madam Chairman, this is one of the most unsatisfactory clauses in what is generally a rather unsatisfactory bill. It provides, as honourable senators know, for a special tribunal that the Governor in Council may provide for. The job of this tribunal will be to hear and determine complaints of deprivation of property occasioned by any regulation under this proposed act.

I entirely approve of a special tribunal to deal with problems that arise. My regret, however, is that this one is so limited in almost all its particulars. First of all, it is not mandatory. The minister may say that the government is going to do it, but I would feel very much better if it read "shall" rather than "may." I intend to propose that it be amended to read "shall."

In view of the tremendous powers that we have discussed today and the enormous scope of regulation-making and sub-delegation and the overriding of statutes, and all these other things that we have been worrying about today, the fact that the special tribunal is not a mandatory one strikes me as being incongruous. It ought to read "shall," and if it cannot read that way by amendment, I would certainly appreciate the minister's assurance that in fact such a tribunal will be set up.

Even if he does tell me that he is going to do it, that will help only to a certain extent. I find it extraordinary that the scope of this tribunal is so limited. It speaks of the hearing and determination of complaints of deprivation of property. I don't know what "hearing and determination" happens to mean in this connection. Does it mean that awards can be given if some right of property has been trespassed upon? If that is the case, I certainly think we ought to instruct this tribunal that the awards should be just and equitable in the circumstances.

As we related to this chamber the other day, we cannot be at all satisfied that boards of this nature will grant equity in terms of their relief. We have seen that it is not part of their instruction, and our experience with other boards indicates that you do not always get equity unless you make sure it is included in the law. The lawyers will have a fine time with this if it is not.

[Senator Roblin.]

I want to see the clause amended to include some consideration for just and equitable treatment in the case of deprivation of property. However, the question of property is surely not the most important consideration when one considers the possible implications of this bill. There are a great many other rights at stake here that one could imagine if one considered that matter at all. I want to see this clause expanded so that not only would such a tribunal deal with the deprivation of property, but other losses and damages suffered as a result of this proposed act.

If we have any concern about equity in this matter, it seems to me we have to give that some serious consideration.

• (1550)

My third point is that I want to see provision for an appeal from this board, and I suggest an appeal to the Trial Division of the Federal Court, will be appropriate in the circumstances.

So the three things I think should be done with clause 22 are these: First of all, I think it should be mandatory. Secondly, in connection with property and other matters, it should clearly compel the board to award compensation that is just and equitable; and thirdly, it should be expanded from matters of property to any rights which may be adversely affected by the operation of the statute. So I move:

That Bill C-42 be amended

(a) by striking out line 1 on page 18 and substituting the following:

"22. (1) The Governor in Council shall make"

(b) by striking out line 10 on page 18 and substituting the following:

"for such deprivation of property or any other losses or damages suffered as a result of the operation of the Act."

(c) by adding immediately after line 10 on page 18 the following subsections:

"(2) The tribunal established pursuant to subsection (1), in determining the amount of compensation referred to in that subsection, shall consider such factors as it deems proper in the circumstances to enable it to make an award of compensation that is just and equitable.

(3) A decision of a tribunal established pursuant to subsection (1) may be appealed to the Federal Court-Trial Division within thirty days of the day upon which the parties receive notice of the decision of the tribunal or within such further time as the tribunal or a member of the tribunal may allow,"

Honourable senators, we have a very poor bill before us, I suggest, and the least we can try to do is to bring to it such measures of equity and justice as reason and common sense would commend to us. If I have failed in all these other amendments that I have been working on this afternoon, I hope this one at least will strike a response in the conscience and in the intelligence of all the members of this house.

Senator Flynn: Wishful thinking.

The Chairman: Honourable senators, it is moved by Senator Roblin, seconded by Senator Macdonald:

That Bill C-42 be amended

(a) by striking out line 1 on page 18 and substituting the following:

"22. (1) The Governor in Council shall make"

(b) by striking out line 10 on page 18 and substituting the following:

"for such deprivation of property or any other losses or damages suffered as a result of the operation of the Act." and

(c) by adding immediately after line 10 on page 18 the following subsections:

"(2) The tribunal established pursuant to subsection (1), in determining the amount of compensation referred to in that subsection, shall consider such factors as it deems proper in the circumstances to enable it to make an award of compensation that is just and equitable.

(3) A decision of a tribunal established pursuant to subsection (1) may be appealed to the Federal Court-Trial Division within thirty days of the day upon which the parties receive notice of the decision of the tribunal or within such further time as the tribunal or a member of the tribunal may allow,"

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion in amendment?

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, I merely want to mention for the record and for the edification of the minister, because I think he, or preferably his successor, will have to review this legislation, that this section is typical of something that has been botched up. I have been trying to solve the problem of compensation for losses—any kind of losses that may result from the application of the act—by simply providing for the Governor in Council to make regulations to establish a tribunal, the rules of which will follow, and so on and so forth. It does not mention, for instance, the other kind of losses that may result from the fact that a certain contract may be cancelled and that the party to the contract could lose profits, so it is not necessarily deprivation of property but also deprivation of profits.

I want to emphasize that under the War Measures Act, which I think, again, is the mother of this act in some respects, any claim had to be referred to the Exchequer Court of Canada. Of course, it was by the Minister of Justice, which is an element I do not like. But it was to the Exchequer Court of Canada, or to a superior court or county court of the province within which the claim arises, or to a judge of any such court. To me the recourse to the court is very important.

Another thing that should be mentioned in the regulations, and should have been mentioned in the bill, is that the general principles in the Expropriation Act should be followed here. They should be adapted, of course, to the special circumstances of the case. I agree with Senator Roblin that this clause is entirely unsatisfactory, and it seems to me that the drafters did not have much time to prepare and present this bill. They should have been able to do a better job if the government had thought about it before, and not on the eve of an election and for an election.

The Chairman: Will all those in favour of the motion please rise?

Will all those against the motion please rise?

The Clerk of the Senate: Yeas 9. Nays 19.

The Chairman: I declare the motion lost.

Shall clause 22 carry?

Some Hon. Senators: Carried.

An Hon. Senator: On division.

The Chairman: Shall clause 23 carry?

Some Hon. Senators: Carried.

Senator Macdonald: Honourable senators, I wonder if I might make a few comments on clause 23 and ask the minister if he could give some study to that clause to see if it could not be simplified in some way. Clause 23 says:

(1) Where, in order to comply with any request in writing from the Minister to develop an implementation plan or arrangement in relation to this Act or with any regulation under this Act, a person would be required to enter into any agreement, arrangement or course of action that might cause him to contravene the Combines Investigation Act, such person may apply to the Board for an order exempting him from that Act in respect of that particular agreement, arrangement or course of action.

Then it goes on to state that if such an application is made, the board would consult with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs in regard to it.

It would seem to me that this is an awkward and cumbersome way of handling that particular situation, and they are putting the onus on the person after requesting the minister to obtain legal advice as to whether or not he was going to contravene any of the provisions of the Combines Investigation Act. It would appear to me that it would be simpler if the board, for example, consulted with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs prior to making the request to the person for whatever arrangements they wanted to make. In other words, this would shift the onus from the person to the board, and I think it could very easily be done by giving, perhaps, a blanket exemption so that it would not be an offence under the Combines Investigation Act if the person was carrying out a request from the board. Perhaps it could be done in the same way as it is done in Part III under subclause 21(3) where it says:

Without precluding any other defence available in law, it is a good defence to any action brought in any court for breach of contract—

Arising out of a delay, for example.

—that the delay or failure was caused solely by compliance with a regulation under this Act—

[Senator Flynn.]

Would the minister perhaps comment on that?

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: Honourable senators, I think perhaps the best way of looking at this particular provision is to consider it from the point of view of the petroleum industry and its rights. The board might well make a request to the industry for certain collective action, which would involve a degree of co-operation which the board itself might not be aware of. It would not be the board that would be translating the particular request into action; it would be a member of the industry, or a group of members of the industry acting together.

● (1600)

So given the fact that the board can never fully know what particular measures the industry may wish to take or have to take in order to comply with the board's order, it was felt reasonable to have a provision which would enable a member of the industry to protect his own interest, recognizing the implications of the request, by placing the onus on him to come forward and seek, through an application, an exemption.

Senator Roblin: Is the minister telling us that he is going to ask somebody to commit something that is a breach of the law, and then say to that person, "You have to decide whether the law has been breached and ask for some exemption"? I cannot believe that that is what the minister means, but that is what he said.

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: I was saying that a request by the minister to the industry to take a particular course of action with respect to co-operating together to supply a particular market, for example, could involve practices on the part of one or more of the companies acting together which could—not necessarily would, but could—put them in a position where they were breaking the law, or where they would fear that they were breaking the law. So to protect them in such a situation, there is this provision.

Senator Roblin: What kind of protection is that? The minister comes to this person and says, "I order you to break the law, and if you do not do it, I have sanctions here of $2,000, or whatever it is, if you do not do what you are told to do by us." So the company concerned runs out and does what the minister says. Surely, if the minister wants him to do something which is thought to contravene the statute, the minister, his board or his officials ought to give the clearance in the first place. That is only elementary justice, it seems to me.

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: I make the point that it is impossible, in an industry that is as complicated as this, operating in so many different markets, with a number of different products, and a whole series of prescribed priority categories and end uses, for any minister to be able to appreciate all the implications of how the industry would react to give effect to a particular request or order from him. In those circumstances, it is far better to place the onus on those who know the industry, who are aware of the practices, and to provide that degree of protection. That is what this is intended to do.

Senator Roblin: Well, I suppose you would say to the burglar that he should go out and find out whether or not he is breaking the law. My honourable friend really seems to be presenting us with an absurd situation. He is saying that the government does not know what the rules are. He is saying, "We are going to ask somebody to do something that might break the rules; but we are going to make that person take the onus of getting some clearance with respect to the matter." It seems to me, in the first place, that the government ought to know what are the rules. They made them, after all. They ought to know what are the rules; and if they ask someone to break those rules, then they should make sure that the clearance is given by the government and that it does not become an onus on the person concerned. The position taken by the minister is completely unsupportable.

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: We are not asking them to break the law. We are asking them to implement a mandatory allocation program. There are a number of ways in which the industry is going to be involved in this. Clearly this is for the protection of the individual who is trying to comply with a request or order in an emergency situation. I would emphasize "in an emergency situation" which, with respect, I do not believe the honourable senator understands.

Senator Roblin: Well, I am darned sure that it is going to be an emergency situation for the person concerned. If he has broken the law and the Combines Investigation Act comes down on him, he will understand all right that it is an emergency. I think the minister is completely on the wrong course here. If the government asks somebody to do something which it thinks may be unlawful, then it has the onus to make sure that the person is permitted by law to do what is provided for. Suppose—it is a very far-fetched instance, but it is possible, I suppose—that the person who did something unlawful at the minister's request would not get the clearance, because somebody else would not give it to him. There is no guarantee in this statute that anyone would. So I do not know where the minister's logic leads him. I think it does not lead him very far.

Senator Forsey: The minister says, Madam Chairman, that they are not going to ask anybody to breach the law. But the subclause clearly says:

—or course of action that might cause him to contravene the Combines Investigation Act—

If you are contravening an act, it seems to me you are breaching it. I haven't looked up Roget's Thesaurus, but it seems to me that it amounts to the same thing. Clearly it doesn't say that the minister will order them, but he may order something that may contravene the law. So that particular part of the minister's reply doesn't seem to me to meet the point raised by Senator Roblin.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Honourable senators, I have not engaged in any discussion this afternoon because of the time constraints that are upon us, but this is such an outrageous requirement, in my opinion, that I really cannot refrain from making a comment or two. Really this means that the board or the minister, as the case may be, or some of these shadowy characters who may or may not be designated to enforce the law, may require someone to do something which is against the provisions of some law which is mentioned here, or some law which is not mentioned here.

First, the person who is responsible for carrying out that unlawful act, if it is one, has to retain counsel to discover whether or not it is likely to be unlawful. If he is left in doubt about it, then surely the only thing he can do is delay until he can get some reasonably certain advice on it. He then has to go and apply to someone for an order which will exempt him from any action or prosecution which might be taken under the statute which he broke—all this at his expense, all this at great delay. It is inevitable that there would be great delay.

Granting for the moment, as I am quite prepared to do for just this particular part of the discussion, that the onus of protecting himself should be left with the person who breaks the law, why would it not be perfectly simple to deal with the situation as subclause 21(3) deals with the question of contractual obligations, namely, by providing that the person who breaks the law may defend himself on the basis that what he is charged with doing is something that he was required to do by someone who had authority to require him to do it. That at least would avoid the difficulty of delay, the difficulty of not knowing whether or not you are going to break the law, and of trying to find out before you do it.

If you could show that what you did was a necessary action in order to comply with an order given by a person in authority, then you would be safe. Surely that would be a much more expeditious and less costly method of procedure for the person in trouble and would result in far less delay in getting him to do the thing that he was being ordered to do.

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: I agree with the honourable senator that his approach would, or could, involve less delay. On the other hand, I think it could also involve much more abuse; indeed, I think it could encourage abuse. If members of the industry were, in effect, given carte blanche, as I understand your proposal to be, they could enter into restrictive agreements of virtually any kind, and then later plead that they were using these restrictive agreements and arrangements to conform to a request by the minister. In those circumstances there could be significant abuses.

● (1610)

What we have done in this particular provision is say, "We recognize that in complying with the request it will be necessary for you to sit down with your competitors from time to time and discuss prices, market shares, quantities that will be shipped to particular markets, and those kinds of questions. We will ask you, when you receive a particular request for implementing a particular measure, to tell us if you feel you are going to involve yourselves in any activity which would be contrary to the Combines Investigation Act." That would be placing some onus, unquestionably, on the individual to decide how much joint action he feels is needed to implement the particular request, and whether or not that joint action would be likely to contravene the Combines Investigation Act. It puts him on notice to be specific, rather than giving him carte blanche.

Senator Smith (Colchester): I think I understand what the minister is saying, but with regret I have to say to him that it does not seem to me to make the situation any better. Also, with respect, I really am not convinced, nor am I even brought anywhere near to the point of being convinced, that there is likely to be any more improper collusion or action under the clause as it stands than would be the case if my suggestion were followed that in the case of a breach of the law it be considered to be a defence if he can show that it was necessarily the result of an order properly given to him by a person with the authority to do so. After all, the burden would be upon him in any such criminal action, if it were one, or in any such action of a quasi-criminal character, to prove his defence. It would not be a case of the reasonable doubt principle in its ordinary application being followed, although, in the final analysis, I suppose if everything were left in a state of doubt that principle would apply; but the moment he is charged and raises the defence that he had to do it, then the burden is on him to prove by a preponderance of evidence that he had to do it in order to comply with a direction from someone who had the authority to give such a direction. I suggest that there is no more possibility of improper collusion under such a system than under the system set out in the clause we are discussing.

The Chairman: Shall clause 23 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

Senator Macdonald: On division.

The Chairman: Shall clause 24 carry?

Senator Roblin: Madam Chairman, just before we skip over clause 24, I would like to direct the attention of the minister to paragraph (4)(b) of this clause, which reads, in part, as follows:

(b) provide for a means whereby any provincial or municipal authorities or natural persons, or any of them—

And so on. Why are we restricting the effect of this provision to natural persons? The import of the wording, I suppose, is to bar unnatural persons, such as corporations, et cetera, from having the right to demand a hearing in respect of this matter. As it seems to me highly improbable that corporations will be concerned in such a matter very directly, I just wonder why it has been found necessary to exclude them in such a direct manner.

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: Senator Roblin, the language may be unduly complicated. I will not argue that. You are more familiar with the law than I.

Senator Roblin: I interrupt my honourable friend at once to inform him that I am not a member of the learned legal profession.

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: In any event, let me say to the honourable senator, if he is concerned with the possibility that corporations could not be represented, that I am told that executives of corporations would be able to appear as natural persons.

[Mr. Gillespie.]

Senator Roblin: Now I am rather sorry I did not train to be a lawyer when I get answers like that.

Senator Flynn: There was a simpler answer. This is a defect in the drafting. That is all.

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 25 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 26 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 27 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 28 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 29 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 30 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 31 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 32 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 33 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 34 carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall the title of the bill carry?

Senator Smith (Colchester): Madam Chairman, I just wish to intervene briefly in order to give the minister an opportunity which I know he would like to have. This morning I asked him a question with reference to the equivalency in barrels of oil per day of the electrical capacity of the proposed Fundy power project. He was good enough to get the answer, and I know he has it with him. Just before we carry the title, therefore, I would be glad if he would take the opportunity to put it on the record.

Hon. Mr. Gillespie: Honourable senators, I was asked by Senator Smith what the oil displacement is of the projected electricity output of the Fundy tidal project. The answer I have for you, Senator Smith, is that the project capacity is approximately 1,100 megawatts. The electrical output would be approximately 3.4 billion kilowatt hours a year. The oil displacement, or oil equivalent, for this output would be approximately 3 million barrels of oil a year, or, on a daily basis, 8,200 barrels.

Perhaps, while I am on my feet, Madam Chairman, I can take this opportunity of expressing my gratitude to honourable senators for their courtesy in receiving me here today, and also for their perceptive questioning and very helpful remarks. The experience I have enjoyed—and I use the word advisedly—is one that I shall long remember. It is my first appearance before the Senate, of course, and the experience is one that I will certainly recommend to my colleagues for both the reasons I have mentioned, namely, the way I was received, and the expertise which was directed and devoted to the provisions of this bill. Thank you again for receiving me under these auspices.

• (1620)

Senator Flynn: I would merely say that it was also a pleasure for us to have the minister here and to test him and his experts in their knowledge. If it had not been for the circumstances, he might have had to come back another day. However, on the whole, if we did not convince the majority in this house to improve that bill, what was said here may be useful to the minister, or at least to his department, in reviewing the legislation, and possibly some improvements may be made during the next Parliament. It may be that another government will have that responsibility, but I hope that the record will be useful to the minister's officials.

Senator Perrault: I too join in the thanks extended to the minister for meeting with us today and for being such a co-operative witness. At the same time, I know that some of the proposals which have been advanced in the form of amendments by honourable senators have at least a kernel of merit—

Senator Roblin: Don't go too far now.

Senator Perrault: —and will be considered by the minister. No piece of legislation is ever perfect. It can always be improved, and it may well be that some of the suggestions which have been advanced by certain honourable senators here today will show in subsequent amendments which may come to us over a period of time.

I thank the minister once again for being with us.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Senator Riley: I wonder if there are any directorates in any of the government departments for deprogramming a senator who appears today to have joined a new and strange cult.

The Chairman: Shall the title carry?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

Senator Flynn: Without amendment—surprise!

The Hon. the Speaker: The sitting is resumed.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Senator Neiman: Madam Speaker, the Committee of the Whole, to which was referred Bill C-42, to provide a means to conserve the supplies of energy within Canada during periods of national emergency caused by shortages or market disturbances affecting the national security and welfare and the economic stability of Canada, has taken the bill into consideration and has directed me to report the same without amendment.

THIRD READING

Senator McDonald: Honourable senators, with leave, I move third reading now.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is leave granted, honourable senators?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed, on division.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that she had received the following communication:

RIDEAU HALL
OTTAWA
GOVERNMENT HOUSE

March 23, 1979

Madam,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Yves Pratte, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 23rd day of March, at 4.45 p.m. for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Madam,

Your obedient servant,
Edmond Joly de Lotbinière
Administrative Secretary to the
Governor General

The Honourable

The Speaker of the Senate,

Ottawa.

Senator Langlois: Honourable senators, I move that the Senate do now adjourn during pleasure to reassemble at the call of the bell at 4.40 this afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 5.15 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, may I make a brief statement?

As honourable senators know, it was planned that royal assent be given to the bill we have been discussing in Committee of the Whole this day and the bill to which we have accorded third reading. In the other place, as we have been informed, the quorum was lost a few minutes ago. As a result, there are no members of the other place to assist in the process of royal assent.

It is a rather unusual occurrence, as honourable senators are aware, but, in any case, it is not possible to have royal assent to what is regarded by the government as an important measure.

The delay in reassembling was occasioned by discussions with representatives of the other place about the time that royal assent might be scheduled. That, of course, must take place at some time next week. It is proposed, therefore, that the Senate meet on Monday evening. We have been informed that there will be legislation for introduction in the Senate at that time. Perhaps at some time during the course of Monday evening royal assent might proceed as it would have under normal circumstances.

Senator Flynn: Honourable senators, I do not criticize the government leader for what has happened, but I think he recognizes that this puts us in an ironic situation, after being forced to deal with this bill in the last two days at high speed because of the undertaking we gave that we would do everything possible to have royal assent today to enable the Prime Minister to call an election tomorrow or before Monday, if he wished.

I do not know whose fault it is in the other place. I think it is the fault of the whole of the House of Commons, and the government must certainly share a lot in the responsibility for the situation. I do not know why we should come back on Monday night instead of on Tuesday, which is our usual day of sitting. I appreciate that there may be some legislation coming, but the leader has not told us whether any has been passed this afternoon. I understand that Bill C-38 has not been passed. In any event, Bill C-38 is not of an urgent nature, because it is already in force. Even if it were left pending for a few days, it would really make no difference.

In order to get even with the House of Commons, I would suggest that we come back on Tuesday evening—

Senator Connolly (Ottawa West): Thursday.

Senator Flynn: Thursday, perhaps. I will accept an amendment by Senator Connolly.

● (1720)

If the Leader of the Government tells me that if we come back on Monday evening, and royal assent is given to this legislation, Parliament will be dissolved that evening or the next day, I will agree with him. Without that assurance, I think it is unreasonable to ask us to come back on Monday evening.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I want to add, on behalf of the government, that the co-operation of the official opposition during the past week, and especially during the last two days, has been very much appreciated. The opposition has conducted itself in the best parliamentary form and spirit, and we appreciate that very much.

I apologize for those members of the government in the other place who share some responsibility and blame for failing to maintain a quorum at an important time in the history of the Parliament of Canada. Of course, the blame must be shared by members of other parties also.

I can only reiterate what I said. We have been given assurances in the past hour that a bill will be ready for introduction in the Senate on Monday evening. I am asking the Senate to support the motion to adjourn until Monday evening.

Senator Marshall: I understand this is the first time this ever happened in Canadian history. It should be noted that it happened on the anniversary of the summons to the Senate of Senators Anderson, Bird, Guay, Haidasz, Lewis, Roblin and myself.

Senator Grosart: Honourable senators for the record, I suggest that attention be called to the fact that there is considerably more than a quorum in the Senate at this time, and has been all day. I think it should also be recorded that this has been a colossal piece of government bungling. There is no question about that. Not only was there nobody at the door of the House of Commons to answer the summons of the Black Rod, but the Deputy of the Governor General was kept waiting, so I feel it should not just pass as a joke or a funny happening; it is a colossal piece of bungling.

Senator Lamontagne: Do not get too partisan.

Senator Grosart: I am not being partisan. I am speaking of the privileges of this house, and respect for the Parliament of Canada. We were told that it was of utmost urgency that this particular bill be assented to. The minister was here for most of the day, and he insisted on the importance of this measure and said it was of absolute urgency that it be passed. For that reason, this chamber deliberately undertook not to give this bill the kind of consideration that it should have had. We, on this side, had many more amendments to move but, deliberately, we decided not to move all of them in order that royal assent might be given to this bill this afternoon.

I say it is bungling, it is a disgrace, and the entire responsibility rests with the government who, themselves, were impressing upon us the urgency associated with the passing of this bill. It was up to the government to ensure there was a quorum in the other place. It is not the responsibility of the opposition to make sure there is a quorum to meet the requirements of the government.

My leader, in his remarks this evening, has been unusually gentle. It is not very often that we on this side feel he understates a case, but he may have in these circumstances. I am not saying he did.

I have made these remarks because I feel it is important that they be made. This is not an ordinary happening, and I urge the Leader of the Government to think twice before he again asks us to accommodate the government—and it was an accommodation of the government in this case, as we have been accommodating the government for a period of several weeks now. I hope he will not pressure us too soon with the same excuses, and the same reasons why we should not do our full duty in this house.

Senator Forsey: Honourable senators, I should like to add to what Senator Grosart has said, that this proceeding, or lack of proceeding, is also a discourtesy, a gross discourtesy, to the representative of the Crown in this instance.

Senator Argue: Honourable senators, I too want to add my objection to what has taken place. I would point out that the quorum in the House of Commons is 20 out of a membership of 265, and they were not able to maintain that quorum this afternoon. Our quorum is 15 out of a much smaller membership, and while at times it is not easy to maintain a quorum in this house, we certainly do a much better job than they do in the other place.

Those members of the House of Commons who speak of reform of the Senate might consider reform in the operation of their own house so that this kind of accident—something which, as Senator Marshall has said, is a first in the history of this country—should not happen again in the future. Also, as Senator Forsey said, on this occasion it involved an insult to the Crown.

I am told that when it was drawn to the attention of the Speaker of the House of Commons that there was not a quorum, there were 17 members present, and that this occurred during private members' hour. I do not know what the rules of the other place are, but I am told that when a bill or a motion in the name of a private member comes before that house, and the person in whose name the bill or motion is wishes to have it stand, he can only do so with the unanimous consent of the house or—and this can happen only the one time—it may stand at the request of the government. I am informed that there were three bills or motions—I am not sure which—in the names of Conservative members, and that the government did not request that those items stand. This may have been an error in judgment on the part of the government. The Conservatives in the other place were most disturbed and, as a convenience, their basic attendance disappeared, with the result that Mr. Paproski called the attention of the Speaker to the fact that there was no quorum.

I think that is a fairly accurate description of what happened in the other place this afternoon. No matter which side is to blame, there is no question but that they have been playing games over there. They have all been in the business of playing games recently, and not attending to the work of the House of Commons. I think those who consider themselves authorities in these matters—and even those who consider themselves not so great authorities—and who wish to examine the operations of this house, should also examine the operations of the other place. I am confident that if a fair-minded person were to examine the operations of the two houses, we would come out with much higher marks.

● (1730)

Senator Smith (Colchester): Honourable senators, I have no intention of making any remarks, but with reference to the comment of Senator Forsey, and the repetition to some extent thereof by Senator Argue, I would ask the Leader of the Government: Was His Excellency the Governor General or his Deputy present in this building for the purpose of giving royal assent at one time this afternoon?

Senator Perrault: It is my understanding the Deputy of His Excellency was either on the way or in the building. However, I am not sure.

Senator Langlois: It was Mr. Justice Pratte.

Senator Flynn: What about meeting on Tuesday, if we give our consent to second reading of the bill then?

Senator Perrault: I can only say that it is the best judgment of those involved with the passage of legislation—whether or not the honourable senator agrees with that judgment—that Monday night at 8 o'clock is the most appropriate time for the Senate to meet next week.

Senator Flynn: What worries me is that when you say “those involved” it suggests that somebody else outside of this house is involved, and after what happened this afternoon I do not like to have anyone from the other side involved in our business. It seems to me that on Monday night we are not required to give leave to proceed with any legislation that night—only might—come, and I am prepared to give consent to proceed with second reading on Tuesday. We might be here for nothing on Monday night.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I give this commitment that there will be a bill introduced on Monday night in the Senate for debate. There are other measures to come before the Senate next week, and the decision to call the Senate to meet at 8 o'clock on Monday night next, March 26, is a decision taken solely in the Senate.

Senator Flynn: Then there is no reason for the government leader to be so stubborn. I agree that we are going to make the decision, but I am trying to have some valid reasons. I know that if somebody else is involved, then it is difficult to deal with the Leader of the Government. He says, “I have been told to do that, so don't question me.” If he were to say that he is the only one responsible, then I could argue with him. I am telling him that even if legislation is introduced in the Senate on Monday night, we do not have to consent to second reading—in fact, we can refuse consent to proceed—whereas we are willing to give consent to proceed on Tuesday.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I do not really believe there is much merit in imputing motives one way or the other.

ADJOURNMENT

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Motions:

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, I move, seconded by Senator Langlois, that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Monday next, March 26, 1979, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Senator Flynn: Bulldozer!

Senator Langlois: With leave.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is leave granted, to move that the Senate will adjourn until Monday evening at 8 o'clock?

Senator Smith (Colchester): No.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), it is moved by Honourable Senator Perrault, P.C., seconded by Honourable Senator Langlois, that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Monday next, March 26, 1979, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Senator Flynn: On division.

Motion agreed to, on division.

Senator Smith (Colchester): Honourable senators, I think that is poor recompense for the co-operation that has been given the Leader of the Government during the past two days. It is absolutely incredible, after the co-operation he has received, and after the embarrassment that he and the Senate has suffered as a result of what happened in the Commons, that he now resists the very reasonable appeal of the Leader of the Opposition that the adjournment be until Tuesday, as is usual, rather than Monday, especially as there is no particular work before us that requires attention on Monday.

I should think that any sort of ordinary recognition of the circumstances, ordinary reason, would impel the Leader of the Government to agree with the very reasonable request of the Leader of the Opposition.

Senator Perrault: Honourable senators, there has been a good deal of lecturing during the past half-hour. I suggest to those spokesmen for the official opposition, who say that the loss of quorum is the total responsibility of the government, that it is just as much the responsibility of members of the loyal opposition. Indeed, it was a member of the opposition who called the attention of the Chair to the fact that a quorum was lacking.

Senator Grosart: That was his duty.

Senator Perrault: In the other place this has not been Parliament in its finest hour, so I do not think there is much value in recriminations at this stage.

The Senate adjourned until Monday, March 26, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Monday, March 26, 1979

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.
Prayers.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that she had received the following communication:

RIDEAU HALL
OTTAWA
GOVERNMENT HOUSE

March 26, 1979

Madam,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Yves Pratte, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 26th day of March, at 8.15 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be
Madam,
Your obedient servant,
Edmond Joly de Lotbinière
Administrative Secretary to the
Governor General

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate,
Ottawa.

Senator Patten: Honourable senators, I move that the Senate do now adjourn during pleasure to await the arrival of the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General.

Senator Grosart: I wonder if I could ask the Acting Leader of the Government if he has any information as to whether the House of Commons is sitting.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Yves Pratte, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, Deputy of His Excellency the Governor

General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and being come with their Speaker, the Honourable the Speaker of the Senate said:

Honourable members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

I have the honour to inform you that His Excellency the Governor General has been pleased to cause Letters Patent to be issued under his Sign Manual and Signet constituting the Honourable Yves Pratte, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, his Deputy, to do in His Excellency's name all acts on his part necessary to be done during His Excellency's pleasure.

The Commission was read by the Clerk of the Senate.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the following bills:

An Act to provide a means to conserve the supplies of energy within Canada during periods of national emergency caused by shortages or market disturbances affecting the national security and welfare and the economic stability of Canada.

An Act to amend the Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Banks Act.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

● (2030)

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Senator Patten tabled:

Reports of the Administrator under the Anti-Inflation Act, dated March 21, 1979, pursuant to section 17(3) of the said Act, Chapter 75, Statutes of Canada, 1974-75-76, regarding the following references:

1. Bell Canada, Montreal, Quebec.
2. St. Boniface General Hospital, St. Boniface, Manitoba.
3. Board of Commissioners of Police of the Corporation of the Township of Gloucester, Ottawa, Ontario.

Report on operations under the Regional Development Incentives Act for the month of January 1979, pursuant to section 16 of the said Act, Chapter R-3, R.S.C., 1970.

ADJOURNMENT

Senator Petten: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate and notwithstanding rule 45(1)(g), I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, March 27, 1979, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Motion agreed to.

AERONAUTICS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

Senator Petten presented Bill S-15, to amend the Aeronautics Act.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read a second time?

Senator Petten moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading on Wednesday, March 28, 1979.

Motion agreed to.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

ISRAELI-EGYPTIAN PEACE TREATY—UNITED NATIONS PEACEKEEPING FORCE—QUESTION

Senator Austin: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the Acting Leading of the Government whether the government can make a statement of policy with respect to the United Nations Peacekeeping Force that stands between Israel and Egypt. Will the Canadian component of this force return to Canada now that Egypt and Israel have signed a peace treaty?

Senator Petten: Honourable senator, I will take that question as notice on behalf of Senator Perrault.

YOUTHS AND STUDENTS

PROGRAMS IN EFFECT IN 1977-78—QUESTION ON THE ORDER PAPER ANSWERED

Question No. 25—By Senator Marshall:

1. What are the names of all youth and student programs which were in effect in the fiscal year 1977-78?
2. What department administered each program?

3. How many people were employed under each program?

Reply by the Secretary of State of Canada:

Insofar as the Department of the Secretary of State is concerned:

Youth and Student Programs in the Fiscal Year 1977-78	Number of People Employed in Government
Youth Hostels Program ¹	4
Student Community Service Program ¹	36
Youth Job Corps Program ²	2
Open House Canada Program	12
Canada Student Loan Program	71
Cultural Enrichment Support Program ³	4
Summer Language Bursary Program ⁴	2
Second Language Monitor Program
Official Language Fellowship Program
Travel Bursary Program
Total:	131

Notes

1. Conducted as parts of Summer Youth Employment Program co-ordinated by Employment and Immigration Canada.
2. Conducted in co-operation with co-ordinating department. Employment and Immigration.
3. A sub-program of Multiculturalism Program.
4. Sub-programs offered by Language Programs.

Senator Petten: I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Senator Haidasz: Honourable senators, I was on my feet intending to move my motion respecting a Joint Committee on Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms. However, if Her Honour the Speaker has already accepted the acting government leader's motion to adjourn, I will speak to my motion at the next sitting of the Senate.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 8 p.m.

The Thirtieth Parliament was dissolved by Proclamation of His Excellency the Governor General on March 26, 1979

ABBREVIATIONS

1r, 2r, 3r	=	First, second, third reading
amds	=	amendments
com	=	committee
div	=	division
m	=	motion
neg	=	negatived
ref	=	referred rep	=	report
r.a.	=	royal assent

Acts passed during the Session

Chapter		PUBLIC ACTS	Bill No.
Assented to October 18, 1978
1	Postal Services Continuation Act		C-8
Assented to October 24, 1978
2	Shipping Continuation Act		C-11
Assented to November 20, 1978
3	Old Age Security Act amendment		C-5
Assented to November 23, 1978
4	Borrowing Authority Act, 1978-79		C-7
Assented to December 12, 1978
5	Income Tax Act amendment to provide for a child tax credit, and Family Allowances Act, 1973 amendment		C-10
6	Appropriation Act No. 3, 1978-79		C-25
Assented to December 22, 1978
7	Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971 amendment		C-14
8	An Act to authorize the granting of an immediate annuity to the Honourable Mr. Justice Donald Raymond Morand		C-33
9	Canada Business Corporations Act amendment		S-5
10	Criminal Code Act amendment		C-34
Assented to March 8, 1979
11	Judges Act amendment, to amend an Act to amend the Judges Act and, to amend certain other Acts in respect of the reconstitution of the courts in New Brunswick, Alberta and Saskatchewan		C-43
12	Health Resources Fund Act amendment		C-2
Assented to March 15, 1979
13	Government Organization Act, 1979		C-35
14	Northwest Territories Act amendment		C-28
15	Shipping Conferences Exemption Act, 1979		S-6

Acts passed during the Session—Concluded

Chapter	PUBLIC ACTS—Concluded	Bill No.
	Assented to March 16, 1979
16	National Housing Act and the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act amendment and to make other related amendments	C-29
	Assented to March 26, 1979
17	Energy Supplies Emergency Act, 1979	C-42
18	Bank Act and Quebec Savings Banks Act amendment	C-49
	LOCAL AND PRIVATE ACTS
	Assented to December 22, 1978
19	J. H. Poitras & Son Ltd., an act to revive	S-8

Adams, Hon. Willie

- Energy Supplies Emergency bill C-42, 865
- Petro-Canada, 865
- Northwest Territories bill C-28, 735-6
- Increase in membership of Northwest Territories Council, 735
- Native cultures, 735

Address in reply to Speech from the Throne

- Consideration of Speech from the Throne, 4; termination date of debate, 8
- Motion for Address in reply, Hon. Pietro Rizzuto, 8-9; seconded, Hon. Florence Bird, 9-13; Address in reply adopted, 148

Speakers: Senators

- Barrow, A. Irvine, 123-7
- Bird, Florence B., 9-13
- Bonnell, M. Lorne, 113-16
- Bosa, Peter, 107-09
- Desruisseaux, Paul, 110-13
- Flynn, Jacques, 16-20
- Frith, Royce, 97
- Graham, B. Alasdair, 144-7
- Hicks, Henry D., 64-66
- Lamontagne, Maurice, 135-9
- Macdonald, John M., 142-4
- Marshall, Jack, 119-23
- Olson, H. A., 61-64
- Perrault, Raymond J., 42-48
- Rizzuto, Pietro, 8-9
- Rowe, Frederick W., 132-5
- Smith, G. I., 147-8
- Wagner, Claude, 58-61
- Walker, David, 90-96
- Greene, Hon. J. J. (Deceased Oct. 23/78)
- Speech prepared for delivery on Oct. 24/78, see appendix to Debates of Dec. 5/78

Administration of justice

- See* Justice Department, 89, 103, 155, 341-2

Aeronautics bill S-15. 1r, 894

Aging

- Government department, establishing of, 458, 485-90, 537-40, 640-1
- Elderly population, numbers and incomes, 487
- Federal-Provincial Grants and the Spending Power of Parliament* by P. E. Trudeau, quotation, 488
- Life expectancies, 486
- Pension legislation, 488-9
- Special Senate Committee, recommendations of, 486
- Task Force on Canadian Unity, report of, 485

Speakers: Senators

- Croll, David A., 458, 485-90
- Deschatelets, Jean-Paul, 640-1
- Marshall, Jack, 537-40

Agreements, treaties, conventions

- Income Tax Conventions bill S-2, 14, 103-04, 118
- Income Tax Conventions bill S-7, 165, 186-7, 240-2, 256-9, 293, 309, 322
- Safe Containers Convention bill S-3, 14, 130-1, 140-1, 150

Agriculture

- Beef imports from hoof and mouth disease areas, 274, 449
- Feed grain prices, 203, 237
- Government grain elevators, purchase of, 284, 348
- Grain, delivery to export positions, 449, 492
- International cooperation in marketing of grains, 209-14, 285-92

Agriculture—concl'd

- International wheat agreement, 554, 734
- Salmonella, infection by Manitoba cattlefeed, allegation of, 658-9
- Subsidy to millers of wheat, removal of, 319-20, 411-12
- Two-price system for wheat, subsidy to millers, bread prices, 281, 283-4, 296, 319-20, 411-12

Agriculture, Standing Senate Committee

- Agricultural and related industries, authority to make study of, 153, 285-92
- Beef industry, authority to make study of, 153
- Expenses, 165, see Journals of the Senate
- Expenses of committee members and research director, motion for, 375, agreed to, 380
- International cooperation in marketing of grains, authority to study problems, 209-14, 285-92
- Kent County Can Be Saved*, authority to inquire into implementation of committee recommendations, 153
- Meetings during Senate sittings, 553, 749-50
- Off-track betting, request to make study of, 469
- Terms of reference, 153, 209, 328

Air Canada

- AIRVELOP service, 450
- Applications for positions as stewards and stewardesses, 451, 463, 495
- Functions of Chairman and President, 385, 503-04
- London, England, terminus change from Heathrow to Gatwick, 717
- Moncton airport, telephone service, 676-7
- Reduced fare marketing program, 834
- Regulations issued by Canadian Transport Commission, 362
- Sale to private interests, 504, 541, 554, 592, 593

Alberta

- Energy, price agreement respecting crude oil, 25, 58, 102, 129-30, 244, 272, 294-5, 316

Amendments, observations or recommendations in or re committee reports

- Canada Business Corporations bill S-5, rep with amdts, 235-6, 277-9
- Canada Non-Profit Corporations bill S-4, rep with amdts, 234-5, 259
- Fugitive Offenders bill S-9, rep with amdts, 391-2
- Health Resources Fund bill C-2, rep without amdt but with recommendation, 668
- J.H. Poitras & Son Ltd. bill S-8, rep with amdts, 253, 267
- National Energy Board bill S-12, rep with amdts, 714-15, 755-7, 762-3
- Old Age Security bill C-5, rep without amdt but with recommendation re clause 2, 231
- Shipping Conferences Exemption 1979 bill S-6, rep with amdts, 491-2, 513-15

Appendixes

- Banks and Banking Law Revision, report on subject matter of Bill C-15, see appendix to Debates of Mar. 15/79
- B.C. Minister of Health, Dr. J. A. Dupont, letter re Health Resources Fund Act, 711
- Constitution of Canada, Special Senate Committee
- 1st report, see appendix pages 67-76
- "Draft Health Resources Fund Submissions on Hand as of November 4, 1978", 603
- Economy, the, Department of Finance press release and statement by the committee of the Privy Council, 742

Appendixes—concl'dEstimates

Supplementary (A) fiscal year ending Mar. 31/79, rep of com, 261-5

Supplementary (B) fiscal year ending Mar. 31/79, rep of com, 722-3, 727

Federal-Provincial Conference of First Ministers on the Constitution

"Best Effort" draft proposals with joint government input discussed by first ministers, 579-85

Communications (federal draft proposal discussed by first ministers), 586-91

Fisheries, catches by foreign countries, 631

Governor General

Address and Reply at installation of Rt. Hon. Edward Richard Schreyer, P.C., see appendix to Debates of Jan. 23/79

Greene, Hon. J. J., address prepared for Throne Speech debate, 311-14

Income tax, rep of Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee on subject matter of Bill C-37, see appendix to Debates of Mar. 13/79

Labour

Comparison of incidence of industrial disputes in major OECD countries (1970-76), 233

National Defence

Fighter aircraft, statement by Defence Minister, 331-2

North Atlantic Assembly

Texts adopted at Twenty-fourth Annual Session, Lisbon, Portugal, November 25 to 30, 1978, see appendix to Debates of Feb. 20/79

Northern Pipeline, Special Senate Committee

1st report, see appendix pages 329-30

Veterans Affairs

Canadian Pension Commission, 656

Appropriation bill No. 3 1978/79 C-25. 1r, 341; 2r, 346-7, 352-4; 3r, 354; r.a., 355

Argue, Hon. HazenAgriculture Committee

Agricultural and related industries, authority to make study of, 153

Beef industry, authority to make study of, 153

Expenses, 164, see Journals of the Senate

Expenses of committee members and research director, motion for, 375, agreed to, 380

International cooperation in marketing of grains, authority to study problems, 309-14, 328

Kent County Can Be Saved, authority to inquire into implementation of committee recommendations, 153

Terms of reference, 153, 209, 328

Energy Supplies Emergency bill C-42, 862-3

Environmental affairs

Closure of Regina weather station, 25, 26

Grain

Hopper cars, purchase of, 527, 685

Tie-up in shipments due to strike of engineers and deck officers in Great Lakes area, 16

Off-track betting, legalization of, 536, 537

Postal Services Continuation bill C-8, 29-30

Great Lakes shipping strike, lack of government action, 30

Industrial democracy, concept of, 30

Rules of the Senate

Suspension of Rules 44, 45 and 78, 400

Senate

Business, 891

Research and secretarial services for senators, 183

Argue, Hon. Hazen—concl'dShipping

St. Lawrence Seaway closing date, 202, 203

Shipping Continuation bill C-11, 80-81

Economic effects of strike action, 81

Extension of shipping season, 81

Term of collective agreement, 81

Transport

VIA Rail, proposed committee study, 644, 645

Asselin, Hon. Martial, P.C.Constitution of Canada

Impact of by-election results on amending legislation, 15

Reconstitution of Special Joint Committee, 155

Reintroduction of amending legislation, 450

Senate

Government intention re future of Senate, 172

Foreign affairs

Cossette-Trudels, kidnappers of UK trade commissioner, return to Canada, 307, 315, 350

Fugitive Offenders bill S-9, 297-9, 359, 363-4

Discretionary powers of minister, 298, 364

Internationally protected person, definition of, 364

Ruanda-Urundi, UN Commission, 298

Statement by Minister of Justice, 297

War Measures Act, implementation in 1970, 298, 364

Cossette-Trudel, 298

Judges (annuity to Hon. Mr. Justice Donald Raymond Morand) bill C-33, 388

McDonald Royal Commission

RCMP break-ins, permission of Solicitors General for, 89, 103

Off-track betting, legalization of, 508, 509-10, 536, 537

Postal Services Continuation bill C-8, 21-22, 27-29, 35-36

Post Office, disruption in service, 88, 96-97

Defiance of back-to-work legislation, 88, 110

Quebec

Study of sovereignty association by Senate committee, 181, 182

Rules of the Senate

Suspension of Rules 44, 45 and 78, 399, 402-03, 404, 405

Shipping Continuation bill C-11, 77, 78-80, 81, 83

Canadian Lake Carriers Assoc., 78

Continuing consultation mechanism, suggestion, 82

Economic effect of strike action, 79

Injunction proceedings, 80

Labour-government relations, 79

Right to strike, 79

Sports

NHL All-Star Team, defeat of in international competition, 527-8

NHL, proposed merger with WHA, 751-2

Request that Edmonton, Winnipeg and Quebec City be admitted, motion, 830

Task Force on Canadian Unity, 477

Atlantic provincesFisheries

Marine broadcasting, cut-back of, 25

Research laboratory, Halifax, proposed closing of, 25

Weather station, Gander, proposed closing of, 25

Austin, Hon. JackAgriculture

Government grain elevators, purchase of, 284, 384

International cooperation in marketing of grain, 291-2

British Columbia

Flood damage, assistance from Disaster Financial Assistance Program, 155

Austin, Hon. Jack—concl'd

Canadian National Railways, rumour re private sector takeover, 273, 463

Constitution of Canada, 1st report of Special Senate Committee, 366-74

Energy

National Energy Board report, 834

Nuclear fusion research project, proposed, 810

United States crude oil inventories, 557, 565

Foreign affairs

Canada-US relations, appearance of Secretary of State for External Affairs before committee during discussion of report, 274

Fisheries

Interim agreement between Canada and United States re halibut industry, 463, 495, 567

Israeli-Egyptian Peace Treaty, United Nations Peacekeeping Force, 894

United States Secretary of State visit to Canada, discussion agenda

Beaufort Sea-Dixon Entrance boundaries, 256, 282

Maritime boundaries Canada-United States, 256, 282, 463-4, 495

Northern Pipeline, 239, 267

Greene, Hon. J.J., the late, 152

Senate

NDP leader, remarks by, question of privilege, 555

Transportation

British Columbia Railway, recommendation of McKenzie Royal Commission to sell railway to CNR, 238, 357

Austria

Income Tax Conventions bill S-2, 14, 103-04, 118

Automotive industry

Reisman report on, 350, 494

Bank Act and Quebec Savings BanksSpeakers: Senators

Flynn, Jacques, 853, 856, 857

Goldenberg, H. Carl, 857

McIlraith, George J., 853, 854

Bank Act and Quebec Savings Banks bill C-49. 1r, 853; 2r, 853-4; 3r, 856-7; r.a., 893

Banking legislation

Committee authorized to study subject matter of Bill C-57 (Third Session), 100-01

Committee authorized to study subject matter of Bill C-15 before receipt of legislation, 152-3; rep of com, see appendix to Debates of Mar. 15/79

Banking, Trade and Commerce, Standing Senate Committee

Banking legislation, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-57 (Third Session), 100-01

Banks and Banking Law Revision, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-15, 152-3; rep of com, see appendix to Debates of Mar. 15/79

Banks and Banking Law Revision, authority to publish and distribute report during any period between sessions of Parliament, 683-4, 723-4

Conservation of energy supplies, authority to examine and report on subject matter of Bill C-42, 675-6

Excise tax, authority to study subject matter prior to receipt of Bill C-38, 475

Expenses, 180, see Journals of the Senate

Banking, Trade and Commerce, Standing Senate Committee—concl'd

Income tax, authority to study subject matter prior to receipt of Bill C-37, 475

Income tax, authority to publish and distribute report during any period between sessions of Parliament on subject matter of Bill C-37, 724, see appendix to Debates of Mar. 13/79

Income tax and family allowances, authority to study subject matter prior to receipt of Bill C-10, 165

Meetings during Senate sittings, 180, 200, 236, 254, 293, 306, 511, 553, 604, 658, 716

Reports

Banks and Banking Law Revision Act, 1978, bill C-15, report on subject matter, see appendix to Debates of Mar. 15/79

Canada Business Corporations bill S-5, rep with amends, 235-6, 277-9

Canada Non-Profit Corporations bill S-4, rep with amends, 234-5, 259

Income tax (amdt to statute law relating to income tax, to amend the Canada Pension Plan and to provide authority for the raising of funds), rep on subject matter of Bill C-37, 744-7, 748-9, see appendix to Debates of Mar. 13/79

Income Tax Conventions bill S-7, rep without amdt, 293

Income Tax, Family Allowances bill C-10, rep without amdt, 348

Statute Law (Metric Conversion) bill S-10, rep without amdt, 356

Terms of reference, 100, 101

Bankruptcy

Additional monies payable to wage-earner, 661-2

Consumer and commercial arrangements, 663

Insurance fund, establishment of, 661

International problem arising out of bankruptcy matters, 662

Liability of directors, 662-3

Ombudsman, 662

Sophisticated lender, 663-4

Wage-earner priority over secured creditors, 661, 664

Speakers: Senators

Bosa, Peter, 663, 664

Flynn, Jacques, 678, 736-7

Forsey, Eugene A., 664

Hayden, Salter A., 660-4, 755

Langlois, Léopold, 678

Bankruptcy 1979 bill S-14. 1r, 618; 2r, 660-4, 678, 736-7, 754-5; ref to com, 755

Barre, Mr. Raymond, Prime Minister of French Republic, and Mrs. Barre, visit to Canada, 553

Barrow, Hon. A. Irvine

Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 123-7

Constitution of Canada, 123, 126

Economic conditions, 123, 125-6

Estimates

Supplementary (A) year ending Mar. 31/79, 254; rep of com, 261-4, 270

Fisheries, 124-5

Capital investment, 125

Nova Scotia revenues from fishing industry, 125

Research laboratory, Halifax, closing of, 124-5

Government restraints, 124-5

Income Tax, Family Allowances bill C-10, 301-05, 337

Child benefit system

History of, 302

Reform of, 302

Indexed to cost of living, 302

Refundable tax credit, 302, 303, 304

Barrow, Hon. A. Irvine—concl'd

- Income Tax, Family Allowances bill C-10—concl'd
- Social Security for Canada, Marsh report on, 302
- Labour
 - Public Service strikes, 124
- National unity, 125
- Northern Pipeline, 1st report of committee, 474
- Regional Economic Expansion Dept., 125-6
- Transportation, 126
 - Air Canada, 126
 - Bay of Fundy ferry service, 126
 - Nova Scotia 126; container facility and international airport at Halifax, 126
 - User-pay policy, 126
- Tributes to colleagues and others, 123
- Unemployment, 123-4
- Youth training and labour-intensive initiatives, 124

Beaubien, Hon. L. P.

- Postal Services Continuation bill C-8, 38, 39

Beef

- Agricultural Stabilization Act, 620
- Beef production problems, 634-5
- Cost of living, effect of price of beef on, 619
- Hays Converters, 652
- Protection of Canadian markets from imports, 620
- Provision of Bill S-13, 616
- Self-sufficient industries, 635
- Signal price per pound, 616, 652
- Stabilization, need for, 651
- Tokyo Round, 620
- Trigger-pricing concept, 620
- Uncontrolled imports of beef, effects of, 615

Speakers: Senators

- Bosa, Peter, 636, 652
- Hays, Harry, 634-6
- Molgat, Gildas L., 636, 651-2
- Roblin, Duff, 619-21
- Sparrow, Herbert O., 615-17, 652-3
- Steuart, D. G., 617

Beef Import bill S-13. 1r, 561; 2r, 615-17, 619-31, 634-6, 651-3; ref to com, 653Beetz, Hon. Jean, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada

- Royal assent, 355, 796

Bélisle, Hon. Rhéal

- United Nations Thirty-third Meeting of General Assembly, 174-9

Bell Canada

- Disconnecting of subscribers' telephone, 381, 411
- Iran, ownership of controlling interest, 464, 494

Bell, Hon. Ann Elizabeth

- Air Canada
 - London, England, terminus change from Heathrow to Gatwick, 717
- Constitution of Canada, 1st report of Special Senate Committee, 520-2
- Governor General, 521-2
- Monarchy, the, 520-2
- Ottawa Editor, by Charles A. Bowman, 522
- Parliament, power of, 520
- Energy Supplies Emergency bill C-42, 852-3
- Federal-Provincial Conference, senators as observers, 468-9, 493
- Health Resources Fund bill C-2, 573, 693, 702, 704-05, 706

Benidickson, Hon. W. M., P.C.

- Agriculture
 - International cooperation in marketing of grains, 291
- Consumer and corporate affairs
 - Subsidy to millers of wheat, removal of, 319-20, 411-12
- Grain, hopper cars, purchase of, 527
- Judges (annuity to Hon. Mr. Justice Donald Raymond Morand) bill C-33, 387, 388, 389
- Unemployment Insurance bill C-14, 419, 420, 432-3

Bilingualism and biculturalism

- Bilingual education in provinces, cut in grants, 855
- Bilingual public servant bonus, 855-6
- Report of Commissioner of Official Languages, tabled, 561

Bills, general data

- Suspension of Rules 44, 45 and 78, 393-406, 809-10, 827-8

Bills, Numerically, Commons

- C-2 Health Resources Fund
- C-5 Old Age Security
- C-7 Borrowing Authority
- C-8 Postal Services Continuation
- C-10 Income Tax, Family Allowances
- C-11 Shipping Continuation
- C-14 Unemployment Insurance
- C-25 Appropriation No. 3 1978-79
- C-28 Northwest Territories
- C-29 National Housing
- C-33 Judges (annuity to Hon. Mr. Justice Donald Raymond Morand)
- C-34 Criminal Code (firearms acquisition certificates)
- C-35 Government Organization 1979
- C-42 Energy Supplies Emergency
- C-43 Judges Act and Certain Other Acts
- C-49 Bank Act and Quebec Savings Banks

Bills, Numerically, Senate

- S-1 Railways (pro forma)
- S-2 Income Tax Conventions
- S-3 Safe Containers Convention
- S-4 Canada Non-Profit Corporations
- S-5 Canada Business Corporations
- S-6 Shipping Conferences Exemption 1979
- S-7 Income Tax Conventions
- S-8 J. H. Poitras & Son Ltd.
- S-9 Fugitive Offenders
- S-10 Statute Law (Metric Conversion)
- S-11 Trademark 1979
- S-12 National Energy Board
- S-13 Beef Import
- S-14 Bankruptcy 1979
- S-15 Aeronautics

Bills, Private, Senate

- J. H. Poitras & Son Ltd. S-8. 1r, 180; 2r, 205; ref to com, 205; rep with amtds, 253, 267; 3r, 277; message from Commons that bill has been passed without amdt, 410; r.a., 446

Bills, Public, Commons

- Appropriation No. 3 1978-79 C-25. 1r, 341; 2r, 346-7, 352-4; 3r, 354; r.a., 355
- Bank Act and Quebec Savings Banks C-49. 1r, 853; 2r, 853-4; 3r, 856-7; r.a., 893
- Borrowing Authority C-7. 1r, 220; 2r, 239-40, 244-51; ref to com, 251-2; rep without amdt, 253; 3r, 253-4; r.a., 260

Bills, Public, Commons—concl'd

- Criminal Code (firearms acquisition certificates) C-34. 1r, 410; 2r, 410-11; 3r, 411; r.a., 446
- Energy Supplies Emergency C-42. 1r, 829; 2r, 835-53; ref to Committee of the Whole, 853; considered in Committee of the Whole, Hon. Joan Neiman in the Chair, Hon. Alastair William Gillespie, P.C., Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and Minister of State for Science and Technology taking part in debate, 857-89; rep without amdt, 889; 3r, on division, 889; r.a., 893
- Government Organization 1979 C-35. 1r, 732; 2r, 757-8, 763-9, 775-6; ref to Committee of the Whole, 776; considered in Committee of the Whole, Hon. Joan Neiman in the Chair, Hon. Roméo A. LeBlanc, P.C., Minister of Fisheries and the Environment taking part in the debate, 776-92, rep without amdt, 792; 3r, 792; r.a., 796
- Health Resources Fund C-2. 1r, 524; 2r, 568-74, 593-5, 636-9; ref to com, 639; rep without amdt but with recommendation, 668-75, m in amdt, 687, m in amdt neg on division, 703, m in amdt, 704, m in amdt neg on division, 709, main m agreed to on division, 709; 3r, 709; m that message to House of Commons contain recommendation, 709, m agreed to, 710, 712-13; r.a., 726
- Income Tax, Family Allowances C-10. 1r, 301; 2r, 301-06, 323-7, 334-7; ref to com, 337; rep without amdt, 348; 3r, 348; r.a., 355
- Judges Act and Certain Other Acts C-43. 1r, 657; 2r, 664-5; ref to com, 665; rep of com, 668; 3r, 710; r.a., 726
- Judges (annuity to Hon. Mr. Justice Donald Raymond Morand) C-33. 1r, 375; 2r, 386-90; 3r, 393; r.a., 446
- National Housing C-29. 1r, 744; 2r, 759-61, 792-6, 797-806, ref to Committee of the Whole, 800; considered in Committee of the Whole, Hon. Joan Neiman in the Chair, Hon. André Ouellet, P.C., Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Urban Affairs taking part in debate, 801-06, rep without amdt, 806; 3r, 806; r.a., 807
- Northwest Territories C-28. 1r, 725; 2r, 735-6, 753-4; 3r, 762; r.a., 762
- Old Age Security C-5. 1r, 214; 2r, 223-31; ref to com, 231; rep without amdt but with recommendation re clause 2, 231; 3r, 231; r.a., 232
- Postal Services Continuation C-8. 1r, 20-23; 2r, 26-31, 31-34; ref to Committee of the Whole, 34; considered in Committee of the Whole, Hon. Maurice Bourget in the Chair, Hon. André Ouellet, P.C., Minister of State for Urban Affairs and Acting Minister of Labour taking part in debate, 35-41, 48-53; rep without amdt, 53; 3r, 53; r.a., 54
- Shipping Continuation C-11. 1r, 77; 2r, 77-82; 3r, 83; r.a., 83
- Unemployment Insurance C-14. 1r, 421; 2r, 421-3, m for adjournment of debate, 423, neg, 423-4, 2r cont'd, 424-40; 3r, 440-4; r.a., 446

Bills, Public, Senate

- Aeronautics S-15. 1r, 894
- Bankruptcy S-14. 1r, 618; 2r, 660-4, 678, 736-7, 754-5; ref to com, 755
- Beef Import S-13. 1r, 561; 2r, 615-17, 619-21, 634-6, 651-3; ref to com, 653
- Canada Business Corporations S-5. 1r, 14; 2r, 131-2, 141; ref to com, 141; rep with amdt, 235-6, 277-9; 3r, 279; message from Commons that bill has been passed without amdt, 375; r.a., 446
- Canada Non-Profit Corporations S-4. 1r, 14; 2r, 150-1; ref to com, 151; rep with amdt, 234-5, adopted, 259; 3r, 259
- Fugitive Offenders S-9. 1r, 200; 2r, 267-70, 297-300; ref to com, 300; rep with amdt, 333-4, 343; m for 3r, 358, m in amdt, 358, 363-6, m in amdt ref to com, 376; rep with amdt, 391-2; 3r, 392

Bills, Public, Senate—concl'd

- Income Tax Conventions S-2. 1r, 14; 2r, 103-04; 3r, 118
- Income Tax Conventions S-7. 1r, 165; 2r, 186-7, 240-2, 256-9; ref to com, 259; rep without amdt, 293; m for 3r, 309, 320-2; 3r, 322
- National Energy Board S-12. 1r, 541; 2r, 595-602, 611-12; ref to com, 612-15; rep with amdt, 714-15, 755-7, 762-3; 3r, 763
- Railways S-1 (pro forma). 1r, 4
- Safe Containers Convention S-3. 1r, 14; 2r, 130-1, 140-1; 3r, 150
- Shipping Conferences Exemption S-6. 1r, 165; 2r, 184-6, 252; ref to com, 252; rep with amdt, 491-2; m for adoption, 513-15, m adopted, 515; 3r, 528-9; message from Commons that bill passed without amdt, 732; r.a., 796
- Statute Law (Metric Conversion) S-10. 1r, 293; 2r, 309-10, 343-5; ref to com, 345; rep without amdt, 356; 3r, 366
- Trademark 1979 S-11. 1r, 501; 2r, 529-33; Order stands, 660, 820, 835

Bird, Hon. Florence B.

- Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 9-13
- Abortion, 11
- Computer and telecommunication technology, motion to appoint special committee, 724-5
- Clyne Committee, 724-5
- Constitution of Canada
- Charter of rights and freedoms, 11
 - Distribution of powers, 10-11
 - Evolutionary concept of the constitutional process, 10; 'persons' case cited, 10
 - Federal-provincial conferences on, 10
- Economic restraints of government, 9
- Income Tax, Family Allowances bill C-10, 323-5
- Discriminating aspect of bill, 324
 - "Integration of Social Program Payments into the Income Tax System," feasibility study, 323
 - Quebec Civil Code, 324
 - Redistribution of funds, 324
 - Refundable tax credit, 323, 324
 - "Une femme chez les hommes", memoirs of Hon. Thérèse Casgrain, 324
- National and individual attitudes and outlook, 11-12
- National unity, 11
- Social services, 9-10
- Family allowances, 10
 - Guaranteed annual income, 10
 - Means test, 10
 - Old age security, 9-10
- Training programs for youth and others in need of employment, 11
- Unemployment insurance, 11
- Unemployment Insurance bill C-14, 408-09
- Action Committee of Women, 409
 - Advisory Council on the Status of Women, 408-09
- Bonnell, Hon. M. Lorne
- Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 11-16
- Constitution of Canada, 114
- Monarchy, the, 114
- Federal-provincial relations, 114
- Prince Edward Island, 114
- Greene, Hon. J.J., P.C., the late, 113
- Health Resources Fund bill C-2, 668, 669, 671, 673, 674-5, 677, 678, 687-8, 701
- Federal restraint policy, 688
- Health, Welfare and Science Committee
- Childhood experiences as causes of criminal behaviour, com authorized to make study of, 101
 - Expenses, 149, see Journals of the Senate
 - Health Resources Fund bill C-2, proceedings of committee re, 684

Bonnell, Hon. M. Lorne—concl'd

Health, Welfare and Science Committee—concl'd

Terms of reference, 101

Unemployment insurance, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-14, 281

Indian affairs

Meeting between Chiefs from Atlantic provinces and federal ministers, 362

International Year of the Child, proclamation of General Assembly of the United Nations, 153-4

Inter-Parliamentary Union Conference, Bonn, West Germany, 167-9

Canadian delegation, members, 168

Macnaughton, Hon. Alan A., P.C., 113

Meir, Golda, former Prime Minister of Israel, the late, 357-8

Post Office strikes, 115

Provincial Liberal leadership convention, press report re, question of privilege, 15

Queen Elizabeth II, visit to Newfoundland and other parts of Canada, 113

Rules of the Senate

Suspension of Rules 44, 45 and 78, 400-02

Senate

Role of, 115-16

Social policies, 114-15

Family allowance, 114-15

OAS, 114

Sports

Canada Winter Games, Brandon, Manitoba, 740, 741

Unemployment Insurance bill C-14, 407-08, 421

Health, Welfare and Science Committee, representations, 407

Borrowing Authority bill C-7. 1r, 220; 2r, 239-40, 244-51; ref to com, 251-2; rep without amdt, 253; 3r, 253-4; r.a., 260Bosa, Hon. Peter

Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 107-09

Agriculture

Grain prices, 290, 291

Automotive industry, Reisman report on, 350, 494

Bankruptcy 1979 bill S-14, 663, 664

Beef Import bill S-13, 636, 652

Borrowing Authority bill C-7, 249

Canadian Broadcasting Corporation

Telecast of World Cup Soccer Games, 451

Constitution of Canada

House of the Federation, proposal for, 130

Senate reform

Proportional representation in appointments, 107-08

Role of Senate, 107

Term of office, 108

Consumer and Corporate Affairs

Food industry, discounting and allowances in, 557

Manufactured goods, increase in prices, 296

Economy, the

Food prices, increase in, 542

Energy

United States crude oil inventories, 557, 565

Energy Supplies Emergency bill C-42, 864, 865

Estimates year ending Mar. 31/79, Supplementary (B), 737, 739-40

Foreign affairs

China and Vietnam, Canadian policy respecting hostilities, 618, 646, 659, 734

Iran

Oil imports to eastern Canada, effect of political situation on, 357, 385, 393

Safety of Canadians in, 342, 492-3

Bosa, Hon. Peter—concl'd

Health and Welfare

Medicare program, 817-18

Health Resources Fund bill C-2, 573-4

Income tax

Deduction for small businesses, 362

Income tax, report of committee on subject matter of Bill C-37, 749

Industry, Trade and Commerce

Canada and European Economic Community, agreement, 626-30

Industrial mission to Italy, 626-30

Pandolfi plan, 628

Trade between Canada and Italy, 630

France, trade with, 719-20

West Germany, exports and imports, 720-1

Israeli-Egyptian peace treaty, signing of, 856

Meir, Golda, Prime Minister of Israel, the late, 343

National Energy Board bill S-12, 598-9

National unity, 108-09

Ethnic differences, 109

Quebec separatists, 108-09

Newfoundland, seal hunt, adverse publicity, 750

North Atlantic Assembly, Twenty-fourth Annual Session, Lisbon, Portugal, 578

Postal Services Continuation bill C-8, 50, 51

Post Office, disruption in service, 87

Public Service

Employment of immigrants, 829

Regulations and other Statutory Instruments Committee, 4th report, 667

Senate

Informational publications, circulation of, 342

Sports

Canada Winter Games, Brandon, Manitoba, 680

Statistics Canada

Cost-of-living index, 566, 593, 605

Officials appearing before Senate committee, 605

Senate proceedings, media report of, 609

Task Force on Canadian Unity

Distribution of report, 567

Unemployment Insurance bill C-14, 417

Bourget, Hon. Maurice, P.C.

Felicitations on return to chamber, 450

Income tax, report of committee on subject matter of Bill C-37, 749

Postal Services Continuation bill C-8 (Chairman, Committee of the Whole), 35-41, 49-53

Speaker pro tem, 732, 744, 762, 774, 807British Columbia

Fisheries

Halibut industry, Canada-United States interim agreement, 463-4

Flood damage, assistance from Disaster Financial Assistance Program, 155

Health Resources Fund bill C-2, 690-1

British Columbia's Constitutional Proposals, Paper No. 3, Reform of the Canadian Senate, 690-1

McKenzie Royal Commission recommendation to sell B.C. Railway to CNR, 238

Buckwold, Hon. Sidney L.

Agriculture

Government grain elevators, purchase of, 284, 384

Wheat prices, 283

Consumer and Corporate Affairs

Bread, increase in prices and subsidy to consumers, 297

Government annuities, increase in interest rate, 501, 648

Buckwold, Hon. Sidney L.—concl'd

- Parliament
 - Hansard*, official report, price increase, 717, 833-4
- Postal Services Continuation bill C-8, 22, 30-31
 - Employer-Employee Relations in the Public Service, Special Joint Committee, 30-31
- Sports
 - Canada Winter Games, legacy to the host community, 680
 - NHL, request that Edmonton, Winnipeg and Quebec City be admitted to, motion proposed, 833
- Student loans, newspaper article re defaulting of repayments, 238, 448-9
- Transport
 - VIA Rail, question of privilege, 644

Budget Speech

- Accommodation for senators in Senate gallery of House of Commons, 189

Business corporations

- Canada Business Corporations bill S-5, 14, 131-2, 141, 235-6, 277-9, 375, 446

Canada business corporations

- Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee, work of, re, 132
- French version of bill, corrections to, 131, 141
- History of legislation, 131
- Speakers: Senators
 - Cook, Eric, 131-2
 - Walker, David, 141

- Canada Business Corporations amendment bill S-5. 1r, 14; 2r, 131-2, 141; ref to com, 141; rep with amds, 235-6, 277-9; 3r, 279; message from Commons that bill has been passed without amdt, 375; r.a., 446

Canada Elections Act

- Change in writ of elections, 157, 244

Canada Labour Code

- Commitment by government leader respecting representations before Senate committee, 180-1, 238, 283, 351-2

Canada non-profit corporations

- History of legislation, 150
- Senate amendments incorporated, 150
- Speakers: Senators
 - Grosart, Allister, 151, 259
 - Hayden, Salter A., 234-5, 259
 - McIlraith, George J., 150, 151
 - Walker, David, 151

- Canada Non-Profit Corporations bill S-4. 1r, 14; 2r, 150-1; ref to com, 151; rep with amds, 234-5, 259; 3r, 259

Canada-United States relations

- Canada's Trade Relations with United States, rep of Foreign Affairs Committee, 189-91, 380
- Energy
 - United States crude oil inventories, 557
- Halibut fishing industry, interim agreement re, 463-4, 495

Canadian Broadcasting Corporation

- Canada Winter Games, national television coverage of, 541, 678-81, 717, 740-1
- French network broadcast, question of privilege, 457
- Ombudsman* program, budget for, 543
- Telecast of World Cup Soccer Games, 451

Canadian National Railways

- Rumour re private sector takeover, 273, 463

Canadian textile industry

- Speaker: Hon. Paul Desruisseaux, 195-9

China

- Canadian policy respecting hostilities between China and Vietnam, 618, 646, 659, 734

Commissions, Royal

- McDonald Royal Commission of Inquiry into Certain Activities of the RCMP (Chairman, David C. McDonald), 89, 103
- Payment to solicitors appearing before commission, 155, 341-2

Committee of Selection

- See* Selection Committee

Committee of the Whole

- Energy Supplies Emergency 1979 bill C-42, Hon. Joan Neiman in the Chair, Hon. Alastair William Gillespie, P.C., Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and Minister of State for Science and Technology participating, 857-89
- Government Organization 1979 bill C-35, Hon. Joan Neiman in the Chair, Hon. Roméo A. LeBlanc, P.C., Minister of Fisheries and the Environment participating, 776-92
- National Housing bill C-29, Hon. Joan Neiman in the Chair, Hon. André Ouellet, P.C., Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Urban Affairs participating, 800-06
- Postal Services Continuation bill C-8, Hon. Maurice Bourget in the Chair, Hon. André Ouellet, P.C., Minister of State for Urban Affairs and Acting Minister of Labour participating, 20-23, 26-34, 35-41, 48-53, 54

Committees, general data

- Authority to examine subject matter of Bill C-9, 458-62
- Budgets of committees, see Journals of the Senate
- Committee studies of subject matter of bill as result of 'Hayden formula', 101
- Expenses of committee members and research director, motion for, 375, motion agreed to, 380
- Members, changes during session, see Journals of the Senate
- Work of Senate committees and effects of, 46-47
 - Agriculture, 47
 - Banking, Trade and Commerce, 47
 - Constitution of Canada, Joint and Senate Special, 47
 - Foreign Affairs, 47
 - National Finance, 46, 47
 - Retirement Age Policies, 47

Committees, Joint, Standing

- Library of Parliament
- Printing of Parliament
- Regulations and other Statutory Instruments
- Restaurant of Parliament

Committees, Senate, Special

- Constitution of Canada
- Northern Pipeline
- Retirement Age Policies

Committees, Senate, Standing

- Agriculture
- Banking, Trade and Commerce
- Foreign Affairs
- Health, Welfare and Science
- Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration
- Legal and Constitutional Affairs

Committees, Senate, Standing—concl'd

- National Finance
- Orders and Customs of the Senate and Privileges of Parliament (Committee of Privileges)
- Rules and Orders
- Transport and Communications

Computer and Telecommunication Technology

- Motion to appoint special committee, 724-5
- Clyne Committee, 724-5

Conferences

- Federal-Provincial Conference of First Ministers, 468-9, 477, 493, 496
- Inter-Parliamentary Union, Bonn, West Germany, 167-9, 205-09, 338-9
- United Nations Thirty-third Meeting of General Assembly, 174-9

Connolly, Hon. John J., P.C.

- Health Resources Fund bill C-2, 568
- Macnaughton, Hon. Alan A., P.C., tributes on occasion of retirement, 128
- Postal Services Continuation bill C-8, 40-41
 - Essential services, right to strike, 41
 - Mediator-arbitrator, appointment of, 40
- Unemployment Insurance bill C-14, 419-20
- "Adjournment closure", 419

Constitution of Canada

- Bill to abolish the Senate, effect of by-election on, 140
- Charter of human rights and freedoms, 11
- Distribution of powers, 10-11
- Evolutionary concept of the constitutional process, 10, 62; 'persons' case cited, 10
- Federal-provincial conferences on, 10
- House of the Federation, proposal for, 130
- Impact of by-election results on amending legislation, 15
- Monarchy, the, 114, 142
 - Free Press* article re, 142
- Quebec referendum, 18
- Reintroduction of amending legislation, 450
- Senate
 - Government intention re future of Senate, 154, 167, 172-3
 - Reform of, 9, 18-19, 45, 107-08
 - Excerpt from speech of Rt. Hon. John Diefenbaker, 45-46
 - House of the Federation, 18-19
 - Proportional representation in appointments, 107-08
 - Regional appointments of senators with significant background and experience, 47
 - Role of, 115-16
 - Formulating legislation and committee work, 46, 47
 - Role of the Monarchy and the Governor General, 45, 114
 - Term of office, 108
 - Time for Action: Toward the Renewal of the Canadian Federation*, 17, 18

Speakers: Senators

- Asselin, Martial, 15, 155, 172-3
- Barrow, A. Irvine, 123, 126
- Bird, Florence B., 10-11
- Bosa, Peter, 107-08, 130
- Flynn, Jacques, 17-18, 154, 167, 172-3
- Grosart, Allister, 172
- Marshall, Jack, 140
- Olson, H. A., 61-62
- Perrault, Raymond J., 15, 45-47, 130, 140, 154, 155, 167, 172, 173, 341
- Rowe, Frederick W., 133-5

Constitution of Canada, Special Joint Committee

- Reconstitution of, 155, 341

Constitution of Canada, Special Senate Committee

- Appointment, 5
- Budget tabled, 491, see Journals of the Senate
- Meetings during sittings of the Senate, 48, 348
- Members, 5
- Reports
 - 1st report, 55, 67-76, 104-07, 158-64, 192-5, 366-74, 452-5, 464-7, 484-5, 496-500, 520-2, 557-60
 - Amending formula, 68
 - Bill of Rights, entrenchment, 452-4
 - Definition of, 453
 - Charter of human rights and freedoms, 105
 - Documents, official, access to, 467
 - Dred Scott* decision (U.S.), 454
 - Drybones* case (Canada), 453
 - Fulton formula, 558
 - Fulton-Favreau formula, 558
 - Governor General, 160-1
 - Ministerial power, 161-2
 - Monarchy, the, 104, 160
 - Prime Minister, forming of new administration after defeat in Commons, 161
 - Process of constitutional reform, 67-68
 - Referendums and questions relating to the Constitution, 458-62
 - Schreyer, Rt. Hon. Edward Richard, 464
 - Senate
 - Absenteeism of senators, 195
 - Appointments, method of, 105-06, 158-9, 192, 193, 195
 - Criticisms by media, MPs and others, 192
 - Reform of
 - House of the Federation, 130, 164-6, 464-7
 - Internal reform suggested, 159, 194-5
 - Role of, 106, 107, 192
 - Role of the Monarchy and the Governor General, 465
 - Regional impact of federal legislation, suggestion for Senate committee, 106
 - Sick leave, retirement age, 106, 195
 - Special Senate Committee to investigate and report on role of Senate, 194
 - Statement of Chairman, Senator Lang, 195
 - Statements of Sir John A. Macdonald, Senator Arthur Roebuck, Senator Paul Martin and Rt. Hon. Arthur Meighen, 193, 195
 - Specific observations on Bill C-60
 - Charter of human rights and freedoms, 68-69
 - Drafting style, 68
 - Monarchy, Governor General, Cabinet, 69-70
 - Regional disparities, 73
 - Second chamber
 - House of the Federation, distribution of seats among political parties, 72
 - Statement of aims, 68
 - Supreme Court of Canada, 73-76
 - Civil law decisions rendered by Supreme Court (1967/78), 76
 - Witnesses who appeared before committee, 75
 - Suspensive veto of upper house, 106, 162-4, 195
 - Measure of special linguistic significance, 163-4
 - Task Force on Canadian Unity, 480-4, 485, 496-500, 558, 559
 - Council of the Federation, proposed, 482-4
 - Montreal Gazette editorial, 497-8
 - Unilateral amendment, 467
 - Terms of reference, 5

Constitution of Canada, Special Senate Committee—concl'd

See appendix pages 67-76

Speakers: Senators

Austin, Jack, 366-74
 Bell, Ann Elizabeth, 520-2
 Desruisseaux, Paul, 464-7
 Flynn, Jacques, 484-5
 Forsey, Eugene A., 158-64
 Godfrey, John Morrow, 452-5
 Lamontagne, Maurice, 480-4, 485
 Marchand, Jean, 496-500
 Molson, Hartland de M., 192-5
 Robichaud, Louis J., 557-60
 Smith, G.I., 485
 Stanbury, Richard J., 55, 67-76, 104-07

Consumer and corporate affairs

Beef imports from hoof and mouth disease areas, 274, 449
 Bread, increase in prices and subsidy to consumers, 297
 Chartered banks, increase in profits, 296
 Food industry, discounting and allowances in, 557
 Manufactured goods, increase in prices, 296
 Subsidy to millers of wheat, removal of, 319-20, 411-12

Conventions

Income Tax Conventions bill S-2, 14, 103-04, 118
 Income Tax Conventions bill S-7, 165, 186-7, 240-2, 256-9, 293, 309, 322
 Safe Containers Convention bill S-3, 14, 130-1, 140-1, 150

Cook, Hon. Eric

Canada Business Corporations bill S-5, 131-2
 French version of bill, corrections to, 131
 History of legislation, 131
 Work of Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee re, 131-2
 Fugitive Offenders bill S-9, 376

Corporations

Canada Business Corporations bill S-5, 14, 131-2, 141, 235-6, 277-9, 446
 Canada Non-Profit Corporations bill S-4, 14, 150-1, 234-5, 259

Crime

Childhood experiences as causes of criminal behaviour, 101
 Fugitive Offenders bill S-9, 200, 267-70, 297-300, 333-4, 343, 358, 363-6, 376, 391-2
 Mass murder and suicide at the commune of the People's Temple, Jonestown, Guyana, 238, 243, 266-7

Criminal Code (firearms acquisition certificates) bill C-34. 1r, 410; 2r, 410-11; 3r, 411; r.a., 446

Croll, Hon. David A.

Aging, government department, establishing of, notice of inquiry, 458, 485-90
 Elderly population, numbers and incomes, 487
Federal-Provincial Grants and the Spending Power of Parliament, by P. E. Trudeau, 488
 Life expectancies, 486
 Pension legislation, 488-9
 Special Senate Committee, recommendations of, 486
 Task Force on Canadian Unity, report of, 485
 Greene, Hon. J. J., P.C., the late, 84-85
 Address prepared for Throne Speech debate printed as appendix to Debates of Dec. 5/78, 301, 311-14

Croll, Hon. David A.—concl'd

Income Tax, Family Allowances bill C-10, 325-7
 Negative income tax system, 325
 Senate committee's contribution of value to Family Allowance Program, 325
 Poverty Line Update—1977, 326
 Social service system, 325
 Old Age Security bill C-5, 226-9
 Background of old age security payments, 227
 Divorced, diseased, disabled and deserted persons, needs of, 229
Integration of Social Payments into the Income Tax System, budget paper, 229
 Power available to elderly persons, 228-9
 Research and recommendations of Senate Committee on Aging and on Poverty, 227-8, 229
 War veterans, 227, 228
 Postal Services Continuation bill C-8, 33
 Senate, reasons for not considering bill in previous sitting, 33
 Retirement Age Policies Committee
 Expenses, 180, see Journals of the Senate
 Reports
 Quorum of committee, 129
 Senate
 Criticisms by Commons members of Senate handling of Bill C-5, 219-20
 Printing errors in official records, 356-7, 384

Culliton, Hon. E. M., Chief Justice of Saskatchewan and Mrs Culliton, visit of, 657

Deaths

Bourget, Hon. Maurice P.C. (Mar. 29/79)
 Greene, Hon. J. J., P.C. (Oct. 23/78), 77, 83-86

Denis, Hon. Azellus, P.C.

Parliament
 Lapel pins, distribution to members of House of Commons, 751
 Post Office, disruption in service, 88
 Intimidation of workers defying picket lines, 88
 Senate
 Emergency sittings, notice to senators, 87
 Order paper, questions on, 566
 Reform, suggestions by senators, 363

Deschatelets, Hon. Jean-Paul, P.C.

Aging, government department, establishing of, 640-1
 Postal Services Continuation bill C-8, 52
 Post Office, disruption in service, 103
 Mediator, terms of reference for, 103

Deschênes, Hon. Jules, Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Quebec, visit of, 682

Desruisseaux, Hon. Paul

Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 107-09
 Canadian textile industry, 195-9
 Constitution of Canada, 1st report of Special Senate Committee, 464-7
 Documents, official, access to, 467
 Governor General, role of, 465
 House of the Federation, proposed functions of, 465-7
 Ryan, Claude, excerpt from speech, 467
 Senate, renaming of, 467
 Unilateral amendment, 467
 Economic conditions and prospects, 111-12
 Task forces on, 111
 Foreign aid, 112
 Government expenditures, 112-13
 Greene, Hon. J. J., P.C., the late, 110

Desruisseaux, Hon. Paul—concl'd

- Léger, Rt. Hon. Jules and Madam Léger, tribute to, 464
- Security legislation, 111-12
- Schreyer, Rt. Hon. Edward Richard and Mrs. Schreyer, congratulations to, 464
- Sports
 - Canada Winter Games, Brandon, Manitoba, 680-1

Dickson, Hon. Robert G. B., Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada

- Royal assent, 260

Documents tabled, see Journals of the SenateEconomic conditions and prospects, 9, 19, 42-44, 47-48, 59, 62-64, 65-66, 94, 95, 97, 111-13, 123, 125-6, 135-9, 143-4

- Austerity measures, 62
- Business productivity, research and development, 44
- Consumer behaviour, 137
- Dollar devaluation, 63, 95
- Excerpt from report of Prof. Paul McCracken committee, 135
- Foreign aid, 112
- Foreign investment and effect of, 64; borrowings from US, 63-64
- Government accomplishments, 97
- Government expenditures, 19, 94, 112-13
- Government restraints, 9, 43-44, 48, 124-5
- GNP, 42, 94
- Income, increase in Canadian average, 42
- Inflation, 47-48
- International trade and investments, 43
- Job creation, 42, 43
- Monetary crisis, 138
- Organization of Economic Co-operation and Development, 42, 43
- Other countries, 136; US economic study, 136
- Population growth, 136
- Primary industries, 136
- Public sector investments, reduction in, 137
- Restraints in productive areas, 65; fisheries research in Halifax, comments from scientists, 65-66
- Security legislation, 111-12
- Social climate, 137-8; The Balkanization of America, 137-8
- Strikes and man-days lost, 94
- Task forces on, 112
- Tax and social security deductions, 43; other countries, 43
- Taxes, loans, interest, 94
- Technological innovations, 136
- Third World, competition from, 137
- Tourism, 42-43
- Unemployment, 94, 95, 143-4
 - Unemployment insurance, 95

Economic Council of Canada

- Quebec sovereignty association concept, statement from ECC re, 181-2

Economy, the

- Canadian balance of payments, 686, 717-19
- Food prices, increase in, 542, 543
- Foreign exchange controls, 476-7
- Foreign exchange reserves, 495, 502-03
 - Canada's official international reserves, January 31, 1979, statement, 503
- National Commission on Inflation, terms of reference and reporting procedures, 678, 734-5

Egypt

- Egypt-Israel peace treaty, 154, 266
 - Signing of, 856
- United Nations Peacekeeping Force, 894

Elections

- See Canada Elections Act, 157, 244

Emergency legislation

- Notice to senators re emergency sittings, 86-87
- Postal Services Continuation bill C-8, 20-23, 26-34, 35-41, 48-53, 54
- Shipping Continuation bill C-11, 77-82, 83

Employment and Immigration

- Employment Tax Credit Program, 568

Energy

- Canada-Newfoundland Field Exploration Program, 308
- Conservation of energy supplies, 675-6
- Crude oil, price agreement between Alberta and federal government, 25, 58, 102, 129-30, 244, 272, 294-5, 316
 - Elements examined in discussions on expanding gas markets in Canada, 316
- Federal government, power to act unilaterally, 605-06, 633
- Fuel for motor vehicles, 819
- Gas pipeline from Montreal to points east, extension of, 542, 565-6
- International Energy Agency, 554, 557, 565, 607-09, 633, 634, 684, 686, 762, 838, 839
 - Supply of oil in Atlantic Canada, 686, 762
- International oil supply, statement by minister, 555-6
- National Energy Board report, 834
- Newfoundland, power potential of Lower Churchill Falls, 554, 592-3
- Northern Pipeline, major change in procurement policy, 818, 834
- Nova Scotia
 - Coal industry, 144-5; Donkin bloc, 144-5
 - Fundy tidal power, 145
- Nuclear fusion research project, proposed, 810
- Oil and gas exploration permits for the Atlantic region, 648-50
- Strategic oil reserves, 567-8, 633, 684
- Supply of crude oil to Imperial Oil refineries in Canada, 542, 554, 556-7, 565
- United States, crude oil inventories, 557, 565

Energy, Mines and Resources

- Canada-Newfoundland Field Exploration Program, 308

Energy supplies

- Alternative energy sources, 860
- Combines Investigation Act, 837, 886, 887
- Consultation with provinces prior to introduction of Bill C-42, 604, 605, 632-4, 684-5
- Deprivation of property, 884, 885
- Emergency oil sharing system, 836, 838
- Energy Supplies Allocation Board, 837, 873
- Gull Island project, 860, 861, 862
- International Energy Agency, 838, 839
- International energy program, 836
- Lower Churchill Development Corporation, 860, 861, 862
- Mandatory allocation program, 837, 838, 840, 866, 867
- Maritime Energy Corporation, 860-1, 862, 863, 864, 865
- Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, 836
- Petro-Canada, 862, 864, 865, 870
- Rationing program, 837, 838, 842
- Seven per cent trigger point, 876
- Shortages east of the Ottawa Valley, 858

Speakers: Senators

- Adams, Willie, 865
- Argue, Hazen, 862-3

Energy supplies—*concl'dSpeakers: Senators—*concl'd

- Bell, Ann Elizabeth, 852-3
 Bosa, Peter, 864, 865
 Flynn, Jacques, 850, 858, 859, 869, 874, 881, 882, 883, 884, 885-6, 889
 Forsey, Eugene A., 851-2, 866-7, 872, 873, 882, 883, 884, 887
 Grosart, Allister, 875-6
 Macdonald, John M., 886
 Marshall, Jack, 860, 861, 862
 McDonald, A. Hamilton, 835-8, 847-8, 849-50, 853
 Neiman, Joan, 857, 858, 866, 869, 870, 871, 872, 874, 875, 877, 881, 882, 883, 884, 885, 886, 888, 889 (Chairman, Committee of the Whole)
 Olson, H. A., 850-1
 Perrault, Raymond J., 844, 845, 889
 Phillips, Orville H., 837, 838, 843-7, 848, 849, 858, 860, 861-2, 869, 870, 871, 877, 878, 879, 880, 881, 882
 Riley, Daniel, 862
 Roblin, Duff, 838-43, 857, 858, 868, 869, 871-2, 873, 874, 877, 879, 880, 882-3, 884-5, 886, 887, 888
 Smith, G. I., 844, 848-9, 850, 858, 861, 863, 864, 870, 871, 873-4, 887, 888
 Thompson, Andrew, 857, 858, 864, 867-8
 Williams, Guy, 866
 also
 Gillespie, Hon. Alastair William, P.C., Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and Minister of State for Science and Technology, 857-61, 862, 863-4, 865-6, 867, 868, 869, 870, 871, 873, 874, 876, 877-8, 879-81, 882, 884, 886, 887-8

Energy Supplies Emergency bill C-42. 1r, 829; 2r, 835-53; ref to Committee of the Whole, 853; considered in Committee of the Whole, Hon. Joan Neiman in the Chair, Hon. Alastair William Gillespie, P.C., Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and Minister of State for Science and Technology participating, 857-89; rep without amdt, 889; 3r, on division, 889; r.a., 893

Environmental affairs

- Closure of Newfoundland and Regina weather stations, 25-26, 89, 222-3
 Oil tanker spills, protection against, 809, 818-20

Estimates

- Capital expenditures, 723
 Dollars items, 723, 738
 Federal government spending, effect on inflation, 737
 Grants and contributions, 723, 739
 Objects of expenditure, 739
 Recommendations of National Finance Committee, 738
 Servicing of national debt, 737, 738
 Shortfalls, 738
 Writing-off of bad debts, 723

Estimates referred to National Finance Committee

- Year ending Mar. 31/79, 171
 Supplementary (A), 171; rep of com, 254, 261-5, 270, 279-80
 Year ending Mar. 31/79, 657
 Supplementary (B), 657; rep of com, 715-16, 722-3, 737-40

Everett, Hon. Douglas D.

- Estimates year ending Mar. 31/79, Supplementary (B), ref to com, 657; rep of com, 715, 716, 722-3
 Capital expenditures, 723
 Dollar items, 723
 Grants and contributions, 723
 Writing-off of bad debts, 723

Everett, Hon. Douglas D.—*concl'dNational Finance Committee

- Estimates year ending Mar. 31/79, Supplementary (A), 171
 Estimates year ending Mar. 31/79, Supplementary (B), ref to com, 657; rep of com, 715, 716, 722-3
 Expenses, 140, see Journals of the Senate
 Regional Economic Expansion, authority to examine and report on estimates of dept., 149
 Reports
 Estimates year ending Mar. 31/79, Supplementary (B), 715, 716, 722-3
 Borrowing Authority bill C-7, rep without amdt, 253
 Terms of reference, 149

Sports

- NHL, request that Edmonton, Winnipeg and Quebec City be admitted to, proposed motion, 831

External Affairs

See Foreign affairs

Family allowances

- Income Tax, Family Allowances bill C-10, 301-06, 323-7, 334-7
See Income tax and family allowances

Federal-Provincial Conference of First Ministers, 468-9, 477, 493, 496, 512, 542, 563-4

- Equalization formula, 512, 563
 Jurisdiction over family law, 512, 563-4
 Natural resources revenue, 542, 563
 Patriation of the Constitution, 512, 562-3

Federal-provincial relations, 114

Prince Edward Island, 114

Felicitations

- Bourget, Hon. Maurice, P.C., 450
 Léger, Rt. Hon. Jules and Madam Léger, 464
 Macnaughton, Hon. Alan A., P.C., 90-91, 113, 123, 128
 Paquette, Alcide, Assistant Clerk of the Senate, 456-7
 Pope John Paul II, His Holiness, election of, 24
 Schreyer, Rt. Hon. Edward Richard and Mrs. Schreyer, 464

Firearms

See Criminal Code bill C-34, 410-11, 446

Fisheries

- Beaufort Sea-Dixon Entrance boundaries, 256, 282
 Canned mackerel, purchase program for, 412, 479
 East coast fisheries, Canada-France agreement, 495, 512, 526
 Fisheries and Oceans Dept., establishment of, 88, 223, 237
 Fish, surplus of, offered to foreign countries, 480
 Foreign countries, catches by, 618-19, see appendix to Debates of Feb. 27/79
 Halibut industry, Canada-United States interim agreement, 463-4, 495, 567
 Halifax research laboratory, proposed closing of, 25, 124-5, 140, 145, 147, 148, 449
 Magdalen Islands sealers, annual seal hunt, 504-05
 Marine broadcasting, cut-back of, 25, 89
 Maritime boundaries Canada-United States, 256, 282, 463-4
 Newfoundland
 Catches between Port Aux Basques and Cook's Harbour, 308-09, 479
 Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe, inshore fishery, 308, 479
 Inshore squid fishery, 309, 479
 Shrimp yield, 479-80
 Nova Scotia
 Revenues from fishing industry, 125

Fisheries—concl'd

Seal hunt

Adverse publicity, 750, 810

U.S. congressional resolution, 810

Protest activities, 477, 527, 733

Sinclair Commission, report of, 469-70, 503

Fish processing at sea, 503

Weather station, Gander, 25, 89

Flynn, Hon. Jacques, P.C., Leader of the Opposition in the Senate

Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 16-20

Air Canada

Sale to private interests, 592, 593

Bank Act and Quebec Savings Banks bill C-49, 853, 856, 857

Bankruptcy 1979 bill S-14, 678

Banks and Banking Law Revision Income Tax, 683, 684, 724

Barre, Mr. Raymond, Premier of France, and Mrs. Barre, visit of, 553

Borrowing Authority bill C-7, 251

Cabinet, the, meetings in Toronto, 605

Canada Business Corporations bill S-5, 279

Canada Labour Code, commitment by government leader re representations before Senate committee, 180-1, 238, 283, 351-2

Canadian Broadcasting Corporation

French network broadcast, question of privilege, 457

Constitution of Canada

Quebec referendum, 18

Senate reform, 18

Government intention re future of Senate, 154, 172-3

House of the Federation, 18-19

Time for Action: Toward the Renewal of the Canadian Federation, 17, 18

Constitution of Canada, Special Senate Committee, 484-5

Deschênes, Hon. Jules, Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Quebec, visitor to Senate, 682

Economic conditions and prospects, 19

Government expenditures, 19

Energy

Federal government, power to act unilaterally, 606

Energy Supplies Emergency bill C-42, 850, 858, 859, 869, 874, 881, 882, 883, 884, 885-6, 889

Consultation with provinces prior to introduction of bill, 604, 605, 632-3

Estimates year ending Mar. 31/79, Supplementary (B), 715, 716, 740

Federal election delay, 16-17

Poll results, 16-17

Foreign affairs

Cossette-Trudels, kidnappers of UK Trade Commissioner, 350

East coast fisheries, Canada-France agreement, 495, 512

Fugitive Offenders bill S-9, 364, 365

Health Resources Fund bill C-2, 670-1, 672, 673, 674, 677, 686, 687, 689, 693, 694, 699, 700, 702, 703, 705, 706, 708, 712, 713, 716, 717

British Columbia government, appearance before Standing Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science, 687; objections of, 687

Point of order, 686, 706

Indian affairs

Meeting between Chiefs from Atlantic provinces and federal ministers, 361-2

Judges Act and Certain Other Acts bill C-43, 665

Judges (annuity to Hon. Mr. Justice Donald Raymond Morand) bill C-33, 387, 388, 389

Supernumerary judge, 387

Flynn, Hon. Jacques, P.C., Leader of the Opposition in the Senate

—concl'd

Loto Canada

Minister's statement on report relating to, 610

National Energy Board bill S-12, 601, 602, 611, 612-13, 762-3

Expropriation Act, 613

Market value, 613

National revenue

Tax rebate discounting, 191, 204-05

Newfoundland and Labrador

Boundary with Quebec, 817

Northern Pipeline Committee, 474

Expropriation law, deficiency in, 474

Off-track betting, legalization of, 515, 516, 519, 534, 535, 536, 733

Agriculture minister, statement of, 733

Paquette, Alcide, Assistant Clerk of the Senate, tributes on retirement, 456

Parliament

Hansard, official report, price increase, 632

Point of order

Distribution of Pepin-Robarts report, point of order re, 567

Messages between Senate and House of Commons, point of order re, 234, 271-2

Question period, information asked during, 606-07

Postal Services Continuation bill C-8, 20, 21, 33-34, 36, 37, 52, 53

Broadcast explaining reasons why Senate did not consider bill in previous sitting, 34

Post Office, disruption in service, 57, 58

Referendums and questions relating to the Constitution of Canada, 458, 459, 460-1

Rules of the Senate

Suspension of Rules 44, 45 and 78, 394, 395-6, 398, 400, 401, 403, 404, 405, 406, 809-10, 827-8

Schreyer, Edward Richard, announcement of appointment to office of Governor General, 333

Senate

Adjournment of, motion for, negated, 406-07

Business, 14, 24, 25, 41, 201, 255, 645-6, 716, 774, 775, 890, 891

Clerestory windows of chamber, 818

Monday sittings, 272, 273

Postal Services Continuation bill C-8, Ottawa Journal article re Senate consideration of, 58

Privilege, question of

Criticisms by Commons members of Senate handling of Bill C-5, 215, 216

Social insurance numbers

Penalty for non-use when cashing interest or dividend payments, 283, 316-17, 318, 381, 382, 385, 386, 471

Sports

Grants to municipalities, 611

NHL, request that Edmonton, Winnipeg and Quebec City be admitted to, motion proposed, 830, 831, 832, motion adopted, 854

Task Force on Canadian Unity, 469, 470, 567

Point of order re Rules of the Senate, 567

Recommendations respecting Parliament, 470

Report, tabling of, 469

United Nations

Human Rights Declaration, 30th anniversary of, 340-1

Foreign affairs

Canada-US relations

Appearance of Secretary of State for External Affairs before committee during discussion of report, 274

Foreign affairs—concl'd

- China and Vietnam, Canadian policy respecting hostilities between, 618, 646, 659, 734
- Cossette-Trudels, kidnappers of UK trade commissioner, return to Canada, 307, 315, 350
- East coast fisheries, Canada-France agreement, 495, 512, 526, 593
- Egypt-Israel peace treaty, 154, 266
 - Signing of, 856
 - United Nations Peacekeeping Force, 894
- Export Development Corporation, approval of loans by Industry, Trade and Commerce, 721
- France, Industry, Trade and Commerce, trade with, 719-20
- International social security agreement, 526-7
- Iran
 - Oil imports to Eastern Canada, effect of political situation on, 357, 385, 393
 - Ownership of controlling interest of Bell Canada, 464, 494
 - Safety of Canadian workers in, 203, 222, 342, 349, 492-3
- Jonestown, Guyana, mass murder and suicide at the commune of the People's Temple, 238, 243, 266-7
- Namibia, Canadian Forces contingent, 319, 357
- Prime Minister's visit to United Kingdom, 274-5
- Sanctions against Rhodesia and South Africa, 382, 383, 386, 493-4
- US Secretary of State visit to Canada, discussions agenda
 - Beaufort Sea—Dixon Entrance boundaries, 256, 282
 - Maritime boundaries, Canada-United States, 256, 282, 463-4, 495
 - Northern pipeline, 239, 267

Foreign Affairs, Standing Senate Committee

- Canada-United States relations, authority to make study of, 191
- Expenses, 149, see Journals of the Senate
- Proposed authority to study defence and international agreements, 550-1
- Proposed authority to study subjects within areas of concern, 551-3
- Reports
 - Canada-United States Trade Relations, 189-91, 380

Forestry service

- Dutch Elm disease, 384
- Winnipeg office, closing of, 307, 383

Forsey, Hon. Eugene A.

- Bankruptcy 1979 bill S-14, 664
- Canada Elections Act, change in writ of election, 157, 244
- Canadian Broadcasting Corporation
 - French network, question of privilege, 457
- Constitution of Canada, 1st report of Special Senate Committee, 158-64
 - Governor General, 160-1
 - Ministerial power, 161-2
 - Monarchy, 160
 - Prime Minister, forming of new administration after defeat in Commons, 161
 - Senate reform, 158-9
 - Appointments, method of, 158-9
 - Internal reforms suggested, 159
 - Suspensive veto of upper house, 162-4
 - Measures of special linguistic significance, 163-4
- Energy Supplies Emergency bill C-42, 851-2, 866-7, 872, 873, 882, 883, 884, 887
- Federal-Provincial Conference of First Ministers
 - Jurisdiction over family law, 512, 563-4
- Fisheries
 - Department of Fisheries and Oceans, advance sign painting of name, 223
 - Title questioned, 89

Forsey, Hon. Eugene A.—concl'd

- Foreign affairs
 - Sanctions against Rhodesia and South Africa, 386, 493-4
- Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, motion to appoint nominating committee, 825-6, 827
- Government Organization 1979 bill C-35, 784, 785
- Health Resources Fund bill C-2, 573, 594, 671, 700-01
- Judges (annuity to Hon. Mr. Justice Donald Raymond Morand) bill C-33, 389
- Labour
 - Labour Gazette*, removal of requirement to publish, 526, 659, 685-6
- Newfoundland and Labrador
 - Boundary with Quebec, 817
- Parliament Buildings
 - Royal William*, removal of commemorative plaque, 526
- Post Office
 - Increase in postal rates, 244, 307, 315-16; inquiry withdrawn, 360
- Referendums and questions relating to the Constitution, 459, 461
- Regulations and other Statutory Instruments Committee
 - Expenses, 152, see Journals of the Senate
 - Meeting during Senate sitting, 180
- Reports
 - 1st report re quorum, terms of reference, staff, 221, 252
 - 2nd report re criteria for review and scrutiny of statutory instruments, 221-2, 260
 - 3rd report re ministerial powers to enter lands and remove excessive natural growth, 348-9, 359-60
 - 4th report re import control list, amendment and general import permit No. 57, 524-6, 626, 655, 665-7
 - 5th report re Statutory Instruments No. 6, 561-2, 621-4, 625-6
 - 6th report re Statutory Instruments No. 7, 747-8, 769-70
- Rules of the Senate
 - Suspension of Rules 44, 45 and 78, 399-400
- Senate
 - Business, 891
- Shipping Continuation bill C-11, 77, 83
- Social insurance numbers
 - Use on mail to armed forces, 284, 295
- Sports
 - Canada Winter Games, Brandon, Manitoba, 680
- Statute Law (Metric Conversion) bill S-10, 322-3
 - Lament for the Old Weights and Measures*, 322-3
- Task Force on Canadian Unity
 - Distribution of report, 562
- Transport
 - VIA Rail, policies of, 449
- Unemployment Insurance bill C-14, 420-1, 433-8, 443-4, 445
- Social Planning Council of Metropolitan Toronto, Policy Statement, 434, 436, 443
- Unemployment Insurance Advisory Committee, 435

Fournier, Hon. Edgar

- Statute Law (Metric Conversion) bill S-10, 343-5
 - Edmundston Aircraft School, 344
 - La Conférence Générale des Poids et Mesures, 344
 - New Brunswick Highway Safety Council, 345
 - World War II training programs, 344-5
- Transport
 - VIA Rail
 - Compensation to CNR and CPR for their existing facilities, 504
 - Equipment purchased by VIA Rail from CNR, 504
 - Question of privilege, 642-4

France

- Barre, Mr. Raymond, Premier of France and Mrs. Barre, visit of, 553
- Trade, exports and imports, 419-20

Frith, Hon. Royce

- Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 97
- Criminal Code (firearms acquisition certificate) bill C-34, 410-11
- Economic conditions and prospects, 97
- Government accomplishments, 97
- Foreign affairs
 - Sanctions against Rhodesia and South Africa, 383
- Greene, Hon. J. J., P.C., the late, 85-86
- Health Resources Fund bill C-2, 568-71, 572, 573, 574, 593-4, 595, 638-9, 668-9, 670, 671, 673-4, 686, 694, 695, 697, 706
- Income Tax Conventions bill S-2, 103
- History of legislation passed in previous session, 103
- Referendums and questions relating to the Constitution, 460, 461
- Unemployment Insurance bill C-14, 444, 445

Fugitive offenders

- Commonwealth Law Conference, 1966, 268
- "Scheme Relating to the Rendition of Fugitive Offenders within the Commonwealth", 268
- Discretionary powers of minister, 269, 298, 364
- History of legislation, 267-8
- Internationally protected person, definition of, 364
- Ministerial discretion, 265
- Offence of a political nature, 358
- Offences covered and not covered, 268
- Onus on applicant in bail application, 268-9
- Punishment, excessively severe or inhumane, 269
- Returnable offence, 268
- Ruanda-Urundi, UN Commission, 298
- Statement of Minister of Justice, 297
- War Measures Act, implementation in 1970, 298, 364
- Cossette-Trudels, 298

Speakers: Senators

- Asselin, Martial, 297-9, 359, 363-4
- Cook, Eric, 376
- Flynn, Jacques, 364, 365
- Goldenberg, H. Carl, 333, 391-2
- Grosart, Allister, 269-70
- McIlraith, George J., 267-9, 270, 299-300, 358, 365-6, 376
- Perrault, Raymond J., 298, 358
- Smith, G. I., 366

Fugitive Offenders bill S-9. 1r, 200; 2r, 267-70, 297-300; ref to com, 300; rep with amdts, 333-4, 343; m for 3r, 358, m in amdt, 358, 363-6, m in amdt ref to com, 376; rep with amdts, 391-2; 3r, 392

Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod

- Motion to appoint special nominating committee, 770-3, 820-7
- Replacement for, 166, 676
- Responsibilities of, 771

Gillespie, Hon. Alastair William, P.C., Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and Minister of State for Science and Technology

- Energy Supplies Emergency 1979 bill C-42, 857-61, 862, 863-4, 865-6, 867, 868, 869, 870, 871, 873, 874, 876, 877-8, 879-81, 882, 884, 886, 887-8
- Combines Investigation Act, 887
- Energy Supplies Allocation Board, 873
- Gull Island project, 860, 861, 862
- Lower Churchill Development Corporation, 860, 861, 862
- Mandatory allocation program, 866, 867

Gillespie, Hon. Alastair William, P.C., Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and Minister of State for Science and Technology—concl'd

- Energy Supplies Emergency 1979 bill C-42—concl'd
- Maritime Energy Corporation, 860-1, 862, 864, 865
- Petro-Canada, 862, 865, 870
- Seven per cent trigger point, 876
- Shortages east of the Ottawa Valley, 858

Godfrey, Hon. John Morrow

- Constitution of Canada, 1st report of Special Senate Committee
- Bill of Rights, entrenchment of, 452-4
- Definition of, 453
- Dred Scott* decision (U.S.), 454
- Drybones* case (Canada), 453
- Evidence before committee, 453
- McRuer, Hon. James C., 453
- Tarnopolsky, Prof. W., 453
- Health Resources Fund bill C-2, 695-6
- National Energy Board bill S-12, 599
- Northern Pipeline, 1st report of Committee, 379
- Arctic gas, guarantees from companies, 379
- Trademark 1979 bill S-11, 529-33, 835

Goldenberg, Hon. H. Carl

- Bank Act and Quebec Savings Banks bill C-49, 857
- Judges (annuity to Hon. Mr. Justice Donald Raymond Morand) bill C-33, 389
- Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee
- Public Referendums and Questions relating to the Constitution of Canada, authority to examine subject matter of Bill C-9, 458, 459, 461-2
- Reports
 - Fugitive Offenders bill S-9, rep with amdts, 333, adopted, 391-2
 - J. H. Poitras & Son Ltd. bill S-8, rep with amdts, 253, 267
 - National Energy Board bill S-12, 613
 - Off-track betting, legalization of, 507-08, 510
 - Criminal Code, 507
- Regulations and other Statutory Instruments Committee
- 5th report re Statutory Instruments No. 6, 626
- Task Force on Canadian Unity, 469
- Report, tabling of, 469

Government

- Annuities, increase in interest rate, 501, 648
- Energy, price agreement with Alberta respecting crude oil, 25, 58, 102, 129-30, 244, 272, 294-5, 316
- Federal election delay, 16-17
- Unemployment, 123-4
- Youth training and labour-intensive initiatives, 124

Government organization

- Curtailment of fisheries research programs, 782
- Danger to fisheries, 781
- Environment, Department of the, mandate, 758
- Fisheries and Oceans, Department of, establishment of, 757
- Fisheries and Oceans Research Advisory Council, 757, 764, 782, 784, 785
- Fishing fleet build up and expansion, 779
- Fishing industry build up, 765
- Fishing resources, 764
- Foreign presence in 200-mile zone, 780
- Forest industry, 788
- International Law of the Sea Conference, 777
- Parliamentary Secretaries Act, 758
- Representation of fishermen, 785
- Salmon fishing by Indians, 778
- Salmon-lobster poaching, 777

Government organization—concl'd

Spruce budworm, 786

Squid, catching and marketing of, 783

Speakers: Senators

Forsey, Eugene A., 784, 785

Grosart, Allister, 732, 758, 769, 775-6, 780, 785, 786, 787, 788, 789, 790, 791, 792

Langlois, Léopold, 758, 784, 787

Macdonald, John M., 783, 784

Marshall, Jack, 763-7, 776-7, 778-9, 784, 785, 786, 787-8, 789

Molson, Hartland de M., 778

Neiman, Joan, 776-92 (Chairman, Committee of the Whole)

Olson, H. A., 790

Phillips, Orville H., 768-9, 781, 782, 786, 789, 790-1

Riley, Daniel, 757-8, 769, 775, 776

Rowe, Frederick W., 780, 784

Williams, Guy, 758, 769

also

LeBlanc, Hon. Roméo A., P.C., Minister of Fisheries and the Environment, 777, 778, 779-80, 781-2, 783, 784-5, 786-7, 788, 789, 790, 791

Government Organization 1979 bill C-35. 1r, 732; 2r, 757-8, 763-9, 775-6; ref to Committee of the Whole, 776, considered in Committee of the Whole, Hon. Joan Neiman in the Chair, Hon. Roméo A. LeBlanc, P.C., Minister of Fisheries and the Environment taking part in debate, 776-92; rep withdrawn amdt, 792; 3r, 792; r.a., 796

Governor General, His Excellency the Rt. Hon. Jules LégerDeputy

Beetz, Hon. Jean, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada
Royal assent, 355

Dickson, Hon. Robert G.B., Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada
Royal assent, 260

Pigeon, Hon. Louis-Philippe, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada
Royal assent, 446

Spence, Hon. Wishart F., Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada
Royal assent, 54, 83, 232

Schreyer, Edward Richard, appointment to office of Governor General as of January 1979, 333

Speech from the Throne at Opening of Fourth Session of Thirtieth Parliament (read by Madam Léger), 1-4

Governor General, His Excellency the Rt. Hon. Edward Richard Schreyer, P.C.

Address by the Prime Minister and reply by His Excellency the Governor General of Canada, see appendix to Debates of Jan. 23/79

Deputy

Beetz, Hon. Jean, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada
Royal assent, 796

Pigeon, Hon. Louis-Philippe, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada
Royal assent, 726

Pratte, Hon. Yves, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada
Royal assent, 893

Schreyer, Rt. Hon. Edward Richard, P.C., His Excellency the Governor General of Canada
Royal assent, 807

Graham, Hon. B. Alasdair

Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 145-7

Greene, Hon. J.J., P.C., the late, 85

Graham, Hon. B. Alasdair—concl'd

National unity, 146-7

Negative attitudes, 146-7; media criticisms, 147

Nova Scotia, 144-8

Coal industry, 144-5; Donkin bloc, 144-5

Fisheries, 145; closing of Halifax research laboratory, 145, 148

Fundy tidal power, 145

Steel industry, 145

Tributes to colleagues and others, 144

Grain

Delivery to export positions, 449, 493

Government grain elevators, purchase of, 284, 384

Hopper cars, purchase of, 527, 685

Initial prairie prices, 496, 593

Tie-up in shipments due to strike of engineers and deck officers in Great Lakes area, 16, 25

Great Lakes shipping

Effect of Shipping Continuation Act, 102, 118, 129

Strike of engineers and deck officers, 15-16, 25, 61, 66, 129

Greene, Hon. J. J., P.C. (Deceased Oct. 24/78)

Address prepared for Throne Speech debate printed as appendix to Debates of Dec. 5/78, 301, 311-14

Minutes of the Proceedings, question of privilege re spelling of name, 57

Northern Pipeline Committee, terms of reference, 7

Postal Services Continuation bill C-8, 38

Post Office, disruption in service, 58

Tributes, 77, 83-86, 110, 113, 132, 152

Grosart, Hon. Allister, Deputy Leader of the Opposition in the Senate

Borrowing Authority bill C-7, 249, 250

Cabinet changes, 267

Canada Business Corporations bill S-5, 279

Canada Non-Profit Business Corporations bill S-4, 151, 259

Constitution of Canada

Senate

Government intention re future of Senate, 172

Energy Supplies Emergency bill C-42, 875-6

Seven per cent trigger point, 876

Estimates year ending Mar. 31/79 Supplementary (A), 279-80

Estimates year ending Mar. 31/79, Supplementary (B), 715, 737-9, 740

Dollar items, 738

Federal government spending, effect on inflation, 737

Grants and contributions, 739

Objects of expenditure, 739

Recommendations of National Finance Committee, 738

Servicing national debt, 737, 738

Shortfalls, 738

Foreign affairs

International social security agreement, 526-7

International treaties as subject for continuing study, 551

Fugitive Offenders bill S-9, 269-70

Discretionary power of minister, 269

Punishment, excessively severe or inhumane, 269

Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, 772, 773, 826-7

Government Organization 1979 bill C-35, 732, 758, 769, 775-6, 780, 785, 786, 787, 788, 789, 790, 791, 792

Greene, Hon. J. J., P.C., the late, 84

'Hayden formula' re study of legislation, 101

Health Resources Fund bill C-2, 669-70, 674, 675, 693, 695, 697-9, 707, 710

British Columbia government, objections of, 670

Income Tax Conventions bill S-2, 103-04

Grosart, Hon. Allister, Deputy Leader of the Opposition in the Senate*—concl'd*

Income Tax Conventions bill S-7, 187, 240-2, 258, 259, 320-2

Conventions, treaties, agreements, inconsistencies in, 240-2, 258, 259

Labour Conventions case, 241

Non-ratification by Parliament, 240

Prerogative of the Crown, 241

Delay in receipt of agreements after signing, 242

Governor in Council's power re changes and amendments, 242

Omnibus feature of bill, 242

Income tax, report of committee on subject matter of Bill C-37, 748, 749

J.H. Poitras & Son Ltd. bill S-8, 267

Labour

Comparative figures of OECD and International Labour Office, 204, 222, 233

Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee

Meetings during Senate sittings, 733, 807-08

McDonald Royal Commission

RCMP break-ins, permission of Solicitors General for, 103

National Defence

Military aircraft, selection of, 277, 317-18

National Energy Board bill S-12, 757

National Housing bill C-29, 760-1, 800, 804-05, 806

North Atlantic Assembly, Twenty-fourth Annual Session, Lisbon, Portugal, 551-2

Committees, Standing Senate, suggested authority to study subjects within areas of concern, 551-2

Foreign Affairs Committee, suggested authority to study defence and international agreements, 551-2

Prerogative of the Crown, theory of, 552

SALT agreement, 551

Off-track betting, Senate study of, 469

Legalization of, 506-07, 517, 518, 519, 535-6, 537

Postal Services Continuation bill C-8, 39, 40, 51, 52, 53

Post Office

Disruption in service, 101, 109-10, 118

Directives to workers by union leaders, 118

Public Service Employment Act, Article XXVII, re absenteeism, 109-10

Second Class Mail Regulations, 834

Referendums and questions relating to the Constitution, 459-60

Regulations and other Statutory Instruments

Fifth Report of Standing Joint Committee, 624-5

Royal Canadian Mounted Police officers, visit of, 797

St. Patrick's Day, tributes to St. Patrick and the Irish people, 775

Senate

Business, 255, 450, 796, 808, 890-1

Committee studies of subject matter of bills as result of 'Hayden formula', 101

Emergency sittings, notice to senators, 86, 87

Privilege, question of

Criticisms by Commons members and Canadian Press of Senate handling of Bill C-5, 219

Social insurance numbers

Penalty for non-use when cashing interest or dividend payments, 283, 295, 316-17, 318

Proposed study of use, 496

Sports

NHL, request that Edmonton, Winnipeg and Quebec City be admitted to, motion proposed, 833

Trademark 1979 bill S-11, 533, 639-40, 660, 820, 835

Economic Council of Canada, 639

Visitors

Spanish parliamentary delegation, 170

Guay, Hon. Joseph-Philippe, P.C.

Agriculture

Feed grain prices, 203, 237

Borrowing Authority bill C-7, 248

Estimates year ending Mar. 31/79, Supplementary (B), 722

Health Resources Fund bill C-2, 670

National revenue

Charitable institutions, tax deductions, 222

Tax rebate discounting, 191-2, 204-05

Northern Pipeline Committee, 1st report, 472-4

Expropriation, 472-4

Compensation, 473-4

Legal cost, recovery of, 474

National Energy Board Act, amendment required, 472, 474

Globe & Mail article "Farmers win oil pipeline damage suit", by Rudy Platiel, 473

Parliament

Lapel pins, distribution to members of House of Commons, 751

Riel, Louis, possibility of posthumous pardon, 543

Rules of the Senate

Suspension of Rules 44, 45 and 78, 403, 404

Social insurance numbers

Penalty for non-use when cashing interest or dividend payments, 385, 471

Sports

Grants to municipalities, 610, 633

NHL, request that Edmonton, Winnipeg and Quebec City be admitted to, motion, 833

Haidasz, Hon. Stanley, P.C.

Energy

Nuclear fusion research project, proposed, 810

Foreign affairs

Prime Minister's visit to United Kingdom, 274-5

Health and Welfare

Hospital charges in Ontario, compatibility with federal legislation, 541-2, 775

Medicare program, 817-18

Indian affairs

Health and environmental conditions, 462

Infant deaths on northern Alberta reserves, 677

Old Age Security bill C-5, 223-5

Background of old age security payments, 224

Costs of increase and effect on economy, 225

Effective date, 225

Income supplement, 224

Single pensioners, 224

Six months' allowance for spouse of deceased pensioner, 224-5

Pope John Paul II, His Holiness, election of, 24

Public Service

Employment of immigrants, 829

Visitors

Baltic honorary consuls, 566

Halifax

Research laboratory, closing of, 124-5, 140, 145, 147, 148, 449

Hayden, Hon. Salter A.

Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee

Banks and Banking Law Revision, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-15, 152-3

Banks and Banking Law Revision bill C-15, authority to publish and distribute report during any period between sessions of Parliament, 683, 684, 723-4

Excise tax, authority to study subject matter prior to receipt of Bill C-38, 475

Expenses, 180, see Journals of the Senate

Hayden, Hon. Salter A.—*concl'dBanking, Trade and Commerce Committee—*concl'd

- Income tax and family allowances, authority to study subject matter prior to receipt of Bill C-10, 165
- Income tax, authority to publish and distribute report during any period between sessions of Parliament, see appendix to Debates of Mar.13/79
- Income tax, authority to study subject matter prior to receipt of Bill C-37, 475
- Meetings during Senate sittings, 153, 180, 236

Reports

- Banks and Banking Law Revision Act, 1978, report on subject matter of Bill C-15, see appendix to Debates of Mar.15/79
- Canada Business Corporations bill S-5, rep with amdt, 235-6, 277-9
- Canada Non-Profit Corporations bill S-4, rep with amdt, 234-5, 259
- Income tax (amdt to statute law relating to income tax, to amend the Canada Pension Plan and to provide authority for the raising of funds), rep on subject matter of Bill C-37, 744-7, 748, see appendix to Debates of Mar.13/79
- Income Tax Conventions bill S-7, rep without amdt, 293
- Income Tax, Family Allowances bill C-10, rep without amdt, 348
- Statute Law (Metric Conversion) bill S-10, rep without amdt, 356
- Terms of reference, 100, 101
- Bankruptcy 1979 bill S-14, 660-4, 755
 - Additional monies payable to wage-earner, 661-2
 - Consumer and commercial arrangements, 663
 - Insurance fund, establishment of, 661
 - International problem arising out of bankruptcy matters, 662
 - Liability of directors, 662-3
 - Ombudsman*, 662
 - Sophisticated lender, 663-4
 - Wage-earner priority over secured creditors, 661, 664
- 'Hayden formula', 101
- Income Tax Conventions bill S-7, 256-7, 258, 259
 - Consideration by appropriate committee, 256-7
 - Conventions, treaties, agreements, 256, 258, 259
 - Dividends, 257
 - Immovable property sales, 257
 - Non-resident carrying on business in Canada, 257

Hays, Hon. Harry, P.C.

- Beef Import bill S-13, 634-6
- Beef production problems, 634-5
- Self-sufficient industries, 635

Health and Welfare

- Hospital charges in Ontario, compatibility with federal legislation, 541-2, 775
- Indian health care, complaint by National Indian Brotherhood, 462
- Medicare program, 817-18
- Physicians in Nova Scotia, compensation for, 818

Health resources fund

- British Columbia government, appearance before Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science, 687; objections of, 670, 687
- British Columbia's Constitutional Proposals, Paper No.3, Reform of the Canadian Senate*, 691
- Discrimination against provinces, 637
- Federal-provincial relations, 636-7
- Federal restraint policy, 637, 688
- Point of order, ruling re, 682

Health resources fund—concl'd

- Recommendations of Health, Welfare and Science Committee, 762, 856

Speakers: Senators

- Bell, Ann Elizabeth, 573, 693, 702, 704-05, 706
- Bonnell, M. Lorne, 668, 669, 671, 673, 674-5, 677, 678, 687-8, 701
- Bosa, Peter, 573-4
- Connolly, John J., 568
- Flynn, Jacques, 670-1, 672, 673, 674, 677, 686, 687, 689, 693, 694, 699, 700, 702, 703, 705, 706, 708, 712, 713, 716, 717
- Forsey, Eugene A., 573, 594, 671, 700-01
- Frith, Royce, 568-71, 572, 573, 574, 593-4, 595, 638-9, 668-9, 670, 671, 673-4, 686, 694, 695, 697, 706
- Godfrey, John Morrow, 695-6
- Grosart, Allister, 669-70, 674, 675, 693, 695, 697-9, 707, 710
- Guay, Joseph-Philippe, 670
- Hicks, Henry D., 572, 696, 704, 705
- Lamontagne, Maurice, 696, 699, 700
- Langlois, Léopold, 670, 671, 674, 686
- Macdonald, John M., 573, 574, 636-8
- Marshall, Jack, 573
- McElman, Charles, 672-3
- McIlraith, George J., 669, 672
- Perrault, Raymond J., 691-3, 700, 701, 702, 703, 706, 707, 708, 712, 713, 716, 717
- Phillips, Orville H., 697, 701-02, 717
- Roblin, Duff, 669, 671, 672, 675, 689-91, 694, 707-08, 709, 710
- Smith, G. I., 572, 573, 594, 673, 677, 678, 688-9, 692, 693, 694, 701, 708, 713
- Stanbury, Richard J., 697, 699
- Thompson, Andrew, 702-03, 706
- van Roggen, George, 713

- Health Resources Fund bill C-2. 1r, 524; 2r, 568-74, 593-5, 636-9; ref to com, 639; rep without amdt but with recommendation, 668-75; m in amdt, 687, m in amdt neg on division, 703, m in amdt, 704, m in amdt neg on division, 709, main m agreed to on division, 709; 3r, 709; m that message to House of Commons contain com recommendation, 709, m agreed to, 710, 712-13, r.a., 726

Health, Welfare and Science, Standing Senate Committee

- Business of, relating to Bill C-2, 684
- Childhood experiences as causes of criminal behaviour, committee authorized to make study of, 101
- Expenses, 149, see Journals of the Senate
- Health Resources Fund bill C-2, committee recommendations, 762
- Meetings during Senate sittings, 315, 356
- Reports
 - Health Resources Fund bill C-2, rep without amdt but with recommendation, 668-75
 - Old Age Security bill C-5, rep without amdt, 231
 - Unemployment Insurance bill C-14, 392-3, 407-09, 412-21
- Representations to committee re Health Resources Fund bill C-2, 677-8
- Terms of reference, 101
- Unemployment insurance, authority to study subject matter of Bill C-14, 281

Hicks, Hon. Henry D.

- Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 64-66
- Economic conditions and prospects, 65
 - Restraints in productive areas, 65; fisheries research in Halifax, comments from scientists, 65-66
- Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, motion to appoint nominating committee, 820-5, 826
- Health Resources Fund bill C-2, 572, 696, 704, 705

Hicks, Hon. Henry D.—concl'd

- Labour relations and strikes in essential services and in the Public Service, 64-65
- Air Canada, 65
- Off-track betting, legalization of, 507
- Sports
 - NHL All-Star Team, defeat of in international competition, 528

Housing and urban affairs

- Responsibilities of Public Works Dept., 274, 295, 342
- Veterans housing, 295

Income tax

- Deduction for small businesses, 362
- Garnisheeing of child tax credit, 476, 502
- Penalty for non-use of social insurance number when cashing interest or dividend payments, 283, 295, 316-17, 318, 381, 382-3, 385-6, 471
- Tax rebate discounting, 191-2, 204-05

Income tax (amdt to statute law relating to income tax, to amend the Canada Pension Plan and to provide authority for the raising of funds), rep on subject matter of Bill C-37, 744-7, 748-9, see appendix to Debates of Mar. 13/79

- Canada Pension Plan, entitlement to disability pension, 745
- Interest on funds borrowed to purchase annuities, 749
- Life annuities, 746
- Life insurance policies, adjusted cost basis, 746
- Registered Retirement Savings Plans, 744, 745
 - Commutation of benefits at death, 745
 - Minimum maturity age, 744

Speakers: Senators

- Asselin, Martial, 748-9
- Bosa, Peter, 749
- Grosart, Allister, 748, 749
- Hayden, Salter A., 744-7, 748

Income tax conventions (Bill S-2)Speakers: Senators

- Frith, Royce, 103
- Grosart, Allister, 103-04

Income Tax Conventions bill S-2. 1r, 14; 2r, 103-04; 3r, 118Income tax conventions (Bill S-7)

- Consideration by appropriate committee, 256-7
- Conventions, treaties, agreements, inconsistencies in, 186-7, 240-2, 256-8, 259
 - Labour Conventions* case, 241
 - Letter from Finance Dept re, 258
 - Non-ratification by Parliament, 240
 - Prerogative of the Crown, 241

Delay in receipt of agreements after signing, 242

Dividends, 257

Governor in Council's power re changes and amendments, 242

Interest, 186

Non-resident carrying on business in Canada, 257

Omnibus aspect of bill, 242, 258

Pensions, 187

Royalties, 186-7

Supplementary conventions or agreements, 186

Tax-sparing provision, 187

Teachers, 187

Speakers: Senators

- Grosart, Allister, 187, 240-2, 258, 259, 320-2
- Hayden, Salter A., 256-7, 258, 259
- Thompson, Andrew, 186-7, 257-8

Income Tax Conventions bill S-7. 1r, 165; 2r, 186-7, 240-2, 256-9; ref to com, 259; rep without amdt, 293; m for 3r, 309, 320-2; 3r, 322

Income tax, family allowances

Child benefit system

History of, 302

Reform of, 302

Committee meeting during Senate sitting, complaint re scheduling of, 305-06

Discriminating aspect of bill, 324

Income Tax Act, use of, criticism, 336-7

Index to cost of living, 302

"Integration of Social Program Payments into Income Tax System", feasibility study of, 324

Negative income tax system, 325, 335

Quebec Civil Code, 324

Redistribution of funds, 324

Refundable tax credit, 302, 303, 304, 323, 324

Senate committee's contribution of value to Family Allowance Program, 325

Poverty Line Update-1977, 326

Social Security for Canada, Marsh report on, 302

Social service system, 325

Une femme chez les hommes, memoirs of Hon. Thérèse Casgrain, 324

Speakers: Senators

Barrow, A. Irvine, 301-05, 337

Bird, Florence B., 323-5

Croll, David A., 325-7

Lang, Daniel A., 336-7

Marshall, Jack, 305-06

Perrault, Raymond J., 305

Roblin, Duff, 334-6

Income Tax, Family Allowances bill C-10. 1r, 301; 2r, 301-06, 323-7, 334-7; ref to com, 337; rep without amdt, 348; 3r, 348; r.a., 355

Indian affairs

Health and environmental conditions, complaint by National Indian Brotherhood, 462

Infant deaths on northern Alberta reserves, 677

Meeting between Chiefs from Atlantic provinces and federal ministers, 361-2

Indian Affairs and Northern Development

Gros Morne National Park, reductions, 719

Parks Canada scholarships, 719

Industry

Canadian textile industry, 195-9

Industry, Trade and Commerce

Automotive industry, Reisman report on, 350, 494

Canada and European Economic Community, agreement, 626-30

Industrial mission to Italy, 626-30

Pandolfi plan, 628

Trade between Canada and Italy, 630

Export Development Corporation, approval of loans to foreign countries, 721

France, trade with, 719-20

West Germany, exports and imports, 720-1

Inflation

Rate of inflation before and after instigation of anti-inflation program, 155-7, 166-7

See Economy

Inquiries, calling the attention of the Senate to matters of national and international interest
 Aging, government department, desirability of establishing, 458
 Canadian textile industry, 195-9
 International Year of the Child, Proclamation of General Assembly of the United Nations, 153-4
 Inter-Parliamentary Union Conference, Bonn, West Germany, 167-9, 205-09, 338-9
 United Nations Thirty-third Meeting of General Assembly, 174-9

Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration, Standing Senate Committee
 Budgets of committees, 253
 Special Senate Committee on the Constitution
 Budget tabled, 491, see Journals of the Senate

International Year of the Child
 Proclamation by General Assembly of the United Nations, 153-4

Inter-Parliamentary Union Conference, Bonn, West Germany, 167-9, 205-09, 338-9
 Amnesty International, 208
 Bloc voting, 206
 Canadian delegates, members, 168
 History of Union, 338
 Imprisonment of parliamentarians, 339
 United Nations proposals, 206
Speakers: Senators
 Bonnell, M. Lorne, 167-9
 Molgat, Gildas L., 205-09
 Neiman, Joan, 338-9
 Thompson, Andrew E., 208

Iran
 Oil imports to eastern Canada, effect of political situation on, 357, 385, 393
 Ownership of controlling interest of Bell Canada, 464, 494
 Safety of Canadian workers in, 203, 222, 342, 349-50, 492-3

Israel
 Egypt-Israel peace treaty, 154, 266
 Signing of, 856
 United Nations Peacekeeping Force, 894
 Meir, Golda, Prime Minister of Israel, the late, 343, 357-8

Italy
 Canada and European Economic Community, agreement between, 626-30
 Industrial mission to Italy, 626-30
 Pandolfi plan, 628
 Trade between Canada and Italy, 630
 Income Tax Conventions bill S-2, 14, 103-04, 118

Jamaica
 Income Tax Conventions bill S-7, 165, 186-7, 240-2, 256-9, 293, 309, 322

J.H. Poitras & Son Ltd. bill S-8. 1r, 180; 2r, 205; ref to com, 205; rep with amdts, 253, 267; 3r, 277; message from Commons that bill has been passed without amdt, 410; r.a., 446

Judges Act and certain other acts
 Renewal of pool of judicial salaries, 665
 Restructuring of courts, 664

Judges Act and certain other acts—concl'd
Speakers: Senators
 Flynn, Jacques, 665
 Perrault, Raymond J., 657
 Stanbury, Richard J., 664-5

Judges Act and Certain Other Acts bill C-43. 1r, 657; 2r, 664-5; ref to com, 665; rep without amdt, 668; 3r, 710; r.a., 726

Judges (annuity)
 Judges Act, 387
 Ombudsman, Ontario, 386
 Supernumerary judge, 387
Speakers: Senators
 Asselin, Martial, 388
 Benidickson, W. M., 387, 388, 389
 Flynn, Jacques, 387, 388, 389
 Forsey, Eugene A., 389
 Goldenberg, H. Carl, 389
 McIlraith, George J., 388
 Smith, G. I., 388, 389
 Thompson, Andrew, 386-7, 388, 389, 390, 393
 van Roggen, George, 389
 Walker, David, 387, 388, 389

Judges (annuity to Hon. Mr. Justice Donald Raymond Morand) bill C-33. 1r, 375; 2r, 386-90; 3r, 393; r.a., 446

Justice Department
 McDonald Royal Commission, 89, 103, 155, 341
 Solicitors, payment for, 155, 341
 RCMP break-ins, permission of Solicitors General for, 89, 103

Korea
 Income Tax Conventions bill S-7, 165, 186-7, 240-2, 256-9, 293, 309, 322

Labour
 Comparative figures of OECD and International Labour Office, 204, 222, 233,
 Great Lakes shipping, strike of engineers and deck officers, 15-16, 25, 61, 66
Labour Gazette, removal of requirement to publish, 526, 659, 685-6
 Post Office, strike of inside workers, 20-23, 26-41, 48-53, 54
 Public Service strikes, 64-65, 124
 Strikes, government action in reduction of, 181, 203-04

Labour Code
See Canada Labour Code

Lafond, Hon. Paul C.
 Foreign Affairs Committee
 Expenses, 149, see Journals of the Senate
 North Atlantic Assembly, Twenty-fourth Annual Session, Lisbon, Portugal, 653-5
 Marine pollution, control of, 654
 National defence, 654
 Nuclear fuel supply, maintenance of, 654
 Ocean management, impact of advanced technology on, 654
 Regulations and other Statutory Instruments Committee
 Reports
 1st report, 221
 2nd report, 221-2
 United States
 Stevens, Hon. Ted, expression of sympathy on death of wife in plane crash, 301

Laird, Hon. Keith

- Internal Economy Committee
- Special Senate Committee on the Constitution
 - Budget tabled, 491, see Journals of the Senate
- Senate
 - Emergency sittings, notice to senators, 87
 - Research and secretarial services for senators, 182-3

Lamontagne, Hon. Maurice, P.C.

- Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 135-9
- Constitution of Canada, 1st rep of Special Senate Committee, 480-5
- Task Force on Canadian Unity (Pepin-Roberts Task Force), report of, 480-4
- Council of the Federation, proposed, 482-4
- Economic conditions, 135-9
 - Consumer behaviour, 137
 - Excerpt from report of Prof. Paul McCracken committee, 135
 - Monetary crisis, 138
 - Other countries, 136; US economic study, 136
 - Population growth, 136
 - Primary industries, 136
 - Public sector investments, reduction in, 137
 - Social climate, 137-8; The Balkanization of America, 137-8
 - Technological innovations, 136
 - Third World, competition from, 137
- Health Resources Fund bill C-2, 696, 699, 700
- Rules of the Senate
 - Suspension of Rules 44, 45 and 78, 399
- Tributes to colleagues and others, 135

Lang, Hon. Daniel A.

- Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, 676, 770-2, 773
 - Motion to appoint special nominating committee, 770-2, 773
 - Responsibilities of, 771
- Income Tax, Family Allowances bill C-10, 336-7
 - Income Tax Act, use of to redistribute nation's wealth, criticism of, 336-7
- Shipping Conferences Exemption bill S-6, 185
- Unemployment Insurance bill C-14, 421-3, 430, 438-9, 440, 442
 - Dependants, definition of, 439
 - Unemployment Insurance Fund, contributions by government, 422
- United States
 - Stevens, Hon. Ted, expression of sympathy on death of wife in plane crash, 301

Langlois, Hon. Léopold, Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate

- Agriculture Committee
 - Meetings during Senate sittings, 553, 749-50
- Appropriation bill No. 3, 1978-79 C-25, 346, 354
- Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee
 - Meetings during Senate sittings, 180, 200, 236, 254, 293, 306, 511, 553, 604, 658, 716
- Bankruptcy 1979 bill S-14, 678
- Banks and Banking Law Revision Income Tax, 683
- Borrowing Authority bill C-7, 239-40, 250, 251
- Constitution of Canada, Special Senate Committee
 - Meetings during Senate sittings, 48, 348
- Energy
 - Price agreement with Alberta respecting crude oil, 58
- Estimates
 - National Finance Committee, authority to make study, 562
- Estimates ref to National Finance Committee
 - Year ending Mar. 31/79, Supplementary (A), 171
 - Year ending Mar. 31/79, Supplementary (B), 657
- Foreign affairs
 - Canadian workers in Iran, safety of, 203

Langlois, Hon. Léopold, Deputy Leader of the Government in the Senate—concl'd

- Government Organization 1979 bill C-35, 758, 784, 787
- Great Lakes shipping, strike of engineers and deck officers, 61, 66
- Health Resources Fund bill C-2, 670, 671, 674, 686
- Health, Welfare and Science Committee
 - Meeting during Senate sitting, 315
- Judges Act and Certain Other Acts bill C-43, 668
- Labour
 - Comparative figures of OECD and International Labour Office, 204
 - Strikes, government action in reduction of, 181, 203-04
- Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee
 - Meetings during Senate sittings, 733, 749
- National Energy Board bill S-12, 614
- National Finance Committee
 - Meeting during Senate sitting, 658
- National Housing bill C-29, 796, 806
- Northern Pipeline, Special Senate Committee
 - Meetings during Senate sittings, 191, 254, 462, 501, 618
- Off-track betting, legalization of, 507, 508, 519, 535, 544
- Agriculture Minister, appearance before Senate, 519
 - Rule 18, request for Speaker's ruling, 519
- Criminal Code, 507
- Federal or provincial jurisdiction, 507
- Postal Services Continuation bill C-8, 37-38, 39
- Post Office
 - Disruption in service, 57, 58
 - Labour disputes, statement of Postmaster General re enforcing of law in, 66
- Quebec
 - Study of sovereignty association by Senate committee, 181
- Referendums and questions relating to the Constitution, 459
- Royal Canadian Mounted Police officers, visit of, 796-7
- Rules of the Senate
 - Suspension of Rules 44, 45 and 78, 393, 394, 395, 398, 401, 402, 403, 404-06
- St. Patrick's Day, tributes to St. Patrick and the Irish people, 775
- Senate
 - Alleged delay in consideration of Postal Services Continuation bill C-8, question of privilege, 58
 - Business, 57, 117, 150, 171-2, 200-02, 468, 492, 511-12, 604, 645, 646, 716, 774, 775, 796
 - Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, replacement for, 676
 - Research and secretarial services for senators, 182
- Shipping
 - St. Lawrence Seaway closing date, 202-03
- Shipping Conferences Exemption 1979 bill S-6, 513-14, 515, 528-9
- Speech from the Throne, error in translation, 173-4
- Sports
 - NHL, proposed merger with WHA, 752
- Transport and Communications Committee
 - Meeting during Senate sitting, 468
- Reports
 - Shipping Conferences Exemption 1979 bill S-6, rep with amdts, 513-14, 515
- Unemployment Insurance bill C-14, 421

Lapointe, Hon. Renaude, Speaker of the Senate

- Barre, Mr. Raymond, Prime Minister of French Republic and Mrs. Barre, 553
- Budget Speech, accommodation for senators in Senate gallery of House of Commons, 189
- Off-track betting
 - Ruling re point of order, 534

Lapointe, Hon. Renaude, Speaker of the Senate—concl'd

Parliament

Messages between Senate and House of Commons, Speaker's ruling on point of order re, 234, 271-2

Point of order, ruling re Health Resources Fund bill C-2, 682

Visitors

Spanish parliamentary delegation, 170

LeBlanc, Hon. Roméo A., P.C., Minister of Fisheries and the Environment

Government Organization 1979 bill C-35, 777, 778, 779-80, 781-2, 783, 784-5, 786-7, 788, 789, 790, 791

Danger to fisheries, 781

Fishing fleet build up and expansion, 779

Foreign presence in 200-mile zone, 780

International Law of the Sea Conference, 777

Salmon fishing by Indians, 778

Legal and Constitutional Affairs, Standing Senate Committee

Authority to examine and report upon subject matter of Bill C-9, 458-62

Meetings during Senate sittings, 732-3, 749, 807-08

Off-track betting

Motion to authorize committee to examine and report upon, 505-10, 515-19, 544-5

Motion in amendment, 515-16, 544-5

Speakers' ruling, 534

Reports

Fugitive Offenders bill S-9, rep with amds, 333, 391-2

J.H. Poitras & Son Ltd. bill S-8, rep with amds, 253, 267

Léger, Rt. Hon. Jules, His Excellency the Governor General of Canada

Speech from the Throne at Opening of Fourth Session of Thirtieth Parliament (read by Madam Léger), 1-4

Tributes to, 464

Legislation

Reintroduction of amending legislation (Bill C-60), 450

Lewis, Hon. P. Derek

Canadian Broadcasting Corporation

Canada Winter Games, national television coverage of, 717

Shipping Conferences Exemption 1979 bill S-6, 184-6

Definition of shipping conference, 184

Government investigations into conference practices, 184

Inspection and filing of documents, 185

Maintenance of office or agency in Canada, 185

Non-application of Combines Investigation Act, 184, 185

Offence and punishment, 185

Liberia

Income Tax Conventions bill S-2, 14

Library of Parliament, Standing Joint Committee

Members

Senate, 98

Report tabled, 561

Loto Canada

Grants to municipalities, provincial agreement, 634, 646-7

Loto Select Project, minister's statement on report re, 609-11, 633

Lucier, Hon. Paul

Yukon Shield of Arms, presentation to the Senate, 361

Macdonald, Hon. John M., Chief Opposition Whip in the Senate

Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 142-4

Macdonald, Hon. John M., Chief Opposition Whip in the Senate—concl'd

Energy Supplies Emergency bill C-42, 886

Combines Investigation Act, 886

Environmental affairs

Oil tanker spills, protection against, 819

Government Organization 1979 bill C-35, 783, 784

Squid, catching and marketing of, 783

Health Resources Fund bill C-2, 573, 574, 636-8

Discrimination against provinces, 637

Federal-provincial relations, 636-7

Federal restraint policy, 637

Monarchy, the, 142; Free Press article re, 142

Old Age Security bill C-5, 229-31

Costs of increase and effect on economy, 231

Senior Citizens Housing project, Nova Scotia, 230

Welfare repayments to qualify for accommodation, 230

Single pensioners, 230

Postal Services Continuation bill C-8, 40, 52

Public Service right to strike, 142-3

Halifax Chronicle-Herald article, 143

Negotiation period, 143

Tributes to colleagues and others, 142

Unemployment, 143-4

Macnaughton, Hon. Alan A., P.C., (Retired July 30/78)

Tributes, 90-91, 113, 123, 128

Malaysia

Income Tax Conventions bill S-2, 14, 103, 118

Manitoba

Agriculture

Salmonella infection by Manitoba cattlefeed, allegation of, 658-9

Canada Winter Games

CBC television coverage, 541, 678-81, 717, 740-1

Manning, Hon. Ernest C., P.C.

Economy, the

Canadian balance of payments, 686, 717-19

Foreign Exchange reserves, 495, 502-03

Federal-Provincial Conference of First Ministers

Public sessions, 496

National Defence

Military aircraft, selection of, 276-7, 317-18

Post Office, disruption in service, 102

Decertification of union, 102

Marchand, Hon. Jean, P.C.

Air Canada

Sale to private interests, suggestion of, 504, 541, 554, 592, 593

Constitution of Canada, 1st report of Special Senate Committee, 496-500

Task Force on Canadian Unity, report of, 496-500

Montreal Gazette, newspaper article, 497-8

Greene, Hon. J. J., P.C., the late, 85

Post Office, disruption in service, 118

Decertification of union, 118

Riel, Louis, possibility of posthumous pardon, 543

Marshall, Hon. Jack

Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 119-23

Aging

Government department, establishing of, 537-40

Air Canada

Applications for positions as stewards and stewardesses, 451, 463, 495

Bell Canada

Disconnecting of subscribers' telephone, 381, 411

Marshall, Hon. Jack—cont'd

- Canada-Newfoundland Field Exploration Program, 308
- Canadian Broadcasting Corporation
 - Canada Winter Games, national television coverage of, 541
 - Ombudsman* program, budget for, 543
- Constitution of Canada
 - Impact of by-election results on amending legislation, 140
- Employment and Immigration
 - Employment tax credit program, 568
- Energy
 - Newfoundland, power potential of Lower Churchill Falls, 554, 592-3
 - Oil and gas exploration permits for the Atlantic region, 648-50
- Energy Supplies Emergency bill C-42, 860, 861, 862
 - Alternative energy sources, 860
- Environmental affairs
 - Closure of weather stations in Newfoundland and Regina, 222-3
 - Oil tanker spills, protection against, 809, 819
- Fisheries
 - Canned mackerel, purchase program for, 412, 479
 - Fisheries and Oceans Dept., establishment of, 88, 223, 237
 - Fish, surplus offered to foreign countries, 480
 - Catches by foreign countries, 618-19, see appendix to Debates of Feb. 28/79
 - Magdalen Islands sealers, annual seal hunt, 504-05
 - Marine broadcasting, cut-back of, 25
- Newfoundland
 - Catches between Port Aux Basques and Cook's Harbour, 308-09, 479
 - Inshore squid fishery, 309, 479
 - Shrimp yield, 479-80
 - Research laboratory, Halifax, 25
 - Weather station, Gander, 25
- Foreign affairs
 - East coast fisheries, Canada-France agreement, 495, 512, 526, 593
 - Iran, safety of Canadian workers in, 203, 222, 342, 349-50, 492-3
 - Maritime boundaries, Canada-United States, 463-4, 495
 - Government Organization 1979 bill C-35, 763-7, 776-7, 778-9, 784, 785, 786, 787-8, 789
 - Fisheries and Oceans Research Advisory Council, 764, 784, 785
 - Fishing fleet build up and expansion, 779
 - Fishing industry build up, 765
 - Fishing resources, 764
 - Forest industry, 788
 - Representation of fishermen, 785
 - Salmon-lobster poaching, 777
 - Spruce budworm, 786
- Health and Welfare
 - Medicare program, 817-18
- Health Resources Fund bill C-2, 573
- Income tax
 - Garnisheeing of child tax credit, 476, 502
- Income Tax, Family Allowances bill C-10, 305-06
 - Committee meeting during Senate sitting, complaint re scheduling of, 305-06
- Indian Affairs and Northern Development
 - Gros Morne National Park, reductions, 719
 - Parks Canada scholarships, 719
- Industry, Trade and Commerce
 - Export Development Corporation, approval of loans to foreign countries, 721
- National Defence
 - Canadian Armed Forces Reserves, 412
 - Military aircraft, selection of, 277, 317-18

Marshall, Hon. Jack—cont'd

- National Housing bill C-29, 792-6, 797, 801, 802, 803
 - Canadian Home Insulation Program, 794
 - Native Improvement Program, 793, 794, 795, 801, 803
 - Non-profit and co-operative housing, 795
 - Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program, 793, 794, 795, 801
 - Rural and Native Housing Program, 793, 794, 802
- Newfoundland
 - Barra Cudina*, vessel missing off Newfoundland coast, 319, 385, 470
 - Boundary with Quebec, 817
 - By-election, effect on bill to abolish Senate, 140
 - Cutback and downgrading of rail and freight services, 319
 - Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe, inshore fishery, 308
 - Labrador Linerboard Mill Ltd., sale to Abitibi Price, 266, 272, 307-08, 319, 334, 363
 - Residential rehabilitation assistance program, 450-1
 - Sea and air freight service, 319, 462
- Seal hunt
 - Adverse publicity, U.S. congressional resolution, 810
 - Permit applications, 527, 659-60
 - Press article re boycott of travel to Canada by Americans, 306-07, 477, 527
 - Protest activities, 477, 527, 733
- Old Age Security bill C-5, 225-6
 - Income supplement, 225
 - Single pensioners, 224, 226
 - Newfoundland, 226
 - War veterans, 226
- Parliament
 - Supply of information to senators, point of order, 561, 564
- Public Works
 - Housing and urban affairs, responsibility for, 274, 295, 342, 478-9
 - Veterans, 295, 342
- Regional economic expansion
 - Canada-Newfoundland forestry subsidiary agreement, 811
- Remembrance Day
 - Newfoundland Post Office, contravention of federal Holiday Act and Newfoundland Remembrance Day Act, 154, 172, 173
 - Tribute to Canada's War Dead and War Veterans, 170-1
- Senate
 - Business, 891
 - Emergency sittings, notice to senators, 87
 - Investigative function of Senate, 120-3
 - Calgary Herald* article re, 122
 - Legislative and other areas of experience of senators vs Commons members, 120-2
 - Order paper, question on, 566
 - Privilege, question of
 - Criticisms by Commons members and article in Halifax Chronicle-Herald of Senate handling of Bill C-5, 217
 - Research and secretarial services for senators, 182, 183
 - Review of legislation; excerpt from speech of Sir John A. Macdonald, 120
 - Role of, 119-22
 - Shipping Conferences Exemption 1979 bill S-6, 252
 - Legislation governing liner conferences serving Canada*, 252
- Transport
 - Air Canada's AIRVELOP service, 450
- Tributes to colleagues and others, 119
- Unemployment Insurance bill C-14, 430-2
 - Canadian Labour Congress, representation before committee, 430
 - Labrador Linerboard Mill Ltd., 431
 - LEDA program, 431

Marshall, Hon. Jack—concl'd

Veterans affairs

- Assistance to distressed or needy veterans, 812-13
 - Canadian Pension Commission, proposed move, 528, 611, 647-8, 650
 - Canadian veterans outside Canada, 812
 - Ceremonies to mark 35th anniversary of D-Day, 238, 363
 - Children of War Dead (Education Assistance) Act, 813
 - Commonwealth War Graves Commission, 814-15
 - Domiciliary care for entitled veterans, 815-16
 - D.V.A. management meetings and Conference on Finance, results of, 412
 - Head office staff, 721
 - Hospital services, New Brunswick, 130, 282
 - Pension, Canadian Forces Long Service Pensioners' Association, 811-12
 - Pensioners' training, 812
 - Publications, 721, 834-5
 - Re-establishment credit, veterans eligible, 813
 - Relocation to Prince Edward Island, 722
 - Veterans hospitals and departmental homes, transfer of, 815
 - Veterans housing assistance program, 813-14
 - Veterans insurance benefits, 722
 - Victoria Cross, sale of, 833, 856
 - Widows of veterans, pensions, 236-7, 351
 - WVA/CWA applications, 813
- Youths and students
- 1977-78 programs in effect, 894

McDonald, Hon. A. Hamilton

- Energy Supplies Emergency bill C-42, 835-8, 847-8, 849-50, 853
 - Combines Investigation Act, 837
 - Emergency oil sharing system, 836, 838
 - Energy Supplies Allocation Board, 837
 - International Energy Agency, 838, 839
 - International energy program, 836
 - Mandatory allocation program, 837, 838, 840
 - Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, 836
 - Rationing program, 837, 838, 842
- Great Lakes shipping, strike of engineers and deck officers, 15
- North Atlantic Assembly, Twenty-fourth Annual Session, Lisbon, Portugal, 545-51, 578
 - Canadian Armed Forces, equipment, 549
 - Airfields and equipment, vulnerability, 549
 - Canadian delegation, 545-6
 - Foreign Affairs Committee, continuing study of defence, 550
 - NATO and Warsaw Pact, military strengths and defence budgets compared, 546-8
 - NATO, duplication of defence spending, 548-9
 - North America, threat to, 550
 - SALT agreement, 550
 - Weapons, technology and costs, 548
- Rules of the Senate
 - Suspension of Rules 44, 45 and 78, 402
- Selection Committee
 - Reports
 - Members of committees, 55-57

McDonald Royal Commission (Chairman, Hon. David C. McDonald)

- RCMP break-ins, permission of Solicitors General for, 89, 103
- Solicitors, payment of, 155, 341-2

McElman, Hon. Charles

- Health Resources Fund bill C-2, 672-3
- Referendums and questions relating to the Constitution, 461
- Unemployment Insurance bill C-14, 433, 437, 438, 444, 445

McGrand, Hon. Fred A.

- Health, Welfare and Science Committee
 - Reports
 - Old Age Security bill C-5, rep without amdt, 231

McIlraith, Hon. George J., P.C.

- Bank Act and Quebec Savings Banks bill C-49, 853, 854
- Canada Non-Profit Corporations bill S-4, 150, 151
 - History of legislation, 150
 - Senate amendments incorporated, 150
- Energy
 - Federal government, power to act unilaterally, 606
- Fugitive Offenders bill S-9, 267-9, 270, 299-300, 358, 365-6, 376
 - Commonwealth Law Conference 1966, 268
 - "Scheme Relating to the Rendition of Fugitive Offenders within the Commonwealth", 268
 - History of legislation, 267-8
 - Ministerial discretion, 365
 - Offence of a political nature, 358
 - Offences covered and not covered, 268
 - Onus on applicant in bail application, 268-9
 - Returnable offence, 268
- Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, motion to appoint nominating committee, 770
- Health Resources Fund bill C-2, 669, 672
- J. H. Poitras & Son Ltd. bill S-8, 205, 267, 277
- Judges (annuity to Hon. Mr. Justice Donald Raymond Morand) bill C-33, 388
- McDonald Royal Commission
 - RCMP break-ins, permission of Solicitors General for, 89, 103
- Point of order
 - Question period, information asked during, 606, 607
- Postal Services Continuation bill C-8, 20, 23, 26-27, 29, 34
 - Canadian Union of Postal Workers, history of contract negotiations and conciliation proceedings, 26
 - Labour Relations in the Public Service, recommendations of joint committee, 27
 - Mediator-arbitrator, appointment of, 27
 - Public Service Staff Relations Act, 34
- Regulations and other Statutory Instruments Committee
 - 5th report re Statutory Instruments No.6, 623, 624
- Shipping Continuation 1979 bill C-11, 77-78, 81-82
 - Arbitrator, 78
 - Canadian Lake Carriers Assoc., 78
 - Crime by association, 82
 - Economic effects of strike action, 77-78
 - Term of collective agreement, 78
- Sports
 - NHL, request that Edmonton, Winnipeg and Quebec City be admitted to, motion proposed, 830, 831

Meir, Golda, Prime Minister of Israel, the late

- Canadian representatives at funeral services, 343, 357-8

Metric conversion

- Statute Law (Metric Conversion) bill S-10, 293, 309-10, 322-3, 343-5, 363-6

Minutes of the Proceedings

- Question of privilege re spelling of name (Senator J. J. Greene), 57, see Journals of the Senate

Molgat, Hon. Gildas L.

- Beef Import bill S-13, 636, 651-2
- Stabilization, need for, 651

Molgat, Hon. Gildas L.—concl'd

Inter-Parliamentary Union Conference, Bonn, West Germany, 205-09

Bloc voting, 206

United Nations proposals, 206

National Housing bill C-29, 759-60, 799-800, 806

CMHC, insurance of loans for land acquisition and service, 760

Graduated payment mortgage, 759, 760

NHA insurance, extensions to, 759

Private investment in housing, encouragement of, 760

Newfoundland

Seal hunt protest activities, permit applications, 660

Statute Law (Metric Conversion) bill S-10, 309-10

Molson, Hon. Hartland de M.

Constitution of Canada, 1st report of Special Senate Committee, 192-5

Senate

Absenteeism of senators, 195

Appointments, method of, 192, 193, 195

Criticisms by media, MPs and others, 192

Internal reforms, 194-5

Retirement age, 195

Role of, 192

Special Senate Committee to investigate and report on role of Senate, 194

Statement of Chairman Senator Lang, 194

Statements of Sir John A. Macdonald, Senator Arthur

Roebuck, Senator Paul Martin and Rt. Hon. Arthur

Meighen, 193, 195

Suspensive veto, 195

Estimates year ending Mar.31/79, Supplementary (B), 739

Government Organization 1979 bill C-35, 778

Off-track betting, legalization of, 508

National lottery advertising, 508

Postal Services Continuation bill C-8, 48-49

Sports

Grants to municipalities, National Hockey League franchises, 501-02, 752-3

Provincial agreement, 610-11

Transportation

Landing rights of Canadian and British airlines, 237, 317

Morand, Hon. Mr. Justice Donald Raymond, annuity to, 375, 386-90, 393, 446

National Capital Region, Special Joint Committee

Reconstitution of Special Joint Committee, 155, 273-4

National Defence

Canadian Armed Forces Reserves, 412

Military aircraft, selection of, 276-7

National Energy Board

Compensation, proposed methods of, 597

Expropriation Act, 595, 596, 598, 613

Five year review, 597, 600

Law Commission of Canada, 595

Long term damage to land, 597, 599

Market value, 600, 613

Northern Pipeline Act, 596

Proposed arbitration procedure, 596, 598, 600

Railway Act, 595, 596, 599-600

Rights of pipeline companies, 596

Speakers: Senators

Bosa, Peter, 598-9

Flynn, Jacques, 601, 602, 611, 612-13, 762-3

Godfrey, John Morrow, 599

Goldenberg, H. Carl, 613

Grosart, Allister, 757

Langlois, Léopold, 614

National Energy Board—concl'd

Speakers: Senators—concl'd

Olson, H. A., 595-8, 599, 601-02, 611-12, 614-15, 714-15, 755-7, 763

Rowe, Frederick W., 598

Smith, G. I., 599-601, 613-14

National Energy Board bill S-12. 1r, 541; 2r, 595-602, 611-12; ref to com, 612-15; rep with amdts, 714-15, 755-7, 762-3; 3r, 763

National Finance, Senate Standing Committee

Estimates, authority to make study, 562

Estimates ref to com

Year ending Mar.31/79

Supplementary (A), 171; rep of com, 254, 261-5, 270, 279-80

Year ending Mar.31/79

Supplementary (B), 657; rep of com, 715-16, 722-3, 737-40

Expenses, 140, see Journals of the Senate

Meeting during Senate sitting, 658

Public Works Department, Accommodation Program, authority to review recommendations, 762

Regional Economic Expansion, authority to examine and report on estimates of dept., 149

Reports

Borrowing Authority bill C-7, rep without amdt, 253

Estimates year ending Mar.31/79, Supplementary (A), 254, 261-4, 270, 279-80

Estimates year ending Mar.31/79, Supplementary (B), 715-16, 722-3, 737-40

Terms of reference, 149

National housing

Assisted Home Ownership Plan, 797, 799

Canadian Home Insulation Program, 794

CMHC, insurance of loans for land acquisition and service, 760

Graduated payment mortgage, 759, 760, 797, 804

Speakers: Senators

Grosart, Allister, 760-1, 800, 804-05, 806

Langlois, Léopold, 796, 806

Marshall, Jack, 792-6, 797, 801, 802, 803

Molgat, Gildas L., 759-60, 799-800, 806

Neiman, Joan, 801-06 (Chairman, Committee of the Whole)

Phillips, Orville H., 797-8, 799, 804

Steuart, D. G., 798, 799, 800, 803

also

Ouellet, Hon. André, P.C., Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Urban Affairs, 801-02, 803-04, 805

National Housing Act, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation

bill C-29. 1r, 744; 2r, 759-61, 792-6, 797-806, ref to Committee of the Whole, 800; considered in Committee of the Whole, Hon. Joan Neiman in the Chair, Hon. André Ouellet, P.C., Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Urban Affairs taking part in debate, 801-06; rep without amdt, 806; 3r, 806; r.a., 807

National revenue

Charitable institutions, tax deductions, 222

Tax rebate discounting, 191-2, 204-05

National unity, 11, 59-61, 95, 108-09, 125, 147

Ethnic differences, 109

Media role, 60, 61; excerpt from speeches of Russian author in exile re power of journalists, 60-61

National and individual attitudes and outlook, 59-61

Negative attitudes 146-7; media criticisms, 147

Quebec separatists, 108-09

Neiman, Hon. Joan

- Energy Supplies Emergency 1979 bill C-42, (Chairman, Committee of the Whole), 857-89
- Government Organization 1979 bill C-35, (Chairman, Committee of the Whole), 776-92
- Inter-Parliamentary Union Conference, Bonn, West Germany, 338-9
 - History of Union, 338
 - Imprisonment of parliamentarians, 339
- National Housing bill C-29, (Chairman, Committee of the Whole), 801-06

Newfoundland and Labrador

- Barra Cudina*, vessel missing off Newfoundland coast, 319, 385, 470
- Boundary with Quebec, 817
- Canada-Newfoundland Field Exploration Program, 308
- Fisheries
 - Catches between Port Aux Basques and Cook's Harbour, 308-09, 479
 - Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe, inshore fishery, 308
 - Inshore squid fishery, 309, 479
 - Shrimp yield, 479-80
- Gros Morne National Park, reductions by Indian Affairs and Northern Development, 719
- Iran, safety of Canadian workers in, 203
- Labrador Linerboard Mill Ltd., sale to Abitibi Price, 266, 272, 307-08, 319, 334, 363
- Lower Churchill Falls, power potential of, 554, 592-3
- Post Office contravention of Holidays Act and Newfoundland Remembrance Day Act, 154, 172
- Queen Elizabeth's visit in 1977, 113
- Rail freight services, cutback and downgrading of, 319
- Regional economic expansion
 - Canada-Newfoundland forestry subsidiary agreement, 811
- Residential rehabilitation assistance program, 450-1
- Sea and air freight service, 319, 462
- Seal hunt
 - Adverse publicity, 750, 810
 - U.S. congressional resolution, 810
 - Permit applications, 527, 659-60
 - Press article re boycott of travel to Canada by Americans, 306-07
 - Protest activities, 477, 527, 733
- Smallwood, Hon. Joseph R., former Premier, visit to Senate, 657
- Weather station closing, 89, 222-3

Newspapers, periodicals, speeches, interviews, etc., excerpts from

- Chronicle-Herald* article re Public Service right to strike, 148
- Free Press* article re the Monarchy, 142
- Globe & Mail* article "Farmers win oil pipeline damage suit", by Rudy Platiel, 473
- Ottawa Journal*, "Senators wouldn't rush", article re Senate consideration of Postal Services Continuation bill C-8, 58

Non-profit corporations

- Canada Non-Profit Corporations bill S-4, 14, 150-1, 234-5, 259

Norrie, Hon. Margaret

- Air Canada
 - Moncton airport, telephone service, 676-7
- Bell Canada
 - Iran, ownership of controlling interest, 464, 494

North Atlantic Assembly, Twenty-fourth Annual Session, Lisbon, Portugal, 545-52, 574-8, 653-5

- Belgrade Conference, 575, 576, 577
- Canadian Armed Forces, airfields and equipment, vulnerability, 549

North Atlantic Assembly—concl'd

- Canadian Parliamentary Helsinki Group, 577
- Committees, Standing Senate
 - Authority to study subjects within areas of concern, 551-3
 - Foreign Affairs Committee, authority to study defence and international agreements, 550-1
- Final Act of Helsinki, CSCE, 574, 575, 576
- Freedom of press and information, 577
- Marine pollution, control of, 654
- National defence, 654
- NATO and Warsaw Pact, military strengths and defence budgets compared, 546-8
- North America, threat to, 550
- Nuclear fuel supply, maintenance of, 654
- Ocean management, impact of advanced technology on, 654
- Prerogative of the Crown, theory of, 552
- SALT agreement, 550-1
- USSR defence budget, 575
- Weapons, technology and costs, 548
- Speakers: Senators
 - Bosa, Peter, 578
 - Grosart, Allister, 551-2
 - Lafond, Paul C., 653-5
 - McDonald, A. Hamilton, 545-51, 578
 - Yuzyk, Paul, 574-7, 578

Northern pipeline

- Arctic gas, guarantees from companies, 379
- Expropriation, 472-4
 - Compensation, 473-4
 - Legal costs, recovery of, 474
 - National Energy Board Act, amendment required, 472, 474
- Globe & Mail* article "Farmers win oil pipeline damage suit", by Rudy Platiel, 473

Northern Pipeline, Special Senate Committee

- Appointment, 7
- Expenses, 152, see Journals of the Senate
- Meetings during Senate sittings, 191, 254, 462, 501, 618
- Reports
 - 1st report, 315, 329-30, 376-80, 472-4, 545
- Terms of reference, 7, 165-6

Northwest Territories

- Increase in membership of Northwest Territories Council, 735
- Native cultures, 735
- Speakers: Senators
 - Adams, Willie, 735-6
 - Yuzyk, Paul, 753-4

Northwest Territories bill C-28. 1r, 725; 2r, 735-6, 753-4; 3r, 762; r.a., 762Nova Scotia

- Coal industry, 144-5; Donkin bloc, 144-5
- Crude oil supply, Imperial Oil Refinery, Dartmouth, 542, 554, 556-7, 565
- Fisheries, 145; closing of Halifax research laboratory, 124-5, 140, 145, 147, 148, 449
- Fundy tidal power, 145
- Revenues from fishing industry, 125
- Senior Citizens Housing project, 230
- Steel industry, 145

Official Languages

- Bilingual education in provinces, cut in grants, 855

Official Languages—concl'd

- Bilingual public servant bonus, 855-6
- Report of Commissioner tabled, 561

Off-track betting, legalization of

- Agriculture Department, control of betting, 506, 508
 - Minister's statement, 733-4, 750-1
- Canadian breeding industry, 505
- Criminal Code, 507
- Gambling, advertising of, 509
- Home marketing areas, 505, 506
- Illegal betting, 506
- Illegal messenger service, 505
- National lottery advertising, 508
- Pari-mutuel betting, 505, 508
- Provincial or federal responsibility, 506, 507
- Rural fairs, 508

Speakers: Senators

- Argue, Hazen, 536, 537
- Asselin, Martial, 508, 509-10, 518, 519
- Flynn, Jacques, 515, 516, 519, 534, 535, 536, 733
- Goldenberg, H. Carl, 507-08, 510
- Grosart, Allister, 506-07, 517, 518, 519, 535-6, 537
- Hicks, Henry D., 507
- Langlois, Léopold, 507, 508, 519, 535, 544
- Molson, Hartland de M., 508
- Olson, H. A., 518
- Perrault, Raymond J., 505-06, 515, 516-18, 733-4, 750, 751
- Petten, William J., 537, 544, 545
- Riley, Daniel A., 506, 508-09, 510, 537
- Robichaud, Louis J., 469, 508, 518-19, 534
- Rowe, Frederick W., 509
- Sparrow, Herbert, O., 515-16, 750-1
- van Roggen, George, 536
- Walker, David, 507
- Williams, Guy, 509

Oil and gas, see EnergyOld age security

- Background of old age security payments, 224, 227
- Cost of increase and effect on economy, 225, 231
- Divorced, diseased, disabled and deserted persons, needs of, 229
- Effective date of increase, 225
- Income supplement, 224, 225
- Integration of Social Payments into the Income Tax System*, budget paper, 229
- Power available to elderly persons, 228-9
- Research and recommendations of Senate Committee on Aging and on Poverty, 227-8
- Senior Citizens Housing project, Nova Scotia, 230
 - Welfare repayments to qualify for accommodation, 230
- Single pensioners, 224, 226, 230
 - Newfoundland, 226
 - War veterans, 226, 227, 228, 230
- Six months' allowance for spouse of deceased pensioner, 224-6

Speakers: Senators

- Croll, David A., 226-9
- Haidasz, Stanley, 223-5
- Macdonald, John M., 229-31
- Marshall, Jack, 225-6

Old Age Security bill C-5. 1r, 214; 2r, 223-31; ref to com, 231; rep without amdt but with recommendation re clause 2, 231; 3r, 231; r.a., 232

Olson, Hon. H. A., P. C.

Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 61-64

Agriculture

- Beef imports from hoof and mouth disease areas, 274, 449
- Feed grain prices, 203, 237
- International cooperation in marketing of grains, 290-1
- Two-price system for wheat, subsidy to millers, bread prices, 283

Constitution of Canada, 61-62

- Evolutionary aspect of the constitutional process, 62

Consumer and corporate affairs

- Chartered banks, increase in profits, 296

Economic conditions and prospects, 62-64

- Austerity measures, 62
- Dollar devaluation, 63
- Foreign investment and effect of, 63; borrowings from US, 63-64

Energy

- Northern Pipeline, major change in procurement policy, 818, 834
- Price agreement with Alberta respecting crude oil, 25, 58, 102, 129-30, 244, 272, 294-5, 316
 - Elements examined in discussions on expanding gas markets in Canada, 316

Energy Supplies Emergency bill C-42, 605, 633-4, 850-1

- Prior consultation with provinces, 633-4, 684-5

Federal-Provincial Conference of First Ministers

- Natural resources revenue, 542, 563
- Patriation of the Constitution, 512, 562-3

Foreign affairs

- Egypt-Israel peace treaty, 154
- Jonestown, Guyana, mass murder and suicide at the commune of the People's Temple, 238, 243, 266-7

Government Organization 1979 bill C-35, 790Grain

- Delivery to export positions, 449, 493
- Initial prairie prices, 496, 593
- Great Lakes shipping, effect of Shipping Continuation Act, 102, 118, 129

Labour-management problems, 63National and individual attitudes and outlook, 63*National Energy Board bill S-12, 595-8, 599, 601-02, 611-12, 614-15, 714-15, 755-7, 763

- Compensation, proposed methods of, 597
- Expropriation Act of Canada, 595, 596, 598
- Five year review, 597
- Law Reform Commission of Canada, 595
- Long term damage to land, 597, 599
- Northern Pipeline Act, 596
- Proposed arbitration procedure, 596, 598
- Railway Act, 595, 596
- Rights of pipeline companies, 596

National revenue

- Charitable institutions, tax deductions, 222

Northern Pipeline, Special Senate Committee

- Appointment, 7
- Expenses, 152, see Journals of the Senate
- Meetings during Senate sittings, 191, 254, 462, 618
- Reports

- 1st report, 315, 329-30, 360, 376-80

- Terms of reference, 7, 165-6

Off-track betting, legalization of, 518

- Agriculture Minister, appearance before Senate, 518

Post Office

- Disruption in service, 57

SenatePrivilege, question of

- Criticisms by Commons members of Senate handling of Bill C-5, 217-18, 219, 220

Social policies, 62

Olson, Hon. H. A., P. C.—concl'd

- Task Force on Canadian Unity
- Terms of reference, 477, 478
- Transport
- Air fares within Canada, reduction in, 357, 383, 448

Opening of Parliament

- Communication from Governor General's Secretary, 1
- Speech from the Throne by His Excellency the Governor General, (read by Madam Léger), 1-4
- See Address in reply to Speech from the Throne

Orders and Customs of the Senate and Privileges of Parliament Committee

- Appointment, 5

Ouellet, Hon. André, P.C., Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Urban Affairs

- National Housing bill C-29, 801-02, 803-04, 805
- Graduated payment mortgage, 804
- Non-profit housing program, 804
- Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program, 801

Ouellet, Hon. André, P.C., Minister of State for Urban Affairs and Acting Minister of Labour

- Postal Services Continuation bill C-8, 35-41, 49-53
- Dispute, history of, 38
- Mediator-arbitrator, 49-51
- Postal workers salaries and job classifications, 38-39
- Public Service Staff Relations Act, 50, 51, 52

Paquette, Alcide, Assistant Clerk of the Senate

- Retirement of, tributes, 456-7

Parliament

- Cabinet changes, 267
- Hansard*, official report, price increase, 632, 717, 833-4
- Lapel pins, distribution to members of House of Commons, 751
- Messages between Senate and House of Commons, point of order, 234
- Speaker's ruling re, 271-2
- Supply of information to senators, 561, 564

Parliament Buildings

- Royal William*, removal of commemorative plaque, 526

Pensions

- Special Interdepartmental Task Force, report of, 750

Perrault, Hon. Raymond J., P.C., Leader of the Government in the Senate

- Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 42-48
- Addresses at installation to office of the Governor General of Canada, see appendix of Jan. 23/79
- Agriculture
 - Government grain elevators, purchase of, 284, 384
 - International wheat agreement, 554, 734
 - Salmonella infection by Manitoba cattlefeed, allegation, 658-9
 - Two-price system for wheat, subsidy to millers, bread prices, 281, 283-4, 296
- Agriculture Department request for study of off-track betting by Senate, 469
- Air Canada
 - Applications for positions as stewards and stewardesses, 451, 463, 495

Perrault, Hon. Raymond J., P.C., Leader of the Government in the Senate—cont'd

- Air Canada—concl'd
 - Functions of Chairman and President, 385, 503-04
 - London, England, terminus change from Heathrow to Gatwick, 717
 - Moncton airport, telephone service, 676-7
 - Reduced fare marketing program, 834
 - Regulations issued by Canadian Transport Commission, 362
 - Sale to private interests, 504, 541, 554, 592, 593
- Automotive industry, Reisman report on, 350, 494
- Bell Canada
 - Disconnecting of subscribers' telephone, 381, 411
- Borrowing Authority bill C-7, 251
- Bourget, Hon. Maurice, P.C., felicitations on return to chamber, 450
- British Columbia
 - Flood damage, assistance from Disaster Financial Assistance Program, 155
- Cabinet, the, meetings in Toronto, 605
- Canada Elections Act, change in writ of election 157, 244
- Canada Labour Code, commitment by government leader re representations before Senate Committee, 180-1, 238, 283, 351-2
- Canadian Broadcasting Corporation
 - Canada Winter Games, national television coverage of, 541, 717
 - Ombudsman* program, budget for, 543
- Canadian National Railways, rumour re private sector takeover, 273, 463
- Constitution of Canada
 - Bill to abolish Senate, effect of by-election on, 140
 - Excerpt from speech of Rt. Hon. John Diefenbaker, 45-46
 - House of the Federation, proposal for, 130
 - Impact of by-election results on amending legislation, 15, 140
 - Reintroduction of amending legislation, 450
 - Role of the Monarchy and the Governor General, 45
- Senate
 - Government intention re future of Senate, 154, 167, 172, 173
- Senate reform
 - Regional appointments of senators with significant background and experience, 47
 - Role in formulating legislation and in committee work, 46-47
- Constitution of Canada, Special Joint Committee
 - Reconstitution of, 155, 341
- Consumer and Corporate Affairs
 - Beef imports from hoof and mouth disease areas, 274, 449
 - Bread, increase in prices and subsidy to consumers, 297
 - Chartered banks, increase in profits, 296
 - Food industry, discounting and allowances in, 557
 - Manufactured goods, increase in prices, 296
- Economic conditions and prospects, 42-44, 47-48
 - Business productivity, research and development, 44
 - Government restraints, 43-44
 - Income average for Canadians, 42
 - Inflation, 47-48
 - International trade and investments, 43
 - Job creation, 42, 43
 - Organization of Economic Co-operation and Development, 42, 43
 - Tax and social security deductions, 43
 - Other countries, 43
- Tourism, 42-43
- Economy, the
 - Canadian balance of payments, 686, 717-19
 - Food prices, increase in, 542, 543
 - Foreign exchange controls, 476, 493

Perrault, Hon. Raymond J., P.C., Leader of the Government in the Senate—cont'd

Economy, the—concl'd

Foreign exchange reserves, 495, 502-03

Canada's official international reserves, January 31, 1979, statement, 503

National Commission on Inflation, terms of reference and reporting procedures, 678, 734-5, see appendix p. 742

Employment and Immigration

Employment tax credit program, 568

Energy

Federal government, power to act unilaterally, 605, 606, 633

Fuel for motor vehicles, 819

Gas pipeline from Montreal to points east, 542, 565-6

International Energy Agency, 554, 557, 565, 607-08, 633, 634, 684, 686, 762

Supply of oil in Atlantic Canada, 686, 762

International oil supply, statement by minister, 555-6

National Energy Board report, 834

Newfoundland, power potential of Lower Churchill Falls, 554, 592-3

Northern Pipeline, major change in procurement policy, 818, 834

Nuclear fusion research project, proposed, 810

Oil and gas exploration permits for the Atlantic region, 648-50

Price agreement with Alberta respecting crude oil, 25, 102, 129-30, 244, 272, 294-5, 316

Elements examined in discussions on expanding gas markets in Canada, 316

Strategic oil reserves, 567-8, 633, 684

Supply of crude oil to Imperial Oil refineries in Canada, 542, 554, 556-7, 565

United States crude oil inventories, 557, 565

Energy Supplies Emergency bill C-42, 604, 605, 844, 845, 889

Consultation with provinces prior to introduction of bill, 604, 605, 632-3, 633-4, 684-5

Environmental affairs

Closure of Regina weather station, 25-26, 89, 222-3

Oil tanker spills, protection against, 809, 818-20

Federal-Provincial Conference of First Ministers

Equalization formula, 512, 563

Jurisdiction over family law, 512, 563-4, see appendix to Debates of Feb.20/79

Natural resources revenue, 542, 563

Patriation of the Constitution, 512, 562-3

Public session, 495

Senators as observers, 468, 493

Federal-provincial powers, 44-45

Fisheries

Canned mackerel, purchase program for, 412, 479

Fisheries and Oceans Dept., title of, 88, 223, 237

Fish, surplus of, offered to foreign countries, 480

Foreign countries, catches by, see appendix to Debates of Feb.27/79

Magdalen Islands sealers, annual seal hunt, 504-05

Marine broadcasting, cut-back of, 25

Newfoundland shrimp yield, 479-80

Research laboratory, Halifax, 25-26, 140, 449

Weather station, Gander, 25

Foreign affairs

Canada-US relations

Appearance of Secretary of State for External Affairs before committee during discussion of report, 274

China and Vietnam, Canadian policy respecting hostilities, 618, 646, 659, 734

Cossette-Trudels, kidnappers of UK trade commissioner, return to Canada, 307, 315, 350

East coast fisheries, Canada-France agreement, 495, 512, 526, 593

Perrault, Hon. Raymond J., P.C., Leader of the Government in the Senate—cont'd

Foreign affairs—concl'd

Egypt-Israel peace treaty, 154, 266

Signing of, 856

United Nations Peacekeeping Force, 894

Halibut fishing industry, interim agreement between Canada-United States, 463-4, 495, 567

Iran

Oil imports to Eastern Canada, effect of political situation on, 357, 385, 393

Ownership of controlling interest of Bell Canada, 464, 494

Safety of Canadian workers in, 203, 222, 342, 349-50, 492-3

Jonestown, Guyana, mass murder and suicide at the commune of the People's Temple, 238, 243, 266-7

Meir, Golda, former Prime Minister of Israel, the late, 343, 357-8

Namibia, Canadian Forces contingent to, 357

Prime Minister's visit to United Kingdom, 274-5

Sanctions against Rhodesia and South Africa, 382, 383, 386, 493-4

US Secretary of State visit to Canada, discussions agenda

Beaufort Sea-Dixon Entrance boundaries, 256, 282

Maritime boundaries Canada-United States, 256, 282, 463-4, 495

Northern Pipeline, 239, 267

Forestry service

Dutch Elm disease, 384

Winnipeg office, closing of, 307, 383

Fugitive Offenders bill S-9, 298, 358

Gas pipeline from Montreal to points east, extension of, 542

Government annuities, increase in interest rate, 501, 648

Government Organization 1979 bill C-35, 732

Governor General, addresses at installation of the Rt. Hon. Edward Richard Schreyer, P.C., 447

Grain

Delivery to export positions, 449, 493

Hopper cars, purchase of, 527, 685

Initial prairie prices, 496, 593

Great Lakes shipping, effect of Shipping Continuation Act, 102, 118, 129

Great Lakes shipping, strike of engineers and deck officers, 15-16, 25, 129

Greene, Hon. J. J., P.C., the late, 77, 83-84

Health and welfare

Hospital charges in Ontario, compatibility with federal legislation, 541-2, 775

Medicare program, 817-18

Physicians in Nova Scotia, compensation for, 818

Health Resources Fund bill C-2, 691-3, 700, 701, 702, 703, 706, 707, 708, 712, 713, 716, 717

Recommendations of Health, Welfare and Science Committee, 762, 856

Income tax

Deduction for small businesses, 362

Garnisheeing of child tax credit, 476, 502

Income Tax, Family Allowances bill C-10, 305

Indian affairs

Health and environmental conditions, 462

Infant deaths on northern Alberta reserves, 677

Indian Affairs and Northern Development

Gros Morne National Park, reductions, 719

Parks Canada scholarships, 719

Industry, Trade and Commerce

Export Development Corporation, approval of loans to foreign countries, 721

France, export and imports, 719-20

West Germany, exports and imports, 720-1

Perrault, Hon. Raymond J., P.C., Leader of the Government in the Senate—cont'd

Inflation

Rate of inflation before and after instigation of anti-inflation program, 156-7, 166-7

Judges Act and Certain Other Acts bill C-43, 657

Justice administration

McDonald Royal Commission, payment to solicitors appearing before commission, 155, 341

Labour

Comparative figures of OECD and International Labour Office, 204, 222, 233

Labour Gazette, removal of requirement to publish, 526, 659, 685-6

Loto Canada

Minister's statement on report relating to, 609, 610, 633

Macnaughton, Hon. Alan A., P.C., tributes on occasion of retirement, 128

McDonald Royal Commission

RCMP break-ins, permission of Solicitors General for, 89, 103

Meir, Golda, Prime Minister of Israel, the late, 343, 357-8

National Capital Region

Reconstitution of Special Joint Committee, 155, 273-4

National Defence

Canadian Armed Forces Reserves, 412

Military aircraft, selection of, 276, 277

Newfoundland

Barra Cudina, vessel missing off Newfoundland coast, 319, 385, 470

Boundary with Quebec, 817

Inshore squid fishery, 309, 479

Labrador Linerboard Mill Ltd., sale to Abitibi Price, 266, 272, 307-08, 319, 334, 363

Rail freight services, cutback and downgrading of, 319

Seal hunt

Adverse publicity, 750, 810

U.S. congressional resolution, 810

Permit applications, 527, 659-60

Press article re boycott of travel to Canada by Americans, 306-07, 477, 527

Protest activities, 477, 527, 733

Official Languages

Bilingual education in provinces, cut in grants, 855

Bilingual public servant bonus, 855-6

Off-track betting

Motion to authorize Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee to report upon, 505-06, 515, 516-18

Agriculture Minister, appearance before Senate, 516-17

Statement of, 733-4, 750, 751

Canadian breeding industry, 505

Home marketing areas, 505, 506

Illegal betting, 506

Illegal messenger service, 505

Pari-mutuel betting, 505

Provincial or federal responsibility, 506

Paquette, Alcide, Assistant Clerk of the Senate, tributes on retirement, 456

Parliament

Hansard, official report, price increase, 632, 717, 833-4

Lapel pins, distribution to members of House of Commons, 751

Supply of information to senators, 564

Parliament Buildings

Royal William, removal of commemorative plaque, 526

Pensions

Special Interdepartmental Task Force, report of, 750

Point of order

Question period, information asked during, 607

Perrault, Hon. Raymond J., P.C., Leader of the Government in the Senate—cont'd

Postal Services Continuation bill C-8, 20-21, 22, 23

Post Office

Increase in postal rates, 244, 315-16

Second Class Mail Regulations, 834

Post Office, disruption in service, 87-88, 96, 97, 102, 109, 110, 117-18

Communists among Post Office union leaders, 118

Criminal charges against CUPW president and colleagues, 117-18

Decertification of union, 118

Defiance of back-to-work legislation, 88, 110

Intimidation of workers defying picket lines, 88, 109

Public Service Employment Act, Article XXVII re absenteeism, 109, 110, 118

Working hours, 102

Public Service

Employment of immigrants, 829

Public Works

Housing and urban affairs, responsibility for, 274, 295, 478-9

Referendums and questions relating to the Constitution, 459, 461

Regional economic expansion

Canada-Newfoundland forestry subsidiary agreement, 811

Remembrance Day

Newfoundland Post Office contravention of federal Holidays Act and Newfoundland Remembrance Day Act, 154, 172, 173

Tribute to Canada's War Dead and War Veterans, 170

Riel, Louis, possibility of posthumous pardon, 543

Rules of the Senate

Oral questions, response by senator who is minister of the Crown, 237

Suspension of Rules 44, 45 and 78, 396-7, 401, 809, 810, 827, 828

Schreyer, Edward Richard, appointment to office of Governor General as of January 1979, 333

Addresses at installation to office of Governor General of Canada, see appendix to Debates of Jan. 23/79

Senate

Adjournments

Christmas, 446

Business, 15, 20, 24-25, 41, 450, 646, 890, 891

Clerestory windows of chamber, 818

Emergency sittings, notice to senators, 86, 87

Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, replacement for, 166

Information publications, circulation of, 342-3

Media coverage of question of privilege, 238, 243-4

Monday sittings, 272-3

Order paper, questions on, 566

Printing errors in official records, 356-7, 384

Privilege, question of

Criticisms by Commons members of Senate handling of Bill C-5, 216-17, 219

Reform

Suggestions by senators, 363

Sinclair Commission, report of, 469-70, 503

Fish processing at sea, 503

Social insurance numbers

Penalty for non-use when cashing interest or dividend payments, 283, 316-17, 318, 381-2, 383, 385, 471

Proposed study of use, 496

Requirement for domestic air charter bookings, 362-3, 471-2

Use on mail to armed forces, 284, 295, 363, 471, 478, 494, 512

Sports

Grants to municipalities, National Hockey League franchises, 501-02, 633, 634, 647, 752-3

Perrault, Hon. Raymond J., P.C., Leader of the Government in the Senate—cont'd

- Sports—concl'd
 - Grants to municipalities—concl'd
 - Provincial agreement, 610-11, 634, 646-7, 752-3
 - NHL All-Star Team, defeat of in international competition, 527-8
 - NHL, proposed merger with WHA, 751-2, 830, 832
 - Request that Edmonton, Winnipeg and Quebec City be admitted to, motion proposed, 830, 832
- Statistics Canada
 - Cost-of-living index, 566, 593, 605
 - Officials appearing before Senate committee, 605
 - Senate proceedings, media report of, 609
- Student loans, newspaper article re defaulting of repayments, 238, 448-9
- Task Force on Canadian Unity, 469, 470, 477-8, 562, 567
 - Implementation of recommendations, 477-8
 - Recommendations respecting Parliament, 470
 - Report, tabling of, 469
 - Terms of reference, 477-9
- Trademark 1979 bill S-11, 835
- Transport
 - Air Canada, functions of Chairman and President, 385, 503-04
 - Air fares within Canada, reduction in, 357, 383, 448
 - British Columbia Railway, report of McKenzie Royal Commission on, 357
 - Landing rights of Canadian and British airlines, 237, 317
 - Motor vehicle safety, tire pressure survey, 350, 462, 470
 - Newfoundland, sea and air freight service, 319, 462
 - Train service between New Brunswick and Montreal, 297, 447-8
- VIA Rail
 - Baggage checking, 450
 - Compensation to CNR and CPR for their existing facilities, 504
 - Equipment purchased by VIA Rail from CNR, 504
 - Policies of, 274-5, 448, 449
 - Winnipeg Sherbrooke-MacGregor Overpass, 274, 383-4
- Unemployment Insurance bill C-14, 421, 428
- United Nations
 - Human Rights Declaration, 30th anniversary of, 340
- Veterans affairs
 - Assistance to distressed or needy veterans, 812-13
 - Canadian Pension Commission, proposed move, 528, 611, 647-8
 - Canadian veterans outside Canada, 812
 - Ceremonies to mark 35th anniversary of D-Day, 238, 363
 - Children of War Dead (Education Assistance) Act, 813
 - Commonwealth War Graves Commission, 814-15
 - Domiciliary care for entitled veterans, 815-16
 - D.V.A. management meetings and Conference on Finance, results of, 412
 - Head office staff, 721-2
 - Hospital services, New Brunswick, 130, 282
 - Pension, Canadian Forces Long Service Pensioners' Association, 811-12
 - Pensioners' training, 812
 - Publications, 721, 834-5
 - Re-establishment credit, veterans eligible, 813
 - Relocation to Prince Edward Island, 722
 - Veterans hospitals and departmental homes, transfer of, 815
 - Veterans housing assistance program, 813-14
 - Veterans insurance benefits, 722
 - Victoria Cross, sale of, 833, 856
 - Widows of veterans, pensions, 236-7, 351
 - WVA/CWA applications, 813
- Visitors
 - Spanish parliamentary delegation, 170

Perrault, Hon. Raymond J., P.C., Leader of the Government in the Senate—concl'd

- Youths and students
 - 1977-78 programs in effect, 894
- Yukon Shield of Arms, presentation to the Senate, 361

Petten, Hon. William J., Chief Government Whip in the Senate

- Banking, Trade and Commerce Committee
 - Meetings during Senate sittings, 129, 153, 293
- Health, Welfare and Science Committee
 - Meetings during Senate sittings, 356, 375
- Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee
 - Meeting during Senate sitting, 808
- Northern Pipeline, 1st report of committee, 545
- Off-track betting, legalization of, 537, 544, 545
- Safe Containers Convention bill S-3, 130-1, 141
 - Inspections, 131
 - Participating countries, 140
 - Regulations, 130-1
 - Safety Approval Plates in both official languages, 130
- Selection Committee
 - Committee changes during session, see Journals of the Senate
- Reports
 - Members of Standing Committees
 - Northern Pipeline, 100
 - Printing of Parliament, 97-98
 - Retirement Age Policies, 97-98

Senate

- Business, 8, 808

Sports

- Canada Winter Games, Brandon, Manitoba, 678-9, 680
- CBC television coverage, 679

Transport and Communications Committee

- Meeting during Senate sitting, 293

Phillips, Hon. Orville H.

- Energy Supplies Emergency bill C-42, 837, 838, 843-7, 848, 849, 858, 860, 861-2, 869, 870, 871, 877, 878, 879, 880, 881, 882
- Estimates year ending Mar.31/79, Supplementary (B), 716
- Government Organization 1979 bill C-35, 768-9, 781, 782, 786, 789, 790-1
- Curtailment of fisheries research programs, 782
- Fisheries and Oceans Research Advisory Council, provincial representation, 782
- Health Resources Fund bill C-2, 697, 701-02, 717, see appendix p. 711
 - Recommendations of Health, Welfare and Science Committee, 762, 856
- National Housing bill C-29, 797-8, 799, 804
 - Assisted Home Ownership Plan, 797, 799
 - Graduated payment mortgage, 797
 - Neighbourhood Improvement Plan, 798, 799
 - Non-profit and co-operative housing, 804
 - Privatization, 800
- Sports
 - NHL, request that Edmonton, Winnipeg and Quebec City be admitted to, motion proposed, 830

Pigeon, Hon. Louis-Philippe, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada

- Royal assent, 446, 726

Point of order

Parliament

- Messages between houses, 234, 271-2
- Supply of information to senators, 561, 564
- Question period, information asked during, 606-07
- Rules of the Senate (Senator Flynn), 567

Point of order—concl'd

- Speaker's ruling re Health Resources Fund bill C-2, 682
- Speaker's ruling re off-track betting, 534

Poitras, J.H. & Son Ltd. bill S-8, see J.H. Poitras & Son Ltd.Poland

- Pope John Paul II, His Holiness, (Karol Cardinal Wojtyla, Archbishop of Poland), election of, 24

Postal services continuation

- Broadcast explaining reasons why Senate did not consider bill in previous sitting, 34
- Canadian Union of Postal Workers, history of contract negotiations and conciliation proceedings, 26
- Employer-Employee Relations in the Public Service, Special Joint Committee, 30-31
- Essential services, right to strike, 41
- Great Lakes shipping strike, lack of government action, 30
- Industrial democracy, concept of, 30
- Labour Relations in the Public Service, recommendations of joint committee, 27
- Mediator-arbitrator, appointment of, 27, 40, 49

Post Office

- Crown corporation, 33
- Deficit, 32
- Modernization of, 32
- Number of labour disputes, 1971/76, 32
- Public Service Staff Relations Act, 34
- Salaries of postal workers, 38

Speakers: Senators

- Argue, Hazen, 29-30
- Asselin, Martial, 21-22, 27-29, 35-36
- Beaubien, L. P., 38, 39
- Bosa, Peter, 50, 51
- Bourget, Maurice, 35-41, 49-53 (Chairman, Committee of the Whole)
- Buckwold, Sidney L., 22, 30-31
- Connolly, John J., 40-41
- Croll, David A., 33
- Deschatelets, Jean-Paul, 52
- Flynn, Jacques, 20, 21, 33-34, 36, 37, 52, 53
- Greene, J. J., 38
- Grosart, Allister, 39, 40, 51, 52, 53
- Langlois, Léopold, 37-38, 39
- Macdonald, John M., 40, 52
- McIlraith, George J., 20, 23, 26-27, 29, 34
- Molson, Hartland de M., 48-49
- Perrault, Raymond J., 20-21, 22, 23
- Roblin, Duff, 22, 23, 31-33, 49, 50
- also
- Ouellet, Hon. André, P.C., Minister of State for Urban Affairs and Acting Minister of Labour, 35-41, 49-53

Postal Services Continuation bill C-8. 1r, 20-23; 2r, 26-31, 31-34; ref to Committee of the Whole, 34; considered in Committee of the Whole, Hon. Maurice Bourget in the Chair, Hon. André Ouellet, P.C., Minister of State for Urban Affairs and Acting Minister of Labour participating, 35-41, 48-53; rep without amdt, 53; 3r, 53; r.a., 54Post Office

- Contravention of Holidays Act and Newfoundland Remembrance Day Act, 154, 172
- Disruption in service, questions, 57-58, 87-88, 96-97, 101-02, 103, 109-10, 117-18
- Communists among Post Office union leaders, 88, 103, 118
- Criminal charges against CUPW president and colleagues, 117-18

Post Office—concl'dDisruption in service—concl'd

- Decertification of union, 102, 118
- Defiance of back-to-work legislation, 88, 110
- Directives to workers by union leaders, 118
- Intimidation of workers by union leaders, 118
- Mediator, terms of reference for, 103
- Public Service Employment Act, Article XXVII re absenteeism, 109, 110, 118
- Working hours, 102
- Increase in postal rates, 244, 307, 315-16; inquiry withdrawn, 360
- Labour disputes, statement of Postmaster General re enforcing of law in, 66
- Second Class Mail Regulations, 834

Pratte, Hon. Yves, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada

- Royal assent, 893

Prince Edward Island

- Federal-provincial relations, 114
- Provincial Liberal leadership convention, press report re, 15

Printing Bureau

- Printing errors in official records of Senate, 356-7, 384

Printing of Parliament, Standing Joint Committee

- Members
- Senate, 98

Private bills

- See Bills, general data,
- Bills, Private, Commons,
- Bills, Private, Senate.

Privilege, question of

- Canadian Broadcasting Corporation
- French network broadcast, 457
- Criticisms by Commons members of Senate handling of Bill C-5, 215-20
- Media coverage of question of privilege, 238, 243-4
- Minutes of the Proceedings, spelling of name of Senator Greene, 57
- Postal Services Continuation bill C-8, Ottawa Journal article re Senate consideration of, 58
- Provincial Liberal leadership convention, press report re, 15
- Senate
- NDP leader, remarks by, 555
- Transport
- VIA Rail, 642-5

Public bills

- See Bills, general data,
- Bills, Public, Commons,
- Bills, Public, Senate.

Public Referendums and Questions relating to the Constitution of Canada, authority to Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee to examine subject matter of Bill C-9, 458-62Public Service

- Employment of immigrants, 829
- Right to strike, 142-3
- Negotiation period, 143

Public works and urban affairs

- National Finance Committee authorized to review recommendations of Accommodation Program, 762
- Responsibility for housing, 274, 295, 342, 478-9
- Veterans housing, 295

Quebec

- Canadian-Italian Business and Professional Men's Association of Quebec, visit of delegation to Senate, 829
- Deschênes, Hon. Jules, Chief Justice of the Superior Court, visitor to Senate, 657
- Study of sovereignty association by Senate committee, 181-2

Queen Elizabeth II, Her Majesty

- Visit in 1977 to Newfoundland and other parts of Canada, 113

QuestionsAgriculture

- Feed grain prices, 203, 237
- Government grain elevators, purchase of, 284, 384
- International wheat agreement, 554, 734
- Salmonella infection by Manitoba cattlefeed, 658-9
- Subsidy to millers of wheat, removal of, 319-20, 411-12
- Two-price system for wheat, subsidy to millers, bread prices, 281, 283-4, 296, 319-20, 411-12

Air Canada

- Applications for positions as stewards and stewardesses, 451, 463, 495
- Functions of Chairman and President, 385, 503-04
- London, England, terminus change from Heathrow to Gatwick, 717
- Moncton airport, telephone service, 676-7
- Reduced fare marketing program, 834
- Regulations issued by Canadian Transport Commission, 362
- Sale to private interests, 504, 541, 554, 592, 593

Automotive industry, Reisman report on, 350, 494Bell Canada

- Disconnecting of subscribers' telephone, 381, 411

British Columbia

- Flood damage, assistance from Disaster Financial Assistance Program, 155

Cabinet, the, meetings in Toronto, 605Canada Elections Act, change in writ of election, 157, 244*Canada Labour Code, commitment by government leader re representations before Senate committee, 180-1, 238, 283, 351-2*Canadian Broadcasting Corporation

- Canada Winter Games, national television coverage of, 541, 717
- Ombudsman* program, budget for, 543
- Telecast of World Cup Soccer Games, 451

Canadian National Railways, rumour re private sector ownership, 273, 463Constitution of Canada

- House of the Federation, proposal for, 130
- Impact of by-election results on amending legislation, 15
- Reintroduction of amending legislation, 450

Senate

- Government intention re future of Senate, 154, 167, 172-3
- Constitution of Canada, Special Joint Committee
- Reconstitution of, 155, 341

Consumer and corporate affairs

- Beef imports from hoof and mouth disease areas, 274, 449
- Bread, increase in prices and subsidy to consumers, 297
- Chartered banks, increase in profits, 296
- Food industry, discounting and allowances in, 557
- Manufactured goods, increase in prices, 296
- Subsidy to millers of wheat, removal of, 319-20, 411-12

Economy, the

- Anti-inflation program, rate of inflation, 155-6, 166-7
- Canadian balance of payments, 686, 717-19
- Food prices, increase in, 542, 543
- Foreign exchange controls, 476-7, 493

Questions—cont'dEconomy, the—concl'd

- Foreign exchange reserves, 495, 502-03
- Canada's official international reserves, January 31, 1979, statement of, 503
- National Commission on Inflation, terms of reference and reporting procedures, 678, 734-5

Employment and Immigration

- Employment tax credit program, 568

Energy

- Federal government, power to act unilaterally, 605-06, 633
- Fuel for motor vehicles, 819
- Gas pipeline from Montreal to points east, 542
- International Energy Agency, 554, 557, 565, 607-09, 633, 634, 684, 686, 762
- Supply of oil in Atlantic Canada, 686, 762
- International oil supply, statement by minister, 555-6
- National Energy Board report, 834
- Newfoundland, power potential of Lower Churchill Falls, 554, 592-3
- Northern pipeline, major change in procurement policy, 818, 834
- Nuclear fusion research project, proposed, 810
- Oil and gas exploration permits for the Atlantic region, 648-50
- Price agreement with Alberta respecting crude oil, 25, 58, 102, 129-30, 244, 272, 294-5, 316
- Elements examined in discussions on expanding gas markets in Canada, 316
- Strategic oil reserves, 567-8, 633, 684
- Supply of crude oil to Imperial Oil refineries in Canada, 542, 554, 556-7, 565

United States crude oil inventories, 557, 565Energy Supplies Emergency bill C-42, consultation with provinces prior to introduction of bill, 604, 605, 632-3, 633-4, 684-5*Environmental affairs

- Closure of Regina weather station, 25-26, 89, 222-3
- Oil tanker spills, protection against, 809, 818-20

Federal-Provincial Conference of First Ministers

- Equalization formula, 512, 563
- Jurisdiction over family law, 512, 563-4
- Natural resources revenue, 542, 563
- Patriation of the Constitution, 512, 562-3
- Public sessions, 496
- Senators as observers, 468-9, 493

Fisheries

- Canned mackerel, purchase program for, 412, 479
- Fisheries and Oceans Dept., establishment of, 88
- Title questioned, 89, 223, 237
- Fish, surplus of, offered to foreign countries, 480
- Foreign countries, catches by, 618-19, see appendix to Debates of Feb. 27/79

Halifax research laboratory, proposed closing of, 25-26, 124-5, 140, 145, 147, 148, 449Magdalen Islanders sealers, annual seal hunt, 504-05*Marine broadcasting, cut-back of, 25*Newfoundland*Catches between Port Aux Basques and Cook's Harbour, 308-09, 479*Inshore squid fishery, 309, 479*Shrimp yield, 479-80*Research laboratory, Halifax, 25*Weather station, Gander, 25*Foreign affairs*Canada-US relations

- Appearance of Secretary of State for External Affairs before committee during discussion of report, 274
- Halibut fishing industry, interim agreement, 463, 567

Questions—cont'dForeign affairs—concl'd

- China and Vietnam, Canadian policy respecting hostilities, 618, 646, 659, 734
- Cossette-Trudels, kidnappers of UK trade commissioner, return to Canada, 307, 315, 350
- East coast fisheries, Canada-France agreement, 495, 512, 526, 593
- Egypt-Israel peace treaty, 154, 266
 - Signing of, 856
 - United Nations Peacekeeping Force, 894
- International social security agreement, 526-7
- Iran
 - Oil imports to eastern Canada, effect of political situation on, 357, 385, 393
 - Ownership of controlling interest of Bell Canada, 464, 494
 - Safety of Canadian workers in, 203, 222, 342, 349-50, 492-3
- Jonestown, Guyana, mass murder and suicide at the commune of the People's Temple, 238, 243, 266-7
- Meir, Golda, former Prime Minister of Israel, the late, 343, 357-8
- Namibia, Canadian contingent to, 319, 357
- Prime Minister's visit to United Kingdom, 274-5
- Sanctions against Rhodesia and South Africa, 382, 383, 386, 493-4
- United States Secretary of State visit to Canada, discussions agenda
 - Beaufort Sea-Dixon Entrance boundaries, 256, 282
 - Maritime boundaries, Canada-United States, 256, 282, 463-4, 495
 - Northern Pipeline, 239, 267
- Forestry service
 - Dutch Elm disease, 384
 - Winnipeg office, closing of, 307, 383
- Government annuities, increase in interest rate, 501, 648
- Grain
 - Delivery to export positions, 449, 493
 - Hopper cars, purchase of, 527, 685
 - Initial prairie prices, 496, 593
- Great Lakes shipping
 - Effect of Shipping Continuation Act, 102, 118, 129
 - Strike of engineers and deck officers, 15-16, 25, 61, 66, 129
- Health and welfare
 - Hospital charges in Ontario, compatibility with federal legislation, 541-2, 775
 - Medicare program, 817-18
 - Physicians in Nova Scotia, compensation for, 818
- Health Resources Fund bill C-2, recommendations of Health, Welfare and Science Committee, 762, 856
- Health, Welfare and Science Committee
 - Business of, relating to Health Resources Fund bill C-2, 684
 - Recommendations, 762
 - Representations, 677
- Income tax
 - Deduction for small businesses, 362
 - Garnisheeing of child tax credit, 476, 502
- Indian affairs
 - Health and environmental conditions, complaint by National Indian Brotherhood, 462
 - Infant deaths on northern Alberta reserves, 677
 - Meeting between Chiefs from Atlantic provinces and federal ministers, 361-2
- Indian Affairs and Northern Development
 - Gros Morne National Park, reductions, 719
 - Parks Canada scholarships, 719

Questions—cont'd

- Industry, Trade and Commerce
 - Export Development Corporation, approval of loans to foreign countries, 721
 - France, imports and exports, 719-20
 - West Germany, exports and imports, 720-1
- Justice Department
 - McDonald Royal Commission, payment to solicitors appearing before commission, 155, 341
 - RCMP break-ins, permission of Solicitors General for, 89, 103
- Labour
 - Comparative figures of OECD and International Labour Office, 204
 - Labour Gazette*, removal of requirement to publish, 526, 659, 685-6
 - Strikes, government action in reduction of, 181, 203-04
- Loto Canada
 - Minister's statement on report relating to, 609-10, 633
- National Capital Region, reconstitution of Special Joint Committee, 155, 273-4
- National Defence
 - Canadian Armed Forces Reserves, 412
 - Military aircraft, selection of, 276-7, 317-18
- National revenue
 - Charitable institutions, tax deductions, 222
 - Tax rebate discounting, 191-2, 204-05
- Newfoundland
 - Barra Cudina*, vessel missing off Newfoundland coast, 319, 385, 470
 - Boundary with Quebec, 817
 - Canada-Newfoundland Field Exploration Program, 308
 - Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe, inshore fishery, 308, 479
 - Labrador Linerboard Mill Ltd., sale to Abitibi Price, 266, 272, 307-08, 319, 334, 363
 - Rail freight services, cutback and downgrading of, 319
 - Residential rehabilitation assistance program, 450-1
- Seal hunt
 - Adverse publicity, 750, 810
 - U.S. congressional resolution, 810
 - Permit applications, 527, 659-60
 - Press article re boycott of travel to Canada by Americans, 306-07
 - Protest activities, 477, 527, 733
 - Weather station closing, 89
- Official Languages
 - Bilingual education in provinces, cut in grants, 855
 - Bilingual public servant bonus, 855-6
- Off-track betting
 - Agriculture minister's statement, 733-4, 750-1
- Parliament
 - Hansard*, official report, price increase, 632, 717, 833-4
 - Lapel pins, distribution to members of House of Commons, 751
 - Supply of information to senators, 564
- Parliament Buildings
 - Royal William*, removal of commemorative plaque, 526
- Pensions
 - Special Interdepartmental Task Force, report of, 750
- Post Office
 - Communists among Post Office Union leaders, 88, 103, 118
 - Disruption in service, 57-58, 88, 101-03, 118
 - Increase in postal rates, 244, 315-16; inquiry withdrawn, 360
 - Second Class Mail Regulations, 834
- Public Service
 - Employment of immigrants, 829

Questions—cont'd

Public Works

- Housing and urban affairs, responsibility for, 274, 295, 342, 478-9

Quebec

- Study of sovereignty association by Senate committee, 181-2

Regional economic expansion

- Canada-Newfoundland forestry subsidiary agreement, 811

Remembrance Day

- Newfoundland Post Office contravention of federal Holidays Act and Newfoundland Remembrance Day Act, 154, 172, 173

Riel, Louis, possibility of posthumous pardon, 543

Saskatchewan

- Weather station closing, 89

Senate

- Bill to abolish Senate, effect of by-election on, 140
- Clerestory windows of chamber, 818
- Emergency sittings, notice to senators, 86-87
- Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, replacement for, 166, 676
- Monday sittings, 272-3
- Off-track betting, study of, 469
- Order paper, questions on, 566
- Printing errors in official records, 356-7, 384
- Reform, suggestions by senators, 363
- Support services for senators, 182-3

Shipping

- St. Lawrence Seaway closing date, 202-03

Sinclair Commission, report of, 469-70, 503

- Fish processing at sea, 503

Social insurance numbers

- Penalty for non-use when cashing interest or dividend payments, 283, 316-17, 318, 381, 382-3, 385-6, 471
- Proposed study of use, 496
- Requirement for domestic air charter bookings, 362-3, 471-2
- Use on mail to armed forces, 284, 295, 363, 471, 478, 494, 512

Sports

- Grants to municipalities, National Hockey League franchises, 501-02, 633, 634, 646-7, 752, 752-3
- Provincial agreement, 610-11, 634, 646-7
- NHL All-Star Team, defeat of in international competition, 527-8
- NHL, proposed merger with WHA, 751-2

Statistics Canada

- Cost-of-living index, 566, 593, 605
- Official appearing before Senate committee, 605
- Senate proceedings, media report of, 609

Student loans, newspaper article re defaulting of repayments, 238, 448-9

Task Force on Canadian Unity, 469, 470, 477-8, 562, 567

- Distribution of report, 562, 567
- Implementation of recommendations, 477-8
- Recommendations respecting Parliament, 470
- Report, tabling of, 469

Transport

Air Canada

- AIRVELOP service, 450
- Functions of Chairman and President, 385, 503-04
- Air fares within Canada, reduction in, 357, 383, 448
- British Columbia Railway, recommendation of McKenzie Royal Commission to sell railway to CNR, 238, 357
- Landing rights of Canadian and British airlines, 237, 317
- Motor vehicle safety, tire pressure survey, 350, 462, 470
- Train service between New Brunswick and Montreal, 297, 447-8
- VIA Rail
 - Baggage checking, 450

Questions—concl'd

Transport—concl'd

VIA Rail—concl'd

- Compensation to CNR and CPR for their existing facilities, 504

- Equipment purchased by VIA Rail from CNR, 504

- Policies of, 275, 448, 449

- Winnipeg Sherbrooke-MacGregor Overpass, 274, 383-4

Veterans affairs

- Assistance to distressed or needy veterans, 812-13
- Canadian Pension Commission, proposed move, 528, 611, 647-8, 650

- Canadian veterans outside Canada, 812

- Ceremonies to mark 35th anniversary of D-Day, 238, 363

- Children of War Dead (Education Assistance) Act, 813

- Commonwealth War Graves Commission, 814-15

- Domiciliary care for entitled veterans, 815-16

- D.V.A. management meetings and Conference on Finance, results of, 412

- Head office staff, 721

- Hospital services, New Brunswick, 130, 272

- Pension, Canadian Forces Long Service Pensioners' Association, 811-12

- Pensioners' training, 812

- Publications, 721, 834-5

- Re-establishment credit, veterans eligible, 813

- Relocation to Prince Edward Island, 722

- Veterans hospitals and departmental homes transfer, 815

- Veterans housing assistance program, 813-14

- Veterans insurance benefits, 722

- Victoria Cross, sale of, 833, 856

- Widows of veterans, pensions, 236-7, 351

- WVA/CWA applications, 813

Youths and students

- 1977-78 programs in effect, 894

Railways bill S-1 (pro forma). 1r, 4Recommendations in committee reports, see Amendments*Regional economic expansion

- Canada-Newfoundland forestry subsidiary agreement, 811

Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, Standing Joint Committee

- Expenses, 152, see Journals of the Senate

- Meeting during Senate sitting, 180

Members

- Senate, 98

Reports

- 1st report re quorum, terms of reference, staff, 221, 252

- 2nd report re criteria for review and scrutiny of statutory instruments, 221-2, 260

- 3rd report re ministerial powers to enter lands and remove excessive natural growth, 348-9, 359-60

- 4th report re import control list, amendment and general import permit No. 57, 524-6, 626, 655, 665-7

- 5th report re Statutory Instruments No. 6, 561-2, 621-6

- 6th report re Statutory Instruments No. 7, 747-8, 769-70

Remembrance Day

- Newfoundland Post Office, contravention of federal Holidays Act and Newfoundland Remembrance Day Act, 154, 172, 173

- Tribute to Canada's War Dead and War Veterans, 170-1

Restaurant of Parliament, Standing Joint Committee

Members

- Senate, 98

Retirement Age Policies, Special Senate Committee

- Appointment, 5
- Expenses, 180, see Journals of the Senate
- Reports
 - Quorum of committee, 129
 - Terms of reference, 5

Riel, Hon. Maurice

- Barre, Mr. Raymond, Premier of France and Mrs. Barre, visit of, 553
- Riel, Louis, possibility of posthumous pardon, 543

Riel, Louis, possibility of posthumous pardon, 543Riley, Hon. Daniel

- Consumer and corporate affairs
 - Bread, increase in prices and subsidy to consumers, 297
- Energy Supplies Emergency bill C-42, 862
- Government Organization 1979 bill C-35, 757-8, 769, 775, 776
 - Environment, Department of the, mandate, 758
 - Fisheries and Oceans, Department of, establishment of, 757
 - Fisheries and Oceans Research Advisory Council, 757
 - Parliamentary Secretaries Act, 758
- Off-track betting, legalization of, 506, 508-09, 510, 537
 - Agriculture Department, control of betting, 506, 508
 - Pari-mutuel betting, 508
 - Rural fairs, 508
- Regulations and other Statutory Instruments Committee
 - 4th report re import control list, amendment and general import permit No. 57, 667
 - 6th report re Statutory Instruments No. 7, 747-8
- Senate
 - Clerestory windows of chamber, 818
 - Media coverage of question of privilege, 238, 243-4
- Statute Law (Metric Conversion) bill S-10, 345
- Transport
 - Train service between New Brunswick and Montreal, 297, 447-8
 - VIA Rail
 - Baggage checking, 450

Rizzuto, Hon. Pietro

- Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 8-9
- Canadian-Italian Business and Professional Men's Association of Quebec delegation, visit to Senate, 829
- Constitution of Canada, 8-9
 - Senate reform, 9
- Minority rights, 9
- Social services, 8

Robichaud, Hon. Louis-J., P.C.

- Constitution of Canada, 1st report of Special Senate Committee, 557-60
 - Fulton formula, 558
 - Fulton-Favreau formula, 558
 - Task Force on Canadian Unity, 558, 559
- National Capital Region
 - Reconstitution of Special Joint Committee, 155, 273-4
- Off-track betting, legalization of, 469, 508, 518-19, 534
 - Agriculture Minister, appearance before Senate, 518-19
- Sports
 - NHL, request that Edmonton, Winnipeg and Quebec City be admitted to, motion proposed, 831

Roblin, Hon. Duff, P.C.

- Agriculture
 - International cooperation in marketing of grains, 285-90, 291
 - International wheat agreement, 554

Roblin, Hon. Duff, P.C.—cont'd

- Agriculture—concl'd
 - Salmonella infection by Manitoba cattlefeed, allegation re, 658-9
 - Two-price system for wheat, subsidy to millers, bread prices, 281, 283-4, 296
- Air Canada, functions of Chairman and President, 385, 503-04
- Beef Import bill S-13, 619-21
 - Agricultural Stabilization Act, 620
 - Cost of living, effect of price of beef on, 619
 - Protection of Canadian markets from imports, 620
 - Tokyo Round, 620
 - Trigger-pricing concept, 620
- Borrowing Authority bill C-7, 244-9
- Criminal Code (firearms acquisition certificates) bill C-34, 411
- Economy, the
 - Canadian balance of payments, 718-19
 - Food prices, increase in, 543
 - Foreign exchange controls, 476-7, 493
 - National Commission on Inflation, terms of reference and report procedures, 678, 734-5
- Energy
 - Gas pipeline from Montreal to points east, 542, 565-6
 - International Energy Agency, 554, 607-08, 633, 634, 684, 686
 - Supply of oil in Atlantic Canada, 686, 762
 - Strategic oil reserves, 567, 568, 633, 684
- Energy Supplies Emergency bill C-42, 838-43, 857, 858, 869, 871-2, 873, 874, 877, 879, 880, 882-3, 884-5, 886, 887, 888
 - Deprivation of property, 884, 885
- Estimates year ending Mar.31/79, Supplementary (B), 722
- Federal-Provincial Conference of First Ministers
 - Equalization formula, 512, 563
- Forestry service
 - Dutch Elm disease, 384
 - Winnipeg office, closing of, 307, 383
- Great Lakes shipping, strike of engineers and deck officers, 25
- Health Resources Fund bill C-2, 669, 671, 672, 675, 689-91, 694, 707-08, 709, 710
 - British Columbia's Constitutional Proposals, Paper No. 3, Reform of the Canadian Senate, 691
- Income Tax, Family Allowances bill C-10, 334-6
 - Negative income tax, 335
- Loto Canada
 - Grants to municipalities, provincial agreement, 634, 646-7
 - Minister's statement on report relating to, 609-10, 633
- National Defence
 - Military aircraft, selection of, 276-7, 317-18
- Official Languages
 - Bilingual education in provinces, cut in grants, 855
 - Bilingual public servant bonus, 855-6
- Postal Services Continuation bill C-8, 22, 23, 31-33, 49, 50
 - Mediator-arbitrator, appointment of, 49
- Post Office
 - Crown corporation, 33
 - Deficit, 32
 - Modernization of, 32
 - Number of labour disputes, 1971/76, 32
- Regulations issued by Canadian Transport Commission, 362
- Rules of the Senate
 - Suspension of Rules 44, 45 and 78, 397-8, 402
- Senate
 - Business of, 201, 202
- Shipping Conferences Exemption 1979 bill S-6, 514-15, 529
- Sports
 - Canada Winter Games, Brandon, Manitoba, 679-80
- Transport
 - Winnipeg Sherbrooke-McGregor Overpass, 274, 383-4

Roblin, Hon. Duff, P.C.—concl'd

Unemployment Insurance bill C-14, 418-19, 421, 424-9, 440-3, 444, 445

Chronicle-Herald, editorial, 425

Committee's authority to approve principle of bill questioned, 418-19

"Gang of Four", 424

Two-tier plan, 428, 440-1, 442

Unemployed, number of, 424

Unemployment Insurance Fund, 425

Roman Catholic Church

Pope John Paul II, His Holiness, election of, 24

Rowe, Hon. Frederick W.

Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 132-5

Constitution of Canada, 133

Monarchy, the, 133

Senate

Media misleading reporting of Senate work, 134; St. John's Nfld, Evening Telegram article re, 134

Role of, 134

Dollar devaluation, 135

Government Organization 1979 bill C-35, 780, 784

Government restraints, 134

Greene, Hon. J.J., the late, 132

National Energy Board bill S-12, 598

Newfoundland

CNR, unsatisfactory facilities, 133

Fisheries, 133; infringement by foreign vessels, 133

Off-track betting, legalization of, 509

Gambling, advertising of, 509

Smallwood, Hon. Joseph R., former Premier of Newfoundland, 657

Social insurance number

Use on mail to armed forces personnel, 295, 363, 471, 478, 494, 512

Social policies, 134-5

Sports

Canada Winter Games, Brandon, Manitoba, CBC television coverage, 680

Tributes to colleagues and others, 132

Royal assent, 54, 83, 232, 260, 355, 446, 726, 796, 807, 893

Beetz, Hon. Jean, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, 355, 796

Dickson, Hon. Robert G.B., Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, 260

Pigeon, Hon. Louis-Philippe, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, 446, 726

Pratte, Hon. Yves, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, 893

Schreyer, Rt. Hon. Edward Richard, P.C., His Excellency the Governor General of Canada, 807

Spence, Hon. Wishart F., Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, 54, 83, 232

Royal Canadian Mounted Police

Officers of, visit to Senate, 796-7

See McDonald Royal Commission

Royal Commissions

McDonald Commission of Inquiry concerning Certain Activities of the RCMP (Chairman, Hon. David C. McDonald), 89, 103

Royal Commissions—concl'd

McDonald Commission—concl'd

Payment to solicitors appearing before commission, 155, 341-2

McKenzie Royal Commission on British Columbia Railway, 238

Rules and Orders, Standing Senate Committee

Members, 56

Rules of the Senate

Oral questions, response by senator who is minister of the Crown, 237

Suspension of Rules 44, 45 and 78, 393-406, 809-10, 827-8

Rulings and statements of Speaker

Health Resources Fund bill C-2, 682

Messages between Senate and House of Commons, ruling on point of order re, 271-2

Off-track betting, ruling re point of order, 534

Safe containers convention

Governor in Council authority, 141

Inspections, 131

Participating countries, 140

Regulations, 130-1

Safety Approval Plates in both official languages, 130

Speakers: Senators

Petten, William J., 130-1, 141

Smith, G.I., 140-1

Safe Containers Convention bill S-3. 1r, 14; 2r, 130-1, 140-1; 3r, 150St. Patrick's Day

Tributes to St. Patrick and the Irish people, 755

Saskatchewan

Culliton, Hon. E.M., Chief Justice and Mrs. Culliton, visitors to Senate, 657

Regina weather station closing, 25-26, 89, 222-3

Schreyer, Rt. Hon. Edward Richard, P.C., installation to office of Governor General of Canada

Address by Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau, and reply by the Rt. Hon. Edward Richard Schreyer, Governor General of Canada, see appendix to Debates of Jan. 23/79

Congratulations to, 464

Royal assent, 807

Security

See Justice administration,

McDonald Royal Commission.

Selection Committee

Appointments, 5

Members of committees, changes during session, see Journals of the Senate

Reports

Members of committees, 55-57

Members of Standing and Special Senate Committees

Agriculture, 97-98

Northern Pipeline, 100

Printing of Parliament, 97-98

Retirement Age Policies, 97-98

Senate

Adjournment

Christmas, 446

Motion for, negated, 406-07

Alleged delay in consideration of Postal Services Continuation bill C-8, question of privilege, 58

Bill to abolish Senate, effect of by-election on, 140

Senate—concl'd

Business, 8, 14, 15, 24-25, 41, 57, 117, 150, 171-2, 200-02, 231, 255, 294, 334, 361, 376, 450, 468, 492, 511-12, 553-4, 604, 645-6, 716, 774-5, 796, 808, 890-1

Clerestory windows of chamber, 818

Emergency sittings, notice to senators, 86-87

Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod

Motion to appoint nominating committee, 770-3, 820-7

Replacement for, 166, 676

Hansard, official report, price increase, 632, 717

Information publications, circulation of, 342-3

Media coverage of question of privilege, 238, 243-4

Monday sittings, 272-3

Order paper, questions on, 566

Paquette, Alcide, Assistant Clerk of the Senate, tributes on retirement, 456-7

Printing errors in official records, 356-7, 384

Privilege, question of

Criticisms by Commons members of Senate handling of Bill C-5, 215-20

NDP leader, remarks by, 555

Reform

Proportional representation in appointments, 107-08

Role of, 107, 115-16

Suggestions by senators, 363

Term of office, 108

Research and secretarial services for senators, 182-3

Senators as observers at Federal-Provincial Conference, 468-9

Work of committees and effects of, 46-47

Agriculture, 47

Banking, Trade and Commerce, 47

Constitution of Canada, Joint and Special Senate, 47

Foreign Affairs, 47

National Finance, 46, 47

Retirement Age Policies, 47

Yukon Shield of Arms, presentation to the Senate, 361

See Constitution of Canada

Senators, deceased

Greene, Hon. J. J., P.C. (Oct. 23/78), 77, 83-86, 110, 113, 132, 152

Shipping

Great Lakes shipping, effect of Shipping Continuation Act, 102, 118, 129

Great Lakes shipping, strike of engineers and deck officers, 15-16, 25

St. Lawrence Seaway closing date, 202-03

Shipping conferences

Definition of shipping conference, 184

Government investigations into conference practices, 184

Inspection and filing of documents, 185

Legislation governing liner conferences serving Canada, 252

Maintenance of office or agency in Canada, 185

Non-application of Combines Investigation Act, 184, 185, 186

Offence and punishment, 185

Speakers: Senators

Lang, Daniel A., 185

Lewis, P. Derek, 184-6

Marshall, Jack, 252

Smith, G. I., 185, 186

Shipping Conferences Exemption 1979 bill S-6. 1r, 165; 2r, 184-6, 252; ref to com, 252; rep with amds, 491-2; m for adoption, 513-15, m adopted, 515; 3r, 528-9; message from Commons that bill passed without amdt, 732; r.a., 796

Shipping continuation

Arbitrator, 78

Shipping continuation—concl'd

Canadian Lake Carriers Assoc., 78

Continuing consultation committee, suggestion, 82

Crime by association, 82

Economic effects of strike action, 77-78, 79, 80, 81

Extension of shipping season, 81

Injunction proceedings, 80

Labour-government relations, 79

Right to strike, 79

Term of collective agreement, 78

Speakers: Senators

Argue, Hazen, 80-81

Asselin, Martial, 77, 78-80, 81

Forsey, Eugene A., 77, 83

McIlraith, George J., 77-78, 81-82

Shipping Continuation bill C-11. 1r, 77; 2r, 77-82; 3r, 83; r.a., 83

Smallwood, Hon. Joseph R., former Premier of Newfoundland, visitor to Senate, 657

Smith, Hon. G. I.

Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 147-8

Agriculture

Two-price system for wheat, subsidy to millers, bread prices, 281, 283-4, 296

Air Canada

Reduced fare marketing program, 834

Appropriation bill No. 3, 1978-79 C-25, 352-4

Economy

Anti-inflation program, rate of inflation, 155, 156-7, 167

Energy

Federal government, power to act unilaterally, 605-06, 633

Fuel for motor vehicles, 819

International Energy Agency, 557, 565, 607-08

Supply of crude oil to Imperial Oil refineries in Canada, 542, 554, 556-7

Energy Supplies Emergency bill C-42. 844, 848-9, 850, 858, 861, 863, 864, 870, 871, 873-4, 887, 888

Maritime Energy Corporation, 863

Environmental affairs

Oil tanker spills, protection against, 809, 818-20

Federal-Provincial Conference of First Ministers, 564

Fisheries

Research laboratory at Halifax, proposed closing of, 140, 147, 148, 449

Foreign affairs

Maritime boundaries Canada-United States, 495

Namibia, Canadian Forces contingent to, 319, 357

Fugitive Offenders bill S-9. 366

Health and Welfare

Physicians in Nova Scotia, compensation for, 818

Health Resources Fund bill C-2. 572, 573, 594, 673, 677, 678, 688-9, 692, 693, 694, 701, 708, 713

Health, Welfare and Science

Business of, relating to Health Resources Fund bill C-2, 684

J.H. Poitras & Son Ltd. bill S-8. 205

Judges (annuity to Hon. Mr. Justice Donald Raymond Morand) bill C-33. 388, 389

Justice Department

McDonald Royal Commission, payment to solicitors appearing before commission, 155, 341

National Defence

Military aircraft, selection of, 277, 317-18

National Energy Board bill S-12. 599-601, 613-14

Five year review, 600

Market value, 600

Smith, Hon. G. I.—*concl'd*National Energy Board bill S-12—concl'd

Proposed arbitration committee, 600

Railway Act, 599-600

Point of order

Question period, information asked during, 607

Referendums and questions relating to the Constitution, 459

Rules of the Senate

Suspension of Rules 44, 45 and 78, 396, 398-9, 401, 406

Safe Containers Convention bill S-3, 140-1

Governor in Council authority, 141

Senate

Business, 891

Research and secretarial services for senators, 182, 183

Shipping

St. Lawrence Seaway closing date, 203

Shipping Conferences Exemption 1979 bill S-6, 185, 186, 491-2

Non-application of Combines Investigation Act, 185, 186

Social insurance numbers

Penalty for non-use when cashing interest or dividend payments, 318, 382, 383, 471

Requirement for domestic air charter bookings, 362, 471-2

Task Force on Canadian Unity, 470

Transport

Motor vehicle safety, tire pressure survey, 350, 462, 470

VIA Rail, question of privilege, 644, 645

Transport and Communications Committee

Expenses, 149, see Journals of the Senate

Terms of reference, 166

Social insurance numbers

Penalty for non-use when cashing interest or dividend payments, 283, 295, 316-17, 318, 381, 382-3, 385-6, 471

Proposed study of use, 496

Requirement for domestic air charter bookings, 362-3, 471-2

Use on mail to armed forces, 284, 295, 363, 471, 478, 494, 512

Social services, 8, 9-10, 62, 114

Family allowances, 10, 114-15

Guaranteed annual income, 10

Means test, 10

Old age security, 9-10, 114

South Africa and Rhodesia

Sanctions against, 382, 383, 386, 493-4

Spain

Income Tax Conventions bill S-2, 14, 103-04, 118

Sparrow, Hon. Herbert O.

Beef Import bill S-13, 615-17, 652-3

Hays Converters, 652

Provisions of bill, 616

Signal price per pound, 616, 652

Uncontrolled imports of beef, effects of, 615

Legal and Constitutional Affairs Committee

Off-track betting

Agriculture Minister, appearance before Senate, 516

Statement of, 750-1

Motion in amendment to motion to authorize committee to examine and report on, 515-16

Speaker of the Senate*Pro tem*

Bourget, Hon. Maurice, 732, 744, 762, 774, 807

See Lapointe, Hon. RenaudeSpeech from the Throne at Opening of Fourth Session of Thirtieth Parliament, 1-4

Léger, Right Honourable Jules, Governor General of Canada (Speech read by Madam Léger), 1-4

Error in translation, 173-4

See Address in reply to Speech from the ThroneSpence, Hon. Wishart F., Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada

Royal assent, 54, 83, 232

Sports

Canada Winter Games, Brandon, Manitoba, 541, 678-81, 717, 740-1

CBC television coverage, 679, 680

Legacy of Canada Winter Games to the host community, 680

Grants to municipalities, National Hockey League franchises, 501-02, 610-11, 633, 752-3

Provincial agreement, 610-11, 634

NHL All-Star Team, defeat of in international competition, 527-8

NHL, proposed merger with WHA, 751-2

Request that Edmonton, Winnipeg and Quebec City be admitted to, motion proposed, 830-3, motion adopted, 854

Telecast of World Cup Soccer Games, 451

Stanbury, Hon. Richard J.

Constitution of Canada, 1st report of Special Senate Committee, 104-07

Charter of rights and freedoms, 105

Monarchy, 104

Report

1st report tabled, 55, printed as appendix, see pages 67-76

Senate

Appointments, method of, 105-06

Regional Impact of Federal Legislation, suggestion for Senate committee, 106

Role of, 106

Sick leave, retirement age, 106

Suspensive veto, 106

Greene, Hon. J. J., P.C., the late, 104

Health Resources Fund bill C-2, 697, 699

Judges Act and Certain Other Acts amendment bill C-43, 664-5

Renewal of pool of judicial salaries, 665

Restructuring of courts, 664

Tributes to colleagues and others, 104, 107

Visitors

Spanish parliamentary delegation, 170

Statistics Canada

Cost-of-living index, 566, 593, 605, 609

Officials appearing before Senate committee, 605

Statute Law (metric conversion)

Edmundston Aircraft School, 344

La Conférence Générale des Poids et Mesures, 344

Lament for the Old Weights and Measures, 322-3

Metric system, countries which use it, 345

New Brunswick Highway Safety Council, 345

World War II training programs, 344-5

Speakers: Senators

Forsey, Eugene A., 322-3

Fournier, Edgar E., 343-5

Molgat, Gildas L., 209-10

Riley, Daniel, 345

Statute Law (Metric Conversion) bill S-10. 1r, 293; 2r, 309-10, 322-3, 343-5; ref to com, 345; rep without amdt, 356; 3r, 366

Stewart, Hon. D. G.

Beef Import bill S-13, 617
Culliton, Hon. E. M., Chief Justice of Saskatchewan and Mrs. Culliton, visitors to Senate, 657
National Housing bill C-29, 798, 799, 800, 803
Newfoundland
Weather station closing, 89, 223
Saskatchewan
Weather station closing, 89, 223
Senate
Emergency sittings, notice to senators, 87

Student loans

Toronto Star article re defaults in repayment, 238, 448-9

Task Force on Canadian Unity (Pepin-Robarts Task Force), 469, 470, 477-8, 480-4, 485, 496-500, 562, 567

Council of the Federation, proposed, 482-4
Implementation of recommendations, 477-8
Montreal Gazette article, 497-8
Recommendations respecting Parliament, 470
Report, tabling of, 469
Terms of reference, 477-9

Speakers: Senators

Asselin, Martial, 477
Croll, David A., 485
Flynn, Jacques, 469, 470, 567
Forsey, Eugene A., 562
Lamontagne, Maurice, 480-4, 485
Marchand, Jean, 496-500
Olson, H.A., 477, 478
Perrault, Raymond J., 469, 470, 477-8, 562, 567
Robichaud, L.J., 470
Smith, G.I., 470
van Roggen, George, 470

Thompson, Hon. Andrew

Energy Supplies Emergency bill C-42, 857, 858, 864, 867-8
Petro-Canada, 864
Health Resources Fund bill C-2, 702-03, 706
Income Tax Conventions bill S-7, 186-7, 257-8
Canadian Treaty-Making, excerpt from, 258
Conventions, treaties, agreements, letter from Finance Dept. re, 258
Interest, 186
Omnibus aspect of bill, 258
Pensions, 187
Royalties, 187
Supplementary conventions or agreements, 186
Tax-sparing provision, 187
Teachers, 187
Inter-Parliamentary Union Conference, Bonn, West Germany, 208
Amnesty International, 208
Judges (annuity to Hon. Mr. Justice Donald Raymond Morand) bill C-33, 386-7, 388, 389, 390, 393
Judges Act, 387
Ombudsman, Ontario, 386
Regulations and other Statutory Instruments Committee
4th report re import control list, amendment and general import permit No. 57, 666, 667
St. Patrick's Day, tributes to St. Patrick and the Irish people, 775
Unemployment Insurance bill C-14, 413-17, 418, 426, 431, 432, 437, 443
Employment Assistance Programs, 413-15
Canada Works Program, 413
JET program, 415

Thompson, Hon. Andrew—concl'd

Unemployment Insurance bill C-14—concl'd
Employment Assistance Programs—concl'd
CESI, 414
LEDA, 414, 431
Employment strategy 1979/80, 413
Reduction in benefits, impact on work force, 417
Two-tier system, 416

Trade

Canada and European Economic Community, agreement between, 626-30
Industrial mission to Italy, 626-30
Pandolfi plan, 628
Trade between Canada and Italy, 630
Canada's Trade Relations with United States, rep of Foreign Affairs Committee, 189-91
France, exports and imports, 719-20
West Germany, exports and imports, 720-1

Trademark

Economic Council of Canada, 639
Speakers: Senators
Godfrey, John Morrow, 529-33, 835
Grosart, Allister, 533, 639-40, 660, 820, 835
Perrault, Raymond J., 835

Trademark 1979 bill S-11. 1r, 501; 2r, 529-33, 639-40, Order stands, 660, 820, 835

Translations

Speech from the Throne, error in translation, 173-4

Transport

Air Canada
AIRVELOP service, 450
Functions of Chairman and President, 385
Air fares within Canada, reduction in, 357, 383, 448
Bay of Fundy ferry service, 126
British Columbia Railway, recommendation of McKenzie Royal Commission to sell railway to CNR, 238
Landing rights of Canadian and British airlines, 237, 317
Motor vehicle safety, tire pressure survey, 350
Newfoundland
Barra Cudina, vessel missing off Newfoundland coast, 319, 385, 470
Sea and air freight service, 319, 462
Nova Scotia, 126; container facility and international airport in Halifax, 126
St. Lawrence Seaway closing date, 202-03
Train service between New Brunswick and Montreal, 297, 447-8
User-pay policy, 126
VIA Rail
Baggage checking, 450
Compensation to CNR and CPR for their existing facilities, 504
Equipment purchased by VIA Rail from CNR, 504
Policies of, 275, 448, 449
Question of privilege, 642-5
Winnipeg Sherbrooke-MacGregor Overpass, 274, 383-4

Transport and Communications, Standing Senate Committee

Expenses, 149, see Journals of the Senate
Meeting during Senate sitting, 468
Reports
Shipping Conference Exemption 1979 bill S-6, rep with amtds, 491-2, 513
Terms of reference, 166

Tributes

Colleagues and others, 104, 107, 119, 123, 132, 135, 142, 144
 Greene, Hon. J.J., P.C., the late, 77, 83-86, 104, 110, 113, 152
 Léger, Rt. Hon. Jules and Madam Léger, 464
 Macnaughton, Hon. Alan A., P.C., 90-91, 113
 Paquette, Alcide, Assistant Clerk of the Senate, 456-7
 Parliamentarians and other persons of prominence, 90-91
 Schreyer, Rt. Hon. Edward Richard and Mrs. Schreyer, 464

Unemployment insurance

Action Committee of Women, 409
 "Adjournment closure", 419
 Advisory Council on the Status of Women, 408-09
 Canada Works program, 413
 JET program, 415
 Canadian Labour Congress, representation before committee, 430
Chronicle Herald, editorial, 425
 Committee's authority to approve principle of bill questioned, 418-19
 Dependants, definition of, 439
 Employment assistance programs, 414
 CESI, 414
 LEDA, 414, 431
 Employment strategy 1979/80, 413
 "Gang of Four", 424
 Labrador Linerboard Mill Ltd., 431
 Mackasey amendments, 425
 Reduction in benefits, impact on work force, 417
 Social Planning Council of Metropolitan Toronto, Policy Statement, 434, 436, 443
 Two-tier plan, 416, 428, 440-1, 442
 Unemployed, number of, 424
 Unemployment Insurance Fund, contributions by government, 422, 425

Speakers: Senators

Benidickson, W. M., 419, 420, 432-3
 Bird, Florence B., 408-09
 Bonnell, M. Lorne, 407-08, 421
 Bosa, Peter, 417
 Connolly, John J., 419-20
 Forsey, Eugene A., 420-1, 433-8, 443-4, 445
 Frith, Royce, 444, 445
 Lang, Daniel A., 421-3, 429, 438-9, 440, 442
 Langlois, Léopold, 421
 Marshall, Jack, 430-2
 McElman, Charles, 433, 437, 438, 444, 445
 Perrault, Raymond J., 421, 428
 Roblin, Duff, 418-19, 421, 424-9, 440-3, 444, 445
 Thompson, Andrew, 413-17, 418, 426, 431, 432, 437, 443

Unemployment Insurance bill C-14. 1r, 421; 2r, 421-3, m for adjournment of debate, 423, neg, 423-4, 2r cont'd, 424-40; 3r, 440-4; r.a., 446

United Kingdom and Northern Ireland

Income Tax Conventions bill S-7, 165, 186-7, 240-2, 256-9, 293, 309, 322

United Nations

Human Rights Declaration, 30th anniversary of, 340-1
 International Year of the Child, proclamation of General Assembly of the United Nations, 153-4
 Namibia, Canadian Forces contingent to, 319
 Sanctions against Rhodesia and South Africa, 382, 383, 386, 493-4

United Nations, Thirty-third Meeting of General Assembly, 174-9

Speaker: Hon. Rhéal Bélisle, 174-9

United States

Canada's Trade Relations with United States, rep of Foreign Affairs Committee, 189-91, 380
 Crude oil inventories, 557, 565
 Interim agreement Canada-United States, halibut fishing industry, 463-4, 495, 567
 Seal hunt, congressional resolution re, 810
 Secretary of State visit to Canada
 Discussions agenda, 239, 256, 267, 282, 463-4, 495
 Stevens, Hon. Ted, expression of sympathy on death of wife in plane crash, 301

van Roggen, Hon. George

Borrowing Authority bill C-7, 249
 Canada's Trade Relations with the United States, 189-91
 Foreign Affairs Committee
 Canada-United States relations, authority to make study of, 191
 Reports
 Canada-United States Trade Relations, 189-91, 380
 Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, motion to appoint nominating committee, 826
 Health Resources Fund bill C-2, 713
 Judges (annuity to Hon. Mr. Justice Donald Raymond Morand) bill C-33, 389
 Off-track betting, legalization of, 536
 Rules of the Senate
 Suspension of Rules 44, 45 and 78, 403
 Sports
 NHL, request that Edmonton, Winnipeg and Quebec be admitted to, motion proposed, 832
 Task Force on Canadian Unity, 470

Veterans affairs

Assistance to distressed or needy veterans, 812-13
 Canadian Pension Commission, proposed move, 528, 611, 647-8, 650, see appendix to Debates of Mar.1/79
 Canadian veterans outside Canada, 812
 Children of War Dead (Education Assistance) Act, 813
 Commonwealth War Graves Commission, 814-15
 Domiciliary care for entitled veterans, 815-16
 D.V.A. management meetings and Conference on Finance, results of, 412
 Head office staff, 721-2
 Hospital services, New Brunswick, 130, 282
 Pension, Canadian Forces Long Service Pensioners' Association, 811-12
 Pensioners' training, 812
 Publications, 721, 834-5
 Re-establishment credit, veterans eligible, 813
 Relocation to Prince Edward Island, 722
 Veterans hospitals and departmental homes, transfer of, 815
 Veterans housing assistance program, 813-14
 Veterans insurance benefits, 722
 Victoria Cross, sale of, 833, 856
 WVA/CWA applications, 813
See War veterans

Vietnam

Canadian policy respecting hostilities between China and Vietnam, 618, 646, 659, 734

Visitors

Baltic honorary consuls, 566
 Canadian-Italian Business and Professional Men's Association of Quebec delegation, 829
 Culliton, Hon. W.M., Chief Justice of Saskatchewan and Mrs. Culliton, 657

Visitors—concl'd

- Deschênes, Hon. Jules, Chief Justice of the Superior Court of Quebec, 682
- Royal Canadian Mounted Police officers, 796-7
- Smallwood, Hon. Joseph R., former Premier of Newfoundland, 657
- Spanish parliamentary delegation, 170

Votes (Recorded)

- Health Resources Fund bill C-2, 703, 709
- Suspension of Rules 44, 45 and 78, 406
- Unemployment Insurance bill C-14, 418, 423-4, 440, 445

Wagner, Hon. Claude

- Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 58-61
- Economic conditions and prospects, 59
- National and individual attitudes and outlook, 59-61
- National unity, 59-61
 - Media role, 60, 61; excerpts from speeches of Russian author in exile re power of journalists, 60-61

Walker, Hon. David, P.C.

- Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 90-96
- Canada Business Corporations bill S-5, 141
- Canada Non-Profit Corporations bill S-4, 151
- Economic conditions and prospects, 94, 95
 - Dollar devaluation, 95
 - Government expenditures, 94
 - GNP, 94
 - Strikes and man-days lost, 94
 - Taxes, loans, interest, 94
 - Unemployment, 94; unemployment insurance abuse, 95
- Foreign affairs
 - Sanctions against Rhodesia and South Africa, 382, 383, 493-4
- Judges (annuity to Hon. Mr. Justice Donald Raymond Morand) bill C-33, 387, 388, 389
- Just society, 92
- Labour
 - Strikes, government action in reduction of, 181, 203-04
- Liberal Party and cabinet members, 92-94
- Macnaughton, Hon. Alan A., P.C., 90-91
- National unity, 95
- Off-track betting, legalization of, 507
- Post Office, disruption in service, 88, 103, 118
 - Communists among Post Office union leaders, 88, 103, 118
- Regulations and other Statutory Instruments Committee
 - 4th report re import control list, amendment and general import permit No. 57, 667
- Senate
 - Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, questions re replacement for, 166
 - Tributes to parliamentarians and other persons of prominence, 90-91

War veterans

- Assistance to distressed or needy veterans, 812-13
- Canadian veterans outside Canada, 812
- Ceremonies to mark 35th anniversary of D-Day, 238, 363
- Domiciliary care for entitled veterans, 815-16
- Pension, Canadian Forces Long Service Pensioners' Association, 811-12
- Pensioners' training, 812
- Re-establishment credit, 813
- Remembrance Day
 - Newfoundland Post Office contravention of federal Holidays Act and Newfoundland Remembrance Day Act, 154, 172, 173
 - Tribute to Canada's War Dead and War Veterans, 170-1
- Veterans housing assistance program, 813-14
- Widows of veterans, pensions, 236-7, 351

West Germany

- Inter-Parliamentary Union Conference, Bonn, 167-9, 205-09, 338-9
- Trade, exports and imports, 720-1

Whips

- Chief Government Whip in the Senate, Hon. William J. Petten
- Chief Opposition Whip in the Senate, Hon. John M. Macdonald

Williams, Hon. Guy

- Energy Supplies Emergency bill C-42, 866
- Government Organization 1979 bill C-35, 758, 769
- Off-track betting, legalization of, 509
- Sinclair Commission, report on, 469-70, 503
 - Fish processing at sea, 503

Women, status of

- Action Committee of Women, 409
- Advisory Council on the Status of Women, 408-09
- Unemployment insurance maternity benefits, 11

Youths and students

- 1977-78 programs in effect, 894

Yukon Territory

- Shield of Arms of Yukon, presentation to the Senate, 361

Yuzyk, Hon. Paul

- North Atlantic Assembly, Twenty-fourth Annual Session, Lisbon, Portugal, 574-7, 578
 - Belgrade Conference, 575, 576, 577
 - Canadian Parliamentary Helsinki Group, 577
 - Freedom of press and information, 577
 - Helsinki Final Act, CSCE, 574, 575, 576
 - USSR defence budget, 575
 - Northwest Territories bill C-28, 753-4

